We hold a convention in McKenzie, Tenn., October or November, directly following the National meeting in St. Louis, and we want all who can to come back with us to McKenzie, where the good women propose to arouse old Tennessee by the mothers' solemn protest against the saloon, the fiercest foe of the home.

Our people in this part of the country are so afraid of the suffrage question that even a hint at it is received with contempt by women. The men are far more favorable to it, for they see it is all that can eventually destroy the whisky traffic and license system. Nothing will tend more to educate the women of America than organizing for action against the license system.

From the next campaign we will hold the balance of power in America by the nomination that has just taken place of St. John for President.

Our work is meeting success everywhere. Jenny B. Beauchamp of Texas, Mrs. Chapin of South Carolina, Mrs. Steel of Mississippi, Mrs. Cornelius of Arkansas, are all working. I have spoken twice a day for ten weeks in middle Tennessee, and after resting four days in Memphis, start again on a trip back to Nashville speaking every day until September.

THE STATE AND COUNTY FAIR.

Dear Union Signal:—Will you again allow me space in your columns to remind those who are interested in state and county fair work that the season is now upon us when the bulk of our work is to be done?

From the state superintendent of Pennsylvania comes a suggestion that is admirable. Being a farmer's wife, she knows a good deal about agricultural papers, and says that she is sure many farmers wives can be reached by sending temperance letters to the "home departments" of such papers. I have sent at her suggestion, a letter to the National Stockman and Farmer, which will issue sixty thousand extra copies for distribution at the fairs throughout the country. The agricultural papers of every state do this every year. Now, will not the superintendents of each state have such a letter in the "home department" of their own agricultura papers? If they are careful to have them inserted in this extra number for gratuitous distribution, they will be able to reach an immense number of people. Let some one in every state, and in every county see to it, that articles are inserted in all state and county papers, bearing upon the subject of temperance at fairs, and other holiday gatherings.

How many are trying to gather up a fund to buy literature for distribution at such places, and especially at the world's exposition at New Orleans?

How many are securing speakers to talk on temperance during the fair season?

How many will be present at the campaign rallies, as well as at the fairs, and every other place where people are met together for recreation, to distribute literature?

How many are trying to get all reports of such work done during the last year? Josephine R. Nichols,

THE TEMPERANCE SOUVENIR.

Dear Union Signal:—Will you kindly publish an extract from a letter which I have received, as it shows how earnestly all of our workers are striving to "help the National," and also the interest which the "Temperance Souvenir" is arousing, and oblige, yours truly,

Portland, Me. A. M. H.

Dear Mrs. Hunt:—I am fully convinced that your accident did not come to you by chance. I have thought of it many times since I have known what you were doing during those long weeks of confinement. I believe that God has a wise purpose in all of His dealing with His children, and however trying our afflictions, we may be sure that they are the very best thing for us at the time that they are sent, and are among the all things that work together for good to those who love Him. May He constantly bless you in all of your undertakings for Him. Be sure and let me know when the Temperance Souvenir is published, as I should be delighted to help dispose of them without compensation, so as to help the National as much as possible.

Yours in the work,

Manchester, N. H. J. C. Thompson.

BIDDY FLYNN'S REASON WHY.

MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

I.

"Hurrah for the Foorth av July!"
"But where," said the priest, "is the b'y,
Who can spake up and just tell me why,
Yez all shout for the Foorth of July?"

II.

Says Barney O'Rourke, "It's not me:"
"Me, nayther!" says Micky McGree.
"And it's not shpaking furst I would be."
But "Hurrah! all the same," thought all three.

III.

And so, up and down, through the class,
The priest, with his questions did pass,—
Till he came to a sweet little lass,
With a smile like the dew on the grass.

IV.

"Shpake up Biddy Flynn! not a b'y
Remimbers the rale rayson, why
We swing up the banners so high,
And cilibrate Foorth av July."

V.

"'Dade, Fayther;" said Biddy O'Flynn.
"It's because there's a battle to win,
And Ameriky's bound to begin
To drive out the whisky and gin.

VI.

"Me rayson, it may not be thrue;
But me taycher, she said 'it would do';
Whin she asked all us gurrls if we knew;—
And me mother agrade wid me too.

VII.

"The ould counthry owned us one day,
But we licked! And we drove thim away
Wid the band Yankee Doodle to play—
And the flags all a flyin' so gay.

IX.

"But new masthers wint for us, thin,
They licked,—bastely whisky and gin!
Thrue fradom can niver begin,
Till we bate em"—says Biddy O'Flynn.

X.

Says Barney O'Rourke, "thrue for you!"
Says Micky McGree, faith, it's thrue!"
Says I, "When it comes I'm the b'y
To hurrah for that Foorth of July."

A MOTHER'S LESSON.

It was a warm spring morning. Mrs. Brooks, in regular dusting trim, had just completed the sweeping and dusting, which duty the sickness of a servant devolved upon her. Before removing her mitts and dusting cap she stepped to the side parlor window to breathe for a few minutes the fresh air and inhale the fragrance of a thriving honeysuckle which clambered around the window. As she stood there silently, enjoying the fresh air, and observing the many flowers and plants that surrounded her beautiful suburban home, she heard the voices of her two children in the thickly embowered arbor only a few feet distant. Her face became more and more sober and thoughtful as she listened; for she was a mother who sought carefully to train correctly in the principles of self denial and Christian benevolence her children, Tom aged ten and Lillie six.

"I must get a new pair of shoes for Florinda," said Lillie, placing a dainty hat on Florinda's head and holding her up at arm's length.

Tom was sitting opposite his sister with his hat on and holding a base ball bat across his lap, evidently resting.

"Florinda would look lovely with one of those little Japanese parasols," pursued Lillie, "and I think, with my fifty cents, I can just about buy one, and the shoes and—a little candy. Of course Uncle Hal wants us to get a little candy when he gives us money. If I have any left, Florinda needs—"

"Oh, bother Florinda," broke in Tom, rather rudely, "I'm going to have a base ball."

"Why, Tom Brooks," cried Lillie, "you said the next money you had was going to the missionaries."

"Well it isn't, then! not when my uncle gives me an extra present of fifty cents to do what I please with! Besides, if you're so interested, why don't you give some to the missionaries?"

"Well, I would if Florinda wasn't so destifoot (she meant destitute). "She has enough to keep her warm, but she ought to have fresh pretty things like other dolls. Besides, I want a little fun all to myself with my money. Oh, dear, I wish the missionaries would all die, and then they'd be off my mind!"

"Much they're on your mind!" growled Tom, as he went out to get his base ball.

Lillie, remembering that Maggie Miller, next door, knew the price of Japanese parasols, seized her hat and tripped across the yard and out the front gate.

Mrs. Brooks then removed her cap and mtits, bathed her face and hands, and then she sat down by her escritoire and wrote a note, which she dispatched by a servant. At dinner time the children came in hungry and noisy, and somehow they seemed a trifle less bright than usual.

"What's the matter with the little folks?" she asked.

"Oh, I dunno, it's hot," complained Tom.

"I think Maggie Miller is real mean," said Lillie, "she won't tell me how much her doll's Japanese parasol cost, for fear I'll get one just like it!"

They sat down to dinner, but the mother's looks and tones were not as cheery as usual. As they were leaving the table, a note was handed to Mrs. Brooks.

"What is that, mamma? Who wrote it? What does it say?" clamored the children.

"Aunt Lilly will send the carriage in half an hour for me to take a drive."

"Oh, that's splendid—and we can go down to Sander's for my doll's shoes, and—"

"I think I shall not take you," said their mother, absent mindedly.

"Won't take us? Why? Won't there be room?"

Mrs. Brooks apparently did not notice this cry of distress. She was giving an order to the servant, and slowly mounting the stairs to get ready.

"But, mamma, arn't you really goin' to take us?" roared Tom.

"N-n-o, I thing not this afternoon," said their mother, getting out her bonnet and shawl.

"But why? Isn't there room?"

"Room?" Their mother looked as if she was thinking of something else. "Oh, yes, the whole carriage."

"Then, why can't we go?" said Lillie, "is some one els going?"

Tom turned to the window and whistled to hide a little twitching about the mouth.

"No, there is no one else going," said Mrs. Brooks, "but I thought I would like all the carriage to myself to-day. It would give me more room, and you and Tom would be off my mind."

"But, mamma, we are your own children, and you never have us off your mind." Lillie's voice quiver d now.

"Don't I? Well perhaps I should have more fun if I did. Ought I not have some fun all to myself when somebody makes me the present of th carriage for the afternoon?" And to the children's great amazement, their gentle, loving mother seated herself in the large carriage, and drove away all alone.

Wistful looks followed Mrs. Brooks from the front gate, as she rode down the street, but she did not turn back. She was having fun.

After awhile the temporary orphans returned to the house and silence fell upon them. Tom broke it first.

"Lil!"

"What?"

"Guess mamma heard what we said about missionaries this morning."

"Did she mean that?" said Lillie, light breaking in upon her.

"Looks like it."

"Well, I don't care; it's too mean if we have to give our money to those bothering missionaries!"

"Needn't give all—might put a few cents in the mite box."

"Yes; and always be thinkin' about it, and spoi our fun!"

"Oh, no; we can have our fun, so can mamma," said Tom. "Seems to me, we have a good deal of things to spare, but we want them all to ourselves, just as mamma wanted all the seats in the carriage." This was a long sermon for Tom, and, for fear Lillie should turn it upon him in some way, he rose and left the room. He at down quietly, and whittled under the apple-tree. Lillie dressed her doll.

The long summer afternoon wore away, and the children spent most of their time in the yard. Tom went away for a little while, but came back quickly. They did not seem to want company. For once in their lives they were thinking. At last, Mrs. Brooks returned. But was it not strange that these three, who had each been having fun in their own way, looked unhappy and dissatisfied? In the twilight hour the children nestled close to their mother, and Tom, as usual, when there was anyt ing to say, spoke first: "I took my ball back to Hamlin's, and got just as good a one for fifty cents."

"And what will you do with the ten cents?" asked mamma, as she pressed the small brown hand.

"Put it in the mite box. And, mamma, I'm bound not to forget that mite box again!"

"I think Florinda's complexion is spoiled already, so she wouldn't need that parasol, except for the style of the thing. At any rate she must wait and be satisfied now with the new shoes," said Lillie.

"And the price of the parasol—what will become of it?"

"It will go into my mite box?"

"But will you be having fun?"

"Oh, mamma, don't! It wasn't any fun at all."

"When we three ride together," said mamma, speaking to herself, "Tom steps on my toes, and Lillie sits on my dress, but I have fun if I do have to pay for it. There was no fun today."

After that followed a long, blessed talk, and the children promised to say over each night a motto their mother placed in their rooms the next day: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." And 'happy' was the biggest word in the whole motto, Tom told Lillie.—Kind Words.

BUTLER, July 28, 1884.

DEAR PUZZLE EDITOR:—Enclosed find a puzzle which I offer in competition for THE UNION SIGNAL prize:

My whole is a proverb and is composed of 43 letters.
My 32, 25, 10, 29, 37, 13, 6 is the name of a novel.
My 26, 27, 42, 38, 7, 13, 26, 16 is the name of a state.
My 1, 2, 2, 14, 10, 38, 40, 17 is to set a value on.
My 31, 4, 16, 22 is to silence.
My 40, 18, 42, 43, 32, 16, 37 is to be stingy.
My 3, 4, 30, 33, 15, 3 is part of a ship.
My 39, 41, 28, 35 is a kind of food.
My 5, 34, 28, 12 is not to perceive sounds.
My 8, 20, 3, 24, 28, 19 is to menace.
My 36, 23, 9, 2 is a plant.
My 2, 21, 11 is a kind of inclosure.

166. AMPUTATIONS.

Behead all and leave a cavity.
Syncopate to peruse, and leave a color.
Behead to close, and leave a cabin.
Syncopate to avoid, and leave a luminary.
Syncopate clear and leave a plot.
Syncopate a projection, and leave a covering for the head.
Behead ill-looking, and leave the edge.
Curtail purchased, and leave a branch.
Syncopate damp, and leave a fog.
The amputated letters form the name of an important United States city.

167. CHARADE.

My first is a crease or a fold;
My second's a fastening secure;
My whole is a forest tree bold;
Firm-rooted, and strong to endure.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Captain Deborah is glad to see that the hint of her last letter has been taken, "Verbum sat sapienti." See if you can find out what that means and how it applies. Here is a letter from one of our Bands that does my heart good, especially that word about the triple pledge:

STILLMAN VALLEY, Ill., July 25, 1884.

DEAR CAPTAIN DEBORAH:—As our Band wishes to make the acquaintance of other Bands of Hope we thought that writing a letter would be a good way to do so. Our Band was organized April 29, 1883. The number enrolled at our organization was thirty. The number now is sixty-nine. We have two pledges, the single and triple. The number taking the triple pledge is forty-nine and increasing every meeting. We have interesting exercises, consisting of readings, recitations and singing. We sing from the Ripples of Song. We also have experiments and blackboard exercises.

The Band of Hope meets the third Sunday afternoon in each month. Although we have no saloons in this place we think it necessary to work for the temperance cause.

At our last meeting we had two of your letters to the "Children of the Prevention Army" read. Hoping you will write many more letters to that same Army, I remain yours faithfully, ALICE L. WHITE.

Next week I shall have a new thought to give you, a "merry thought," in some way connected with a merry Christmas. Watch for it. CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

FIRST AND LAST.

DELLE M. MASON.

LEAVING HOME.

Come and walk with me Mary, before the sun has set.
Tho' tomorrow is my wedding day we are not parted yet.
I want to walk thro' all the paths I may not tread again,
And the joy that thrills within my heart is strangely blent with pain.

Let us go thro' the orchard into the woods beyond,
Where we found the patch of wintergreens close to the little pond
Where, on the shining surface, the water lilies bloom,
Making the faint air tremble with their subtle, sweet perfume.

Here they are, their pure white petals and golden hearts aglow
With strange, wild, spicy sweetness; I have always loved them so.
We must part, oh! lovely flowers, I must leave you, but I go
To meet a happier future than your pulseless hearts can know.

Here is the old oak tree, where oft we sat beneath the shade,
And here's the little brook where we happy children played.
Do you remember, Mary, how wet we got, the day
We tried to wash our two pet lambs? and then they ran away.

We can't be always children, and life is not all sport.
Here we are, grown up women, and yet, the time seems short.
We have loved each other, Mary, thro' all the happy years.
But tomorrow is my wedding day, and your cheek is stained with tears.

My heart is full and tender as I think of all I leave,
But my future shines so fair before me that I cannot grieve.
I have no tears to shed, Mary, tho' it is sad to part,
My happiness is safe with him, who shrines me in his heart.

RETURNING HOME.

Let us walk slower, Mary, let me lean upon your arm,
It seems so good to be at home and see the dear old farm.
I remember when we walked here last, before I went away,
You were so kind to bring me home, Mary, so kind to let me stay.

Since I left you, Mary, a young and happy wife,
I've drank the dregs of sorrow, till I wearied of my life.
I could bear the sting of poverty, and sickness, and disgrace,
But my poor heart broke with longing to look upon your face.

At first my life was lighted by my husband's love alone.
Like a pleasant path before me, the sunny future shone.
And ere I wakened from my dream to find my life less sweet,
The sacred mother-love crept in and made my joy complete.

I trembled lest my happiness might be too great to last.
And when my sweet child moaned and died, my bitter tears fell fast.
But I lived to be the saddest thing that creeps along thro' life
Shivering with shame and terror, a brutal drunkard's wife.

Hush! do not curse him, Mary, my poor heart loves him still,
Tho' he drove me out into the storm when I was weak and ill.
'Twas the drink that turned him demon. I have heard him weep and moan
When the cruel frenzy left him, and he thought himself alone.

And if you see him, Mary, if he comes when I am dead,
Tell him I loved and prayed for him, the last words that I said.
Tell him my heart was homesick for my little child in heaven,
And if he shuns the cursed cup he yet may be forgiven.
I am very tired, Mary, and your cheek is stained with tears.
We must part, but I am happier than I have been for years.
Who knows but God may save him yet, and lead him to that rest
Where I shall spring to meet him with my baby on my breast.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY.*

MARY E. C. WYETH.

Responsibility implies accountability, and accountability presupposes judgment. From the hour when the Decalogue from the finger of God himself, was given to the world from Mt. Sinai, to the day when the Savior of the world summed up that law in the broad command "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy soul and all thy mind and all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself," and on to the present moment there has never been a day when any soul of all humanity has been free of solemn and sacred responsibility.

Responsible and therefore accountable to God the Judge of all are we for our own actions as regards our own souls and our relations to God our Creator, and responsible and therefore accountable for our acts as concerning our neighbor.

Life consists of being and doing. All religion has relation to life, and the life of religion is to be good and do good. Ethics, the science which treats of moral law, teaches us that the greatest good to the greatest number is assured in proportion as the number increases of the individuals who aim to measure their conduct by the Golden Rule. The same philosophy teaches that the moral quality of the action resides in the intention. The history of humanity has proven the incontrovertibility of these truths.

To love God supremely and our neighbor unselfishly, then from the highest motive, the love of virtue for its own sake, insures the greatest amount of happiness to mankind, and consequently of glory to God. In a word, as a very orthodox word, to live thus fulfills the chief end of man.

An end presupposes an aim. The stream never rises above its source, the arrow never flies higher than the point toward which it is aimed. The aim limits if it does not determine the end. The motive characterizes the action. How important to have high aims and pure motives.

Herbert Spencer says: "There is no political alchemy by which you can get golden conduct out of leaden instincts." Thank God there is a moral alchemy by which the leaden instincts may be transfused and sublimated.

Education is defined as "that series of instruction and discipline which is intended to enlighten the understanding, correct the temper and form the habits of youth." Its object is to fit for usefulness.

One who has thought much and well on this subject, Mr. Fitz, president of the Boston Board of Trade, says: "In educating for a business life the aim should be to produce the very best specimens of the class, highminded, sagacious, prudent men, whose names shall stand as synonyms of integrity and enterprise, and whose influence upon society shall be always elevating."

The men who love God supremely and their neighbors as themselves, are of that sort. Their influence upon society is always elevating. Some of them have lately passed away, leaving a shining light to track their way through life. Amos Lawrence, whose motto, written on the inside of his pocket book was, "Character before wealth," Cyrus McCormick, Wm. E. Dodge, who feared God and kept His commandments in the face of ridicule and opposition and criticism, who largely contributed to the temperance cause, and whose radical total abstinence views made him singular among worldly men, who refused to listen to the suggestion that the needs of modern civilization demand the violation of the Fourth Commandment, and withdrew from the railroad corporation the moment it decided to run its trains on the Sabbath day.

He need not be ashamed who falls in line with such men as these. They all began life at the bottom of the ladder, and all attained to a grand success in life. Being dead, they yet speak to the living in glorious words, "Love virtue," they say, "for its own sake. Keep your aims sublime. Walk humbly before God, the Judge of all."

Upon every member and friend of this temperance union rests a responsibility. In every association, however small, for the purpose of cultivation in any direction, there are two elements, the didactic and the docile, there are two classes of individuals, those who lead and those who follow. The responsibility of each class is equal in measure, though not in kind. The duty of the leader is to discern between good and evil, and to guide by wise methods into the straight and narrow path, following which no life was ever lost. The duty of the follower is to improve the present opportunity to his own mental and moral enrichment, in order that he may best serve his day and generation.

To the educators in this society, I would say, "You are doing a service to your kind when you by word or look or precept, inspire one soul with an ambition to respect himself, to be respected by his neighbor, to make the most of his opportunities for culture, for general improvement, for usefulness. You are responsible to God for any neglect of opportunity thus to inspire.

To the learners, and which of us is not in some sense a learner?—I have to say' "The time is short," "Nox yap epketar." The night cometh. This day, this hour, is yours. One day at a time, we live our lives. Our sphere is in ourselves. Live well today. God will take care of tomorrow. Care less for percents, more for heart culture, Resist the beginnings of evil. The world needs good men more than it needs anything else. Let your aim be to give the world better men. Resolve to be good yourselves and presently, all unconsciously it may be, your influence will be felt and you will be doing good.

What has all this to do with temperance? The underlying principle of every temperance society or effort of total abstinence, W. C. T. U., and political prohibition, is the Golden Rule. The moral quality of every action tending to suppress the consumption and production of alcoholic stimulants is found in the benevolent intention. Dealers and consumers may decry it, but they cannot deny it.

Our union's aim is to keep ourselves unspotted from the world of immorality, that we may be instruments of grace to all those toward whom our influence may extend. In this conflict between home and the saloon, there is no patriot or philanthropist who can afford to take sides with the enemy and destroyer of home. If the influences that have been at work during the past half year in this society, have been such as shall help to mould and shape character that is based upon righteous principles, to cultivate the hearts and consciences, and to properly direct the energies of the young people constituting the majority of the membership, that their growing powers may be used in combat with all forms of evil, and for the advancement of humanity's best good, the uplifting of the fallen, the strengthening of the weak, and the encouragement of the struggling, the sure result will be most gratifying to all its friends, among the sincerest of whom, be assured is its retiring president.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Aug. 17.] Third Quarter, No. 7. [1884.

TOPIC; ABSALOM'S DEATH.

LESSON TEXT.—II. Samuel 18:24-33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whoso curseth father or mother let him die the death. Mark 7:10.

TIME.—B. C. 1023.

PLACE.—Mahanaim, east of Jordan.

1. Victory makes us forget God sometimes, but David with all his lapses from God's perfect law, seems never to forget the Friend who gives him victory. Even the messenger falls at his feet with blessings to God as the real conqueror.

2. Kingship can never eclipse fatherhood. The heart of David, full of joy at the conquest of rebellion, turns anxiously to the rebellious leader, who is his son. He would have him thwarted in his evil purpose, punished by defeat, but spared to learn to do wisely and to act a prince's part in the kingdom.

Is not this God's attitude toward the sinner? He has no pleasure in the death of the wicked.

3. David's question, "Is the young man safe?" and its underlying anxiety should have been the thought of years before. Absalom had not been safe for years. He had been a prince in a corrupt court, made corrupt by his father's sin. David had thought upon his own pleasures, often unlawful ones at that, and had neglected the training of his sons. No work, be it that of a kingdom or a humble lot, can ever safely engross the lives of a father or mother. Children are a heritage of the Lord, and He will require at their hands its cultivation and improvement. Too often fathers awaken like David to cry "Is the young man safe?" when the work of destruction is done and the opportunity for salvation is past.

4. The avenging of God is sure. David as king as well as father had neglected justice. He had winked at crime. Amnon and Absalom were both unpunished criminals. David ignored their sin. One pays the forfeit of his life and the other goes on to traitorous deeds which bring him to his end. David's heart is wrung with sorrow, but his punishment is just, and grows out of his love which however had not been forceful in the direction of true fatherly and kingly training. Humanity is precious in God's sight. Each child is His care and a wrong done to the weakest is speedily avenged by Him who is withal "slow to anger and of great mercy."

5. Beauty, natural graces and splendid abilities do not supply the want of principle. This lack is fatal to character, and character determines destiny in both worlds. Absalom's misused endowments are but weights that drag his name down to infamy.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR BOYS AND GIRLS?

Just at this season mothers and fathers are casting about in search of good schools for their children. Many of them desire to place these young people in an atmosphere favorable to the growth of temperance principles, and seek for schools where the officers and teachers are known for their fearless advocacy of these principles. There is much wisdom in this. Children and young people absorb by a sort of intellectual and moral grazing, the culture of their surroundings, and the disposition of an institution toward great reforms is surely and indelibly stamped upon its pupils.

In this view of a matter so near to the hearts of many readers we are glad to note the attitude of several leading colleges, and would be glad of favorable data from reliable sources regarding other schools, east and west.

The president of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., is the Rev. Joseph Cummings, D. D. L. L. D., whose name is synonymous with a zealous advocacy of the temperance reform in both Massachusetts and Connecticut. In the latter state he was at one time a candidate for governor on the prohibition ticket. The seat of the University is a prohibition town.

Monmouth College, at Monmouth, Ill., is officered by stalwart temperance men, of that vigorous type which is produced by no religious denomination more certainly than the United Presbyterian, of which this institution is representative. Monmouth also has no saloons.

Hillsdale College, Michigan, of the Free Baptist church, is the home of a strong temperance sentiment. When our national president was there recently, the students were convened for a special address. President Durgin, Rev. Dr. Ransom Dunn and the gifted young professor of natural sciences, D. W. Fisk, are pronounced temperance advocates, as indeed are the entire faculty, but these are specially named as speakers.

At Indiana Asbury University (now De Pauw) the morning chapel hour was given to the Indiana W. C. T. U. at its annual convention a year ago, and to Miss Willard on a recent visit. President Martin and Professor Ridpath, the well known historian, presiding on the two occasions. Dr. Martin stated on the former of these that his office table was never without temperance literature for the use of students.

The State University of Indiana at Bloomington, Rev. Dr. Lemuel Moss, president, was not less cordial in its welcome of our national officers while the Quaker College at Richmond (Earlham College) gathered the students in special temperance conclave. That such opportunity to reach young minds and future voters is improved by these educators, speaks louder than words their regard for the cause.

Wisconsin University at Madison, Wis., is presided over by one of the truest of temperance philanthropists and philosophers, the Rev. Dr. Bascom, whose bold position on the temperance question has made him the object of political attack.

Wellesley College, Massachusetts, under Miss Alice Freeman is strongly impregnated with W. C. T. U. influences, A young woman's society flourishes there, and Miss Freeman with all her other rare gifts is known among us as the worthy daughter of a W. C. T. U. district president.

The Military school at Chester, Pa., has been already noticed in these columns, as taking, through its president, Col. Hyatt, right position relative to the use of wines at its pleasure banquets.

Iowa College, at Grinnell, has been known under Dr. Magoun's presidency as a place of concentrated prohibition power, a reputation which will be sustained we doubt not under his successor.

Kirkwood Seminary, near St. Louis, is a true temperance home for young ladies, founded and maintained by one of our staunch W. C. T. U. workers, Mrs. Anna Snead Cairnes, who makes the school a practical educator in morals as well as manners.

These are but a few of the many schools which are recognizing the drift of demand, and are meeting it on grounds of principle as well as policy. We regret that we have not a large and accurate knowledge of all, and solicit testimony which shall be freely furnished to our patrons as received.

THE PLATFORM OF THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

On our 12th page this document appears in full. Last week we were able to glance at it merely—by no means to dismiss it. In referring to its cumbersome phrasing there was no intent to do it dishonor, but to acknowledge our own errors is the first step toward mending them. It would have been ungracious but wise had the Convention insisted upon its remodelling "on the spot," but it is no mean fault to desire to be gracious, and one that the Prohibition party can afford to indulge now, if ever.

Denuded of its verbiage we find the platform declares as follows:

1. For the acknowledgment of Almighty God as Supreme Ruler in human affairs.
2. The arraignment of the liquor traffic as the chief source of national vice, crime, poverty and misery.
3. Indictment of the Republican party as insensible to these evils though continually importuned, and nominating the two men of the nation who have publicly proposed to make the liquor traffic an institution of the land.
4. Charging the Democratic party with positive opposition to all legislation prohibitory of the evil.
5. Favoring a tariff for revenue, but so adjusted to commodities as to favor home industries.
6. For the appropriation of the public lands to settlers, not to corporations.
7. For the grateful support of our soldiers and sailors.
8. Protesting against the restriction of immigration.
9. Declaring that all these matters, while important, are dwarfed by the liquor traffic, which yearly costs the nation $800,000,000.
10. Calling upon Congress to suppress this traffic in he District, in the territories, and in all other places under federal jurisdiction.

11. Demanding that no state shall hereafter be admitted to the union without a constitutional exclusion of both dram selling and polygamy.

12. Thanking the women of the country, especially the W. C. T. U., for their noble service in the cause.

13. Endorsing woman suffrage, both as a right and as a powerful aid to the suppression of intemperance.

14. Thanking God for the constant progress of the reform and appealing to the voters of the country to sustain prohibition.

Viewed as a whole it is a New Testament platform. There is not a thought in its paragraphs that is inconsistent with the Golden Rule. It begins and ends with that acknowledgment of God with which He has coupled the promise of Divine direction, and is permeated throughout with the spirit of Him who came to seek and to save.

The following is the "twice told tale" of a worker's sorrow and disappointment over the defeat of a cherished temperance measure this time, a bill to introduce scientific temperance instruction in the schools supported by the taxes of men and women, mothers as well as fathers.

I am so heartsick and disappointed that I scarcely feel like writing to you. From all I can learn our bill has been defeated, "stabbed to the heart," as a friend remarked. God help these legislators. They are writing their names in very unenviable characters. All that is for the true welfare and good of fellowman, seems to incur their hatred and is trampled under foot with contumely. I am heartsick and disappointed, but not discouraged. I tried so hard, underwent so much that was difficult to do and unpleasant to endure, and I have failed this time. But I will keep at work. The question has been well agitated, public interest aroused, and when we try again we will be more experienced, and better armed and equipped."

And yet we are told that a new party is not a necessity.

Fifty Chinamen met in New York city one night last week to protest against the election of "the arch-republican politician, Mr. Blaine," as he was called by one Wong Chin Foo, and against American politics as at present operated. He further says

You must remember that the politician who lords it over you today is an arrant coward, and trims his sails to every breeze that blows. When you don't vote and don't wish to vote he denounces you as a reptile; the moment you appear at the ballot box you are a man and a brother, and are treated (if you consort with such people) to cigars, whiskies, and beers. Why can't we make our mark in politics as well as any of our brother races? Why can't we become good and substantial citizens like those from England, Ireland, Germany, and other European and Asiatic and even African countries? We had our diplomats, nay philosophers and sages, when those about us were half-naked savages, and they are yet but in their infancy in point of true civilization compared with the peaceful, industrious, and conscientious sons of the Middle Kingdom. I do not understand American politics enough to give you a scientific lecture just at the present moment, but I will say this of the three great political parties now contending for power. The Republicans have been in power for more than twenty years, and they have during that time rallied into their ranks some of the ablest men in American politics. Tney were supposed to represent the true principles of a republican form of government, of which this country has been so pre-eminently distinguished before the eyes of all civilized nations. Under this impression countless thousands of well meaning and respectable people were led to support them. It is needless for me to say how much in this regard the people at large are disappointed. It was under this administration that our own race was ostracized. It was under this administration that our fellow-countrymen are for ten years forbidden upon a free and republican shore. There are but a few instances of their bad faith to those who supported them to preserve the honor and dignity of the glorious constitution of the United States. The Lemocrats are robbers and thieves, who will plunder and rob the United States treasury worse than any of our late bank presidents have done. When they have once got into power, then look out. Every citizen will have to go about then armed to the teeth for self-protection. New York city is an example what they will do.

This Chinaman will certainly have to "take to de woods."

It was a disappointment to miss Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin from the great demonstration at Pittsburgh. As a member of the national committee she greatly desired to be present in the convention, but stayed at home to address the South Carolina Educational association in the interest of the scientific temperance instruction bill which is expected to pass next winter.

Col. Bain was also absent perforce. He is quick to endorse St. John, of whom he says:

If he (St. John) is noted for one thing more than another it is for his moral courage, and that he never betrayed a trust or compromised a principle he espoused.

The other day in a lecture at Ocean Grove, in the presence of such men as Roscoe Conkling and other prominent politicians, these were some of Col. Bain's strong utterances:

A reform looking to the moral progress of the people is above every other reform touching American politics. To raise the country's revenue from the liquor traffic is to feed the nation's finances at a cost of its morality.

He paid a tribute to the resources of the country, but said:

These are ours, not to squander, but improve; and hand over as a blessing to the generation to follow us. This we are not doing by sending through heredity the taste for alcoholic liquor, with legalized temptations to curse coming generations at the dawning of life.

W. C. T. U. mothers are proud and happy ones very often. At least I am sure Mrs. Georgia H. McLeod was one on graduation day in the high school of Baltimore, when "Daisy" bore off the valedictory honors with such grace and winsome power.

It is not too late I hope to tell of a special feature of the Michigan state meeting, and to hint to other conventions a "likewise" performance. This was the interspersion of several recitations in the regular order of business which proved great enliveners. One by little "Muff" Nelson on "Boorioboola Gha" and "Rock of Ages," both recitation and song by Miss Lovell, touched all hearts.

It may indeed be too late for the wide awake journalist to recount these items of interest when here comes fresh and inviting by the morning's mail, Michigan's annual report, a veritable "tome" for size and information. The minutes, reports and president's address are given entire, making a very readable document.

Miss Frank Jones, the faithful Y. W. C. T. U. worker of this city, after a year of illness, is to be again at her post this fall, whereat the various "missions" which she so successfully inspires, begin to look up, for their triumph cometh.

Mrs. Ada C. Bowles and the good people of Pittsfield, Minn., have been so charmed with each other that she has spent several weeks of this summer among them, speaking on scientific temperance instruction and other temperance topics.

Mrs. Frances L. Swift, besides presiding over the W. C. T. U. of the Keystone state with its 50,000 square miles of territory, is a member of the State Board of Charities, president of several local benevolent societies, and shares with her husband the parish duties of a large Presbyterian church in Allegheny City, of which Dr. Swift's father was pastor before him.

And besides all this took bravely upon herself the care of providing entertainment for all the W. C. T. U. delegates to the Pittsburgh convention.

And moreover, entertained a large number of them in her own elastic household, giving them meals at times to suit the humor of that whimsical body which could vote down adjournment at all sorts of hours.

Picking up the threads of home work again comes Mrs. J. Ellen Foster from the Pacific, rejoiced to find on every hand, in her beloved home state, the closed saloon, the fleeing brewery and the smokeless distillery.

Miss Mary Smith's account of the W. C. T. U. convention in Yellowstone Park shows how Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and family have been able to turn the business of pleasure seeking into the pleasure of W. C. T. U. business.

So too I learn does Mrs. Rose Patten, superintendent of Y. W. C. T. U. Work in Pennsylvania, as she takes her summer walks abroad, journey by way of the numerous Y. W. C. T. unions which she has organized or inspired, giving the word of comfort or command.

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry has a new lecture, considered by good judges unexcelled by anything she has yet done. She will give this lecture from time to time and will make a line of engagements from Rockford to St. Louis, at the time of the National Convention, Miss Hood answering all calls for her services.

At the Inter State Conference of W. C. T. U. held at Mountain Lake Park, Md., July 28, the people declared for St. John and Daniel. Mrs. J. C. Johnson, of West Virginia, was president, and Mrs. S. D. La Fetra secretary.

The W. C. T. U. of Ash Grove, Mo., have established a reading room for young men, and have secured a good list of newspapers which makes the place more attractive than any saloon or gambling club in that section of the country.

The Denver W. C. T. U. have been at work as usual, and are assigned the same room at the Denver Exposition that was used last year by the state union, and mirabile dictu, a special premium is offered by the Exposition management for the best paper on the subject of temperance, written by any pupil of the public schools in the state. The premium is a city lot valued at one hundred dollars.

Another of the delightful changes upon which the W. C. T. U. heart is everywhere and always intent has been wrought by the W. C. T. U. of Stockton, N. J., which will hereafter occupy the Shooting Gallery on Sabbath afternoons, taking sure aim and making good gospel shots.

A delegation from the W. C. T. U. of Winona, Minn., recently visited the city council with a petition signed by 1200 ladies and 800 gentlemen asking that the law forbidding the sale of liquor on Sabbath and to minors and confirmed drunkards be enforced. After a heated debate a motion to the effect that the marshal and policemen be instructed to enforce the ordinance was carried, Mayor Ludwig alone voting in the negative.

Mrs. General Bidwell, of Chico, Cal., is doing a wonderful work in the older towns in Butte county. The coffee houses, text books, etc., in her part of the state are well looked after. She is also devoting much of her own time to the teaching of Indian men and women, her husband having erected a school house upon their ranch, where they can drive each day and supervise the work, all of which is carried on at their own expense.

Miss Mary Allen West has visited during one recent week three Illinois teachers' conventions in the interest of scientific temperance instruction. Her words have the weight of long experience in educational as well as temperance work, and sink deep I judge, from the rise of sentiment favorable to the new education and fortification.

On Duty.

News from the Field.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston.—You will be interested to know how our W. C. T. U. celebrated July 4, on Boston Common. This being our third celebration of the kind, we entered upon the work of preparation with the confidence of those whose success is assured. We retired on the night of July 3, haunted by scorching memories of last year's experiences, but, as the day was ushered in with the patriotic confusion so dear to Young America, we found the fierce heat of the sun tempered by the most refreshing of ocean breezes.

Our calendar gave as the sentiment of the day, and as a whole temperance lecture in itself, this line from Horace: "Who then is free? The wise man who can govern himself."

Have you ever seen Boston Common upon a 4th of July morning? If so I need not waste words in describing the crowds of eager people, the innumerable stands where hungry and thirsty humanity may regale itself for a consideration, the shows of every variety, the preparations for bicycle race, for balloon ascension, and fireworks.

We thread our way to a tent bearing a very familiar name in large letters, and extending a cordial temperance invitation to all. At 10 o'clock a. m. we find everything in readiness, and a band calling together the eager pleasure seekers with patriotic airs, and the familiar strains of gospel hymns. In the rear of the main tent we find some of our most earnest women, preparing a lunch to be served at noon to the workers, and to a large company of intemperate and reformed men, to whom tickets have been previously given.

The praise service of fifteen minutes ended, the chairman makes brief remarks and then introduces the principal speaker of the hour. He occupies fifteen minutes with earnest, ringing words, that have no uncertain sound. Then he gives place to a band of children, whose fresh young voices in temperance songs and recitations, move all hearts. The hour closes with testimony from redeemed men, who have been lost in sin and shame, like some of these poor fellows in the audience, but who now stand as living monuments that "Jesus Christ is able to save to the uttermost."

And now the chairman changes, the band strikes up again, and another hour has begun. So the time goes on without interruption, except for the lunch at noon. Business men give an hour of their holiday to preside. Clergymen bring their best thoughts for the addresses, children and older people enliven the hours with recitation and song, and redeemed men throw all their gratitude for their own salvation into their appeals to others to come and be saved also. A pledge committee, with books, cards and pencils in hand, work busily all day in the crowd that throng about the tent, but can find no room beneath it,—obtaining a large number of signatures and having opportunity for much personal conversation; one young man tells a member of this committee that he signed the pledge at our meeting a year ago, and has saved two hundred and fifty dollars that would otherwise have gone for rum. Hundreds of pages of appropriate literature are distributed and eagerly received.

At 5 p. m. the tent is hastily taken down, and our meeting is a thing of the past. The workers wend their way homeward, with wearied bodies, but with hearts lifted in prayer for God's blessing upon the seed sown. Thankful words. Mrs. H. G. Rice.

The Massachusetts Women's Christian Prohibitory League at a regular monthly meeting in the Baptist Bethel, Boston, on July 17, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we express to H. H. Faxon, Esq., and the Massachusetts Reform Club, sincere thanks for their condemnation-shaped into resolutions at the convention held on the 15th inst., of the Republican as well as the Democratic party for turning a deaf ear to all appeals for an expression of disapproval of the drink traffic and every system of fostering and protecting it.

Resolved, That we send to Miss Frances Willard and her National W. C. T. U. helpers a thankful "God bless you" for the carrying into the presidential conventions the prohibition memorial and appeal, and thus demonstrating to the public that no hopes can consistently be entertained that the great political parties will come to the protection of our homes from the terrible ravages of the drink crime.

Resolved, That the time has fully come when the temperance women of the country should declare in unmistakable terms that they stand with Miss Willard as a unit for prohibition, whereby American voters will have no doubt for what great "issue" the petitions of a large class go up to the ear of "Our Father in heaven."

The Massachusetts Women's Christian Prohibitory League and the state central committee of the Prohibitory Reform party of this state have voted to canvass the commonwealth for signatures to the "Voter's Pledge" prepared by the N. W. C. T. U. Sisters of the United States, pray for Massachusetts! No state in the union more needs "help from on high." The prohibition women of the Bay State have been given signal answers to prayer, but oh, there is more to follow, for "the enemy" has come "in like a flood" and we pray that "the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." Let every woman who reads this paragraph, and has any love for the Old Bay State, join with us at the twilight hour in this petition. M. O. S.

TEXAS.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE UNIONS FROM THE PRESIDENT.

I take this method of conferring with you in regard to the state work. Some of our unions are enjoying a good degree of prosperity; some are simply existing, and some are in the agonies of dissolution. Our present affliction is poverty. It is said "the liberal soul shall be made fat." While we devise liberal things yet the people's indifference is a stubborn fact, and more than a match for our theories.

In the popular estimate the W. C. T. U. is as yet an experiment. It is hazardous to risk much on it. Let us look this question of finance squarely in the face, for our very existence is threatened. We have eleven state superintendents of as many departments of work. Each one is as yet footing the bills of her own work. This ought not to be; indeed, some cannot work on account of it. All I ask is my expenses but I am continually trenching upon my private purse. In the meantime avenues of usefulness are opening before us but cannot be entered for want of means.

I ask the unions in the first place, to be sure your treasurer is a prompt business woman. If she is not, prudently make a change. If there are members who have not paid membership fee, give their names to the vice presidents of their respective churches for collection. Arrange for voluntary contributions once a month. This is not obligatory, but some will accede to it. Call for contributions at your gospel temperance meetings. A few churches will regularly contribute to your fund as a plan of Christian benevolence. Appoint committees to present to them your objects of work and your needs.

Entertainments will be necessary occasionally, but let us give preference to literary entertainments, such as, concerts, tableaux, and readings, over festivals.

The time is drawing near for our state meeting. I go to south Texas soon to arrange for this and also to attend to other matters pertaining to our state work.

We are very sorry Miss Moore could not make this trip, she gave such satisfaction wherever she did go. Her lectures were highly esteemed.

No one ever visited us who was better received than Mrs. Fixen. She is charming. The people loved her. But her press notices do her injustice. They dwell upon her lighter graces and forget to mention that she is withal a deeply consecrated woman. We will ever welcome such visitors as Mrs. Fixen and Miss Moore. Our pastors are good to lecture for us but after all women help women. We would like to have those women back at our state meeting. We wish to welcome Miss Willard, Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. H. W. Smith, and Mrs. Judge Merrick, and as many others as we can induce to come.

Will the ladies named let us hear from them?

Yours for the cause,

Denton, Tex. Jenny Bland Beauchamp.

MICHIGAN.

Hillsdale.—On the 9th of June the people of Hillsdale were favored for the first time with the privilege of listening to the gifted and noble Miss Frances E. Willard. Her lecture was truly grand, eloquent, logical and womanly, strong without being masculine. Every one was delighted with it. Our large college church was filled. Some came twelve miles in carriages and they said they were well paid.

The following morning Miss Willard attended chapel exercises at the college and gave a wonderfully telling and pathetic speech to the students. I think all felt that they would try and be better students and make the world better for their living in it.

Last Sabbath evening we held a union temperance meeting in the M. E. church, all the churches in the city uniting excepting the Episcopalian. Our meeting was under the direction of the W. C. T. U., was well attended, and we hope much good will result from it. The better class of our men are getting aroused and are of the opinion that nothing is going to do the work needed but prohibition.

At the close of the meeting a resolution was passed requesting the officers of the city to be more vigilant in enforcing our laws. H.

VERMONT.

CARD FROM THE STATE PRESIDENT.

The annual meeting of the Vermont W. C. T. U. will be held in Middlebury, September 17, 18 and 19. Mrs. Emily McLaughlin will give the annual address; Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith will lead the afternoon devotional meetings. We shall also have the pleasure of welcoming the editor of The Union Signal, Mrs. Mary B. Willard. Every union should present her a record of a full subscription list; will they not try?

Each union will be entitled to three delegates. We expected to have had our National president with us, but owing to the change in the date of the Maine convention, Miss Willard must be in the east earlier and therefore can not be with us. Also to enable us to have Mrs. Smith we have placed our dates as above. This will necessitate prompt attention to the payment of dues. Also reports to superintendents and the secretaries.

Owing to the increase in membership we shall this year be entitled to an increase in the number of delegates to the National. Will not the county vice presidents endeavor to find persons who will accept these places. Ladies who are interested in the growth of our work, you will notice that we have three days in place of two as formerly.

We hope to have meetings for the young ladies; also a children's meeting, time for the meetings of the various superintendents and committees. In the appointment of delegates as far as possible let the workers be sent This is to be pre-eminently a meeting for the workers.

Mrs. E. G. Greene.

MAINE.

AROOSTOOK COUNTY W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

Travelling 400 miles from Portland by rail one reaches Northern Aroostook. Whatever their thought may be as they journey slowly along, in regard to "getting out of the world," on arrival one finds the "Garden of Maine." And the gardeners are as fine a set of refined, and cultured men and women as any county in any country can afford.

What brought us here just now was the Aroostook county W. C. T. U. convention. To say they have done well during the last year would not begin to express it. To say they excel all other counties in Maine would not be speaking disparagingly of the others. Every W. C. T. U. in the county was largely represented, and from all the towns the ministers came and acted as though they belonged there, and they did.

A large amount of the usual convention work was transacted under the direction of the county president, Mrs. C. F. A. Johnson, of Presque Isle. The hearts of the women evidently trust in her as a leader. The amendment was the leading topic of the meetings. In response to a telegram received, the county secretary Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, of Fort Fairfield, quickly responded * * * You will find our answer the 8th day of Sept. in * * * which reads "She hath done what she could."

They certainly will have earned that oft much abused plaudit.

These people live very near the New Brunswick line. Hence after the dram shops were abolished from their own towns they still were troubled by the nearness of those over the line. The W. C. T. U. petitioned the authorities over there to discontinue their selling, and after a while it resulted in the passage of a no-license vote in the place, over which they greatly rejoice.

Space would fail me to tell of all the smart doings of these Aroostook women and men; and we came away from the convention feeling that the amendment was safe in that section, that the children were cared for, and the homes protected. L. M. N. S.

Bangor.—The W. C. T. Crusade of Bangor, has reached the eleventh year of its organization. It is still working for the cause of temperance, holding two public meetings and its business meeting followed by prayer meeting every week. Also a meeting at the jail every other Sunday when papers and books are distributed, and a children's meeting the last Friday in each month. Flower Mission day was observed and bouquets, with text cards attached, were distributed.

Bangor.—The W. C. T. U. of Bangor, has sustained a heavy loss in the death of Mrs. Sophia Jane Appleton, whose loved and honored name was enrolled among the ten, at its formation.

The union records with grateful appreciation, her rich natural endowments, her rare culture, her undeviating devotion to the interests of her sex, her country and suffering humanity, whose bonds she felt, "as bound with them." So, when the first wave of the women's temperance movement reached our city, she was swept within its tides, and the contributions of a flowing pen accustomed to receive commendation from high authority, both in the region of prose and poetry, was then brought into requistion and served as long as strength permitted, for the new and glorious cause.

The memory of the charm and cheer which her presence invariably diffused, is a sweet benediction remaining with her sorrowing sisters, inviting them to emulate the simplicity and sincerity of her aims, the obedience she manifested to the voice of conscience, her devotion to the cause of the Master, her high spiritual achievements and her overcoming faith.

ROUND LAKE GROVE MEETING.

A large and enthusiastic temperance meeting was held at Round Lake, Saratoga county, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 4, 5, and 6.

It was enough to do one's heart good to hear the good words spoken there and to see and feel the enthusiasm in the good cause of temperance that is now spreading like wild-fire all over the country.

From half-past eight until twelve each day, and from half-past one until late in the evening the people sat in rapt attention, drinking in eagerly the words of the speakers, and showing their sympathy or appreciation from time to time by laughter or applause.

The program included a lesson, illustrating the physiological effect of alcohol, by Mrs. G. M. Gardinier, and addresses by Miss Colman, Mrs. E. M. J. Decker, state treasurer, Mrs. S. A. McClees and Mrs. Emily McLaughlin.

On Saturday afternoon Mrs. H. A. Perrigo, state superintendent of juvenile work, called on the children of the audience to follow her to the tabernacle, where she soon formed a new Band of Hope, initiating fifty-five boys and girls as members.

If fifty-five boys and girls can be gathered into the temperance work in the little village of Round Lake, why cannot every reader of the UNION SIGNAL inaugurate a society in her own town or village? The good that might result from an effort of this kind is simply incalculable. Miss Emily Underhill, state superintendent of young ladies' work, also formed a society of young ladies, after a very bright little speech.

Many fine speakers were present. A. H. H.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Why didn't some worthier pen than mine write up Mrs. J. Ellen Foster's work among us? I answer, every body is so busy, all our good writers have their hands and hearts very full of all kinds of work; but you must know that we have appreciated her; especially just as she was leaving us. One gentleman said he would give $500 to hear her again. That's a price not many lecturers get!

The principal part of Mrs. Foster's work was done in San Francisco, that is, she spoke more times here than elsewhere.

June 2 she went to Sacramento, Woodland, Chico, Grass Valley, and Nevada. At each of these places speaking one evening, taking in by the way one little glimpse of pleasure at the Geysers; just one day she stepped aside from work.

On Friday, the 13th of June, a reception was tendered her by Y. M. C. A. The hall had been renovated, and our good friend Mr. McCoy, secretary of Y. M. C. A., appreciating and admiring Mrs. Foster's work and worth, opened the doors of the building very wide, and the crowd came till they filled it. Some of the good men spoke, and Mrs. Foster responded in a beautiful speech of fifteen minutes' duration. Then came hand shaking and words of welcome. Sunday, June 15, she spoke in same hall, good, loving, temperance words to young men and maidens. In the evening of same day spoke in Howard Presbyterian church to a full house, thus closing her labors in the churches of San Francisco; speaking eight times in churches of different denominations.

Monday at 2 o'clock, she, in company with Mrs. Peet, superintendent of legislative work in W. C. T. U. of California, apperred before the Congregational club of ministers of San Francisco and Oakland and in an earnest speech of fifteen minutes, urged upon these ministers the importance of the petitions which the W. C. T. U. are about to issue, for an amendment to the state constitution, prohibiting the liquor traffic in California.

Dr. Holbrook, the chairman, assured the ladies that the sympathies of the club men were with the movement and they would do all they could to forward the petitions.

Thursday, June 17, Mrs. Foster gave the closing lecture, subject, Constitutional Prohibition. A large and attentive audience in the finest church in the city—First Congregational.

Mrs. Foster and her good husband, whom we found to be no lesser light in the good cause, sailed on Oregon Steamer on June 18. We bid them God speed with tears in our eyes, but hope in our hearts, hopes that will pray for her return to us at some not distant day.

Need I say that the California W. C. T. U. and also all of its locals who had the pleasure of hearing this gifted woman, feel they are paid for the efforts made to interest the people. She is worth her weight (and she is heavy) in good, bright, golden coin, to the temperance cause. No, that is too low an estimate! She shall be balanced by crisp greenbacks, one hundred dollar bills every one of them. L. P. WILLIAMS,

Rec. Sec. Cal. W. C. T. U.

PENNSYLVANIA.

TIDIOUTE.—A few short clippings have found their way into your paper, regarding the work of late carried on in Tidioute, but giving no accurate idea of its extent; and knowing that all the readers of the union are interested in the success of the temperance work whereever it may be, we send to them an account of our victory.

Mr. Will McConnell held his first meeting May 26, and since has lectured 29 times.

From the beginning the meetings grew and increased in interest and size, until nearly all in the town were enrolled as temperance men and women, and it was the exception to meet any one, even the smallest child, without the emblem of independence, the red ribbon.

Thirteen hundred and twenty six have signed the pledge, and as a population we number less than sixteen hundred.

Nearly all of our prominent men with their families, gave us their aid, and when the town was canvassed with a remonstrance paper, praying the judge to withhold a liquor license from all of our town who applied for such, only two each of all the men and women asked refused to sign, and the victory is ours, and today Tidioute stands without a licensed hotel or saloon of any kind. A "law and order league" has been formed, whose determination it is to prosecute druggist, saloon keeper, or anyone who violates the law in any way, and all are vigilant for the complete success of the temperance work, not only for the present but for all time.

Our union numbers fifty-eight, and as president we have one whose heart is ever true, and whose energy is unbounded.

The Y. W. C. T. U. numbers forty, and their meetings are very interesting and fully attended.

The Band of Hope which meets every Sabbath afternoon, has one hundred and eighty-three members, and with their bright and happy faces and badges so proudly displayed, added greatly to our procession on the Fourth.

On that day, the union, with the town people and those of the surrounding country, made every preparation for a grand temperance celebration jubilee, and with national exercises in the morning on the island, followed by dinner for all, anticipated a grand open air mass meeting in the afternoon, conducted by Mr. McConnell. Though strong advocates for cold water, none were prepared for the deluge that came from the heavens about noon, and considering the weather rather intemperate, the people scattered to their homes, well dampened, but with no less faith in the temperance cause.

Mr. McConnell is now in Warren, and we pray that his efforts there may be as fruitful of results.

To God we give all glory and praise, and our motto shall ever be: For God and home and native land.

Our next united effort will be for the compulsory education bill. MRS. J. L. GRANDEN, Cor. Sec.

NEBRASKA.

NELIGH.—About a month ago Mrs. E. M. J. Cooley, vice president at large, organized a W. C. T. U. society at this place. There was a previous arrangement for Mrs. Cooley to come to Neligh and deliver a series of lectures, but, owing to some unforeseen circumstances, she could only remain with us one day and one night. The ladies met her in the afternoon, when the W. C. T. U. was organized. The officers are: President, Mrs. M. L. Marsh; recording secretary, Mrs. C. R. Minkler; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. E. Frady; treasurer, Mrs. A. F. Wilgocki. In the evening Mrs. Cooley lectured to a crowded house. Her audience was rapturously enthusiastic from the beginning to the close of the address—not the enthusiasm that partakes of joyousness and fun, but the deep, earnest, prayerful enthusiasm, that told how the words, the earnest, beautiful, truthful words, of the speaker, found lodgment and response in the honest souls of her hearers. Her manner was energetic and most solemnly impressive.

The main drift of her talk was against licensing the liquor traffic. She quoted scripture (from the open Bible before) several times during the evening. She cited her hearers to the history of thrones so builded, to their destruction. With a look to heaven, and an earnestness that those who saw and heard her, will never forget, she said: "So help me God! my children shall never be educated in a school where blood money is used to pay for their instructions!" Oh, the pathos of her appeal to mothers and fathers.

We watch with joy the springing step and bright eyes of our sons, who may graduate among the lost. Our young men "sow their wild oats" in the hearts of our daughters. She related the incident in history of the old priest of Neptune and his two sons down by the Ægean Sea. He was warned of danger when the two huge serpents were bearing down upon him. But he was too much occupied with his sons and pleasure to hear the repeated warning cry, "Look to the sea!" When at last he did look it was to see the serpents coiling around his sons and himself. There are serpents behind the altar of our government rearing their blood-crested heads to watch and help the liquor traffic, laying wires to darken our homes and put wailing in our hearts. "We are looking to see if our loved ones shall go in rags, that the saloon keepers' families may be clothed in purple and gold." The multitude have called out to us to guard our dear loved ones.

My report would be too lengthy if I were to give a full synopsis of her lecture. It was a masterly effort and appealed to the sympathy and judgment of every one who heard her. At the close of her lecture there was a unanimous vote for Mrs. Cooley to come again and lecture to the people of Neligh.

R. MYRTIE CARLETON.

CONNECTICUT.

The third semi-annual convention of the Connecticut W. C. T. U. was held in Southington, June 25. Nearly seventy officers and delegates were in attendance, beside many visitors.

At ten o'clock the convention was called to order by president, Mrs. S. B. Forbes, of Rockville. In behalf of the Southington union, Mrs. L. A. Whitney welcomed the convention to Southington. A response from Mrs. S. K. Luce, of Niantic, was read by Mrs. Andrews, of Stamford, (Mrs. Luce being summoned home by telegraph.)

The importance of employing a state organizer was presented for consideration. After discussion and careful deliberation it was voted to appoint Miss E. A. Landfear, of Meriden, our state organizer. The amount of her salary was nearly all pledged immediately.

Encouraging reports were made by county vice presidents. County conventions have been held in five counties the past year.

In the afternoon an earnest, helpful address was given by Rev. S. B. Forbes, of Rockville. Miss Burton, of Middletown offered a resolution, thanking the people of Southington for their hospitality. The resolution was adopted.

The address in the evening was delivered by Miss Greenwood, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Miss Greenwood is not a stranger in Connecticut, as this was the seventeenth time she has addressed an audience here. She convinced her hearers that "the morning dawneth" concerning temperance work. SECRETARY.

WESTERN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

SEATTLE.—As we read your pages from week to week, gaining strength and inspiration from them, and especially from the cheering words of progress sent you by our sisters all over the land, we wonder that Western Washington so seldom adds her mite. Perhaps the officers on whom we depend for representation through your columns are so zealous in our home work that they find little time for Signal Notes. In that case may one of the lesser workers speak:

In June, 1883, our national president came to the Sound, arousing the indifferent, and strengthening the interested by her eloquence and logic. She left us as a memorial of her visit the W. C. T. U. of Western Washington, whose birthday we lately celebrated in our first annual meeting, held in Seattle, June 18 and 19.

During all the sessions of this meeting, close beside our president, was seen the form of the superintendent of the Pacific coast, Mrs. M. C. Leavitt, aiding by her experience and advice whenever needed.

Mrs. Leavitt helped us greatly by her lectures. Much admiration was expressed not only for them, but for her sweet womanliness. One young gentleman said: "She talks to us just like a mother." Another, after listening to her doubted if her arguments could be beaten even by those who claim greater power as a speaker.

Even the saloon men admired her, and said she did not abuse them. At one place a saloon keeper attended her lecture, and contributed when the collection was taken. She told them some very plain truths, not in hatred, but in the true W. C. T. U. spirit, with a heart full of love to God and brother love to man.

At La Conner and Port Gamble we had no auxiliaries, but she planted a union at each place, and at the former the president of the new union took advantage of the delay caused by one day's waiting for a steamer to give our lecturer a reception.

Mrs Foster, too, has been among us, but unfortunately few people on the Sound had the pleasure of hearing her — those few will not soon forget her. Seattle has reason to thank her for the help she gave the temperance people in their municipal election. The Seattle ladies began working for this election last spring, and ceased not in their efforts until the polls were closed. They canvassed the city, urging the indifferent to register, and on the day of election some drove carriages taking voters to and from the place of voting, while others were near the polls urging all to vote the right ticket. They are rewarded by the election of a majority of their candidates, two-thirds in the council, the attorney and assessor.

We are new in the work, but have learned something in this our first year, and mean to continue learning until our steps, now somewhat hesitating, shall have the true, steady beat of the veterans marching in our W. C. T. U. ranks. C. M. WHITE.

ADDITIONAL CONVENTION ITEMS.

There were present about twenty-five officers and delegates, representatives of thirteen unions, two in our jurisdiction not submitting reports or sending delegates. We in W. T. are in possession of that powerful influencing medium, the ballot, and now one of the greatest works of our W. C. T. U. is to teach the women, we are all learners, the beauties and the duties of this relation to the state.

The departments of work adopted by the convention are, conference with societies, soldiers and sailors' work, legislation, petition, and securing enforcement of law, securing representation in primaries, scientific instruction, social work, influencing press, juvenile work, securing use of unfermented wine at the Lord's table, flower mission, suppression of impure literature, young woman's work, prison and police stations, heredity and hygiene, and work among the Indians, each of which departments has its own superintendent.

Our corresponding secretary reported much good work accomplished by local unions during last year, our first. Though the total membership of the W. C. T. U. in Western Washington does not exceed two hundred and fifty, still the influence of that number of praying, temperance, Christian women has been felt very decidedly in political and religious affairs. And the noble young women! how kindly and healthfully they work. One Y. W. C. T. U. reported having raised and used about two hundred dollars since last September in the work for God and home and native land. There having heretofore been no separate department for young women's work, they, through one of their representatives, appeared and asked the convention to create such a department, and appoint a superintendent for it, which was done.

Our dear last year's president, Mrs. Margaret Le Sourd, declined the renomination, and though we were loth to part with her from the office, for we had learned to love her in this pioneer work, we elected as her successor one of God's chosen, a minister of His gospel, an enthusiastic and earnest worker, Mrs. W. F. Thomas, of Seattle. We stand for prohibition as our declaration of principles shows. The stimulus to thought and work in the temperance reform so grandly given by our inspired leader, Miss Willard, has never died out, and women are still feeling her works and words though given a year ago. Through The Union Signal we send her and lovely Anna our love, and tell them of many earnest prayers in their behalf. Mrs. E. G. Johnson, Rec. Sec.

ILLINOIS.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY CONVENTION.

The annual convention held at Freeburg July 9 and 10 was a success in every way, being not only noted for its enthusiastic workers, but for the large numbers in attendance and for the deep interest shown in the cause on all sides and by all people.

Reports from three old unions and four new ones, two of these being German, also the large delegation from the Marissa Band of Hope, who added not a little to the interest, with their pretty banners, bright faces and well prepared recitations and songs, all show that St. Clair county is up and doing, getting ready in earnest to take part in the battle yet to be fought.

The county president did her duty as a W. C. T. U. woman should, and was nobly aided by her sisters of the Belleville unions and others of the county. Our own beloved district president, Mrs. E. A. Blair, of Lebanon, was present giving the tone of spirituality needed to make the work done here such as God loves. Last, but not least, I mention Mrs. L. S. Rounds, of Chicago, who gave the finishing touch and made our convention just what we claim for it, one of the best held in the 18th district. In the words of the Belleville Democrat: "Mrs. Rounds is a forcible and pleasant speaker and very earnest and convincing in her arguments. She was listened to with marked interest by large assemblies and her eloquent and able addresses made a deep and lasting impression upon her hearers." I would add that her spirit of Christian love and sympathy aids not only the work but the workers. M. C. M.

Elgin.—We are usually a very quiet people out here, although exceedingly enterprising and industrious, but the old adage "Still waters run the deepest," may be truthfully applied to the prohibition sentiment which in a broad and deep undercurrent touches the heart and conscience of our community, and which has sprung to the surface like a volcanic eruption under the electrical influence of those earnest workers, Francis and Thomas Edward Murphy. We can but feel that the Spirit of the Master is theirs. It has melted the seal of silence and drawn aside the curtain of reserve, and today we feel that we "know each other better, now the mists have cleared away."

For two weeks we have had meetings every night and three times on Sundays, besides prayer meetings. The clergymen of the Babtist, Presbyterian, Universalist, Congregationalist, Methodist and Free Methodist churches have given us their presence, prayers, speeches, their churches and church collections; even abandoned their prayer meetings, turning their influence and that of their congregations in our favor.

The president and secretary of the Y. M. C. A. led that society in the same direction, performing a thousand and one acts of kindness with labors of love which will make us forever their debtors. The result is we have had a glorious temperance revival as well as a general spiritual awakening. We have realized as never before what strength there is in union.

We engaged the skating rink and seated it to accommodate twelve hundred people. It was filled to overflowing, and hundreds in vain sought admittance. Three thousand signed the pledge, among them many who had not been sober for years, men of prominence too, were converted from the error of their ways, doctors and lawyers. Homes have been made happy and the Murphys carry with them as they leave us the blessings of hundreds. That they may live long to advocate these truths is the wish of their many warm friends in Elgin. A temperance union is about to be formed to gather up and hold those already secured, as well as to continue the work of redemption until this beautiful manufacturing city is free from the dominion of strong drink and the last saloon is closed. May God strengthen us to never falter until Illinois can reach across the Mississippi and exchange congratulations with victorious Iowa that ours too is a prohibition state.

S. K. Whitford, Pres. W. C. T. U.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Mrs. Rounds has organized a union of 40 members at St. Charles, also a Band of Hope with 62 members. At Flanagan, where Mrs. Rounds spent three days a week since, the union was greatly strengthened by her work, and a Band of Hope with 32 members was organized.

—Unions have been organized at Knoxville Astoria, Ipava and Avon by Mrs. C. H. Smith.

NEWS IN A NUT SHELL.

Three new unions are reported from Montana, organized by the president, Mrs. Dr. Clark; at Billings, Livingston, and Bozeman.

The W. C. T. U. of Oakland, Cal., has recently opened a coffee house; liberal donations from wealthy citizens enabled the ladies to open under most favorable circumstances.

The San Francisco W. C. T. U. is doing a great work in every line of temperance. Their coffee house is one of the most successful not only upon this coast, but in the United States.

Mrs. C. H. Lucas, superintendent of press work at Osceola, Mo., reports a Y. W. C. T. U., a Band of Hope, and a C. T. U., as the result of their series of meetings just closed, led by Mr. C. J. Holt.

Mrs. E. L. Saxon, organizer for Tennessee, has recently organized unions at Carthage, Winchester, Sherwood, Cleveland and Athens. Mrs. Saxon is winning golden opinions everywhere, the press speaking in highest terms of her addresses.

As usual, a temperance celebration was held at Red Rock Camp ground July 4, under the auspices of the Minnesota W. C. T. U. Mrs. H. A. Hobart presided. Addresses were delivered by Miss H. G. Moore, of Ohio, and Revs. C. Hobart and G. F. Wells.

There has recently been organized a young ladies' branch of the W. C. T. U. of Albion, Mich., with Miss E. Joe Clark as superintendent. The young ladies have entered into it with an enthusiasm which promises success. Already they have arranged for a "Flower Social" to be held Wednesday evening, August 6. This "Flower Social" is something "new under the sun," and through its unique idea much amusement is anticipated. There will be a good musical program. Ice cream and cake will also be furnished.

APPOINTMENTS.

MRS. LAURA G. FIXEN'S APPOINTMENTS ON THE ST. JOHN CIRCUIT.

Milton, Ontario, August 16, 17; Lyons, N. Y., August 18; Conesus Lake, N. Y., August 19; Freeville, N. Y., August 21; Oakfield, N. Y., August 23, 24; Cuba, N. Y., August 25; Saratoga, N. Y., September 2; Dayton, N. Y., September 5.

THE PROHIBITION PLATFORM.

1. The Prohibition Home Protection party, in national convention assembled, acknowledge Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men, and from whom the just powers of government are derived; to whose laws human enactments should conform, and that peace, prosperity and happiness only can come to the people when their laws of the national and state governments are in accord with the Divine will.

2. That the importation, manufacture, supply, and sale of alcoholic beverages, created and maintained by the laws of the national and state governments, during the entire history of such laws, is everywhere shown to be the promoting cause of intemperance, with resulting crime and pauperism, making large demands upon public and private charity, imposing large and unjust taxation and public burdens for penal and sheltering institutions upon thrift, industry, manufactures and commerce; endangering the public peace; causing desecration of the Sabbath; corrupting our politics, legislation, and administration of the laws; shortening lives, impairing health and diminishing the productive industry; causing education to be neglected and despised; nullifying the teachings of the Bible, the church and the school—the standards and guides of our fathers and their children in the founding and growth, under God, of our widely extended country, and which, imperiling the perpetuity of our civil and religious liberty, are baleful fruits, by which we know that these laws are alike contrary to God's laws and contravene our happiness; and we call upon our fellow citizens to aid in the repeal of these laws and the legal suppression of this baleful liquor traffic.

3. The fact that during the twenty-four years in which the Republican party has controlled the general government, and that of many of these states, no effort has been made to change the policy. Territories have been created from the national domain and governments for them established and states from them admitted to the union, in neither of which has this traffic been forbidden or the people of these territories or states been permitted to prohibit. That there are now over 200,000 distilleries, breweries, and retail dealers in these drinks, holding certificates and claiming the authority of the government for the continuation of a business so destructive to the moral and material welfare of the people, together with the fact that they have turned a deaf ear to remonstrance and petition for the correction of the abuse of civil government, is conclusive that the Republican party is insensible to, or impotent for the redress of those wrongs, and should no longer be intrusted with the powers or responsibilities of government. That although this party in its late national convention was silent on the liquor question, not so its candidates—Messrs. Blaine and Logan. Within the year past Mr. Blaine has publicly recommended that the revenue derived from the liquor traffic shall be distributed among the states, and Senator Logan has by bill proposed to devote these revenues to the support of schools. Thus both virtually recommend the perpetuation of the traffic, and that the states and its citizens shall become partners in the liquor crime. The fact that the Democratic party has in its national deliverances of party policy arrayed itself on the side of the drink-makers and sellers by declaring against the policy of prohibition of such traffic under the false name of "sumptuary laws," and when in power in some of the states refusing to remedy legislation, and in congress refusing to permit the creation of a board of inquiry to investigate and report upon the effects of this traffic proves that the Democratic party should not be intrusted with power or place. That there can be no greater peril to the nation than the existing competition of the Republican and Democratic parties for the liquor vote. Experience shows that any party not openly opposed to the traffic, will engage in this competition, will court the favor of the criminal classes, will barter away the public morals, the purity of the ballot and every trust and object of good government, for party success, and patriots and good citizens should find in this practice sufficient cause for immediate withdrawal from connection with their party.

4. That while we favor reforms in the administration of the government in the abolition of all sinecures and useless offices, we favor the election by the people of the postoffice officers of government instead of appointment by the president; that competition and sobriety are essential qualifications for holding a civil office and we oppose the removal of such persons except so far as it may be absolutely necessary to secure effectiveness as the vital issues on which the government is intrusted to a party; that the collection of revenues from alcohols, liquors and tobacco should be abolished as the vices of men, and not a proper subject for taxation.

5. That revenues for custom duties should be levied for the support of the government, economically administered, and when so levied the fostering of American labor, manufactures, and industries, should constantly be held in view.

6. That the public lands should be held for homes for the people, and not for gifts to corporations, or to be held in large bodies for speculation upon the needs of actual settlers.

7. That grateful care and support should be given to our soldiers and sailors, their dependent widows or orphans, disabled in the service of the country.

8. That we repudiate as un-American, contrary to and subversive of the principles of the Declaration of Independence, from which our government has grown to be a government of 55,000,000 of people, and a recognized power among the nations, that any person or people shall or may be excluded from residence or citizenship with all others who may desire the benefits which our institutions conferred upon the oppressed of all nations.

9. That while these are important reforms, and demanded for the purity of administration and the welfare of the people, their importance sinks into insignificance when compared to the reform of the drink traffic which annually wastes $800,000,000 of the wealth created by toil and thrift, and drags down thousands of families from comfort to poverty; which fills jails, penitentiaries, insane asylums, hospitals, and institutions for dependency; which destroys the health, saps the industry, and causes loss of life and property to thousands in the land, lowers intellectual and physical vigor, dulls the cunning hand of the artisan, the chief cause of bankruptcy, insolvency, and loss in trade, and by its corrupting power endangers the perpetuity of free institutions.

10. That congress should exercise its undoubted power and prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages in the District of Columbia, the territories of the United States, and in all places over which the government has exclusive jurisdiction.

11. That hereafter no state shall be admitted into the Union until its constitution shall expressly prohibit polygamy and the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages.

We earnestly call the attention of the laborer and mechanic, the miner and manufacturer, and ask an investigation of the baleful effects upon labor and industry caused by the needless liquor business, which will be found a robber, which lessens wages and profits—the destroyer of the happiness and family welfare of the laboring man; and that labor and legitimate industry demand deliverance from the taxation and loss which this traffic imposes, and that no legislation can so healthily stimulate production or increase a demand for capital and labor, or produce so much comfort and content, as the suppressing of this traffic would bring to the laboring man, mechanic or employer of labor throughout our land.

12. That the activity or co-operation of the women of America for the promotion of temperance has, in all the history of the past, been strength and encouragement which we greatly acknowledge, and the methods, the earnestness, zeal, intelligence, and devotion of the mothers and daughters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been eminently blessed by God. Kansas and Iowa have been given her as "sheaves" of rejoicing, and the education and arousing of the public mind, and the constitutional amendments which now prevail, are largely the fruit of her prayers and labors: and we rejoice to have our Christian women unite with us, sharing in the labor that shall bring abolition of the traffic. She shall join in the grand "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," when by law our boys and firesides shall be free from legal temptation.

13. That believing in the civil and political equality of the sexes, that the ballot in the hand of woman is right for her protection, and would prove a powerful ally for the suppression of the drink saloon, the execution of the law, the promotion of reform in civil officers, and the removal of corruption in public life, we delegate the practical outworking of this reform to the discretion of the Prohibition party in the several states according to the condition of the sentiment in those states.

14. That gratefully we acknowledge and praise God for the presence of His Spirit, guiding counsel, and granting the success which has been vouchsafed in the progress of temperance reform, and looking to Him for all wisdom and help, we ask the voters of the United States to make the principles of the above declaration a ruling principle in the government of the nation and of the states.

FRANCHISE DEPARTMENT.

Will you permit me through your columns to urge the state presidents that, if they have not appointed superintendents of department of Franchise, they do so immediately.

We cannot overestimate the importance of this department. I would like also to ask them for a copy of the minutes of their conventions of 1884, so that I may see if any action has been taken upon the subject of woman's ballot, in order that I may be able at the national convention to give a correct report of the status of public opinion among the W. C. T. unions upon this subject. If you have room, I would like this request to appear in three or four issues of your paper and oblige,

Yours truly, Mrs. Z. G. Wallace,

Indianapolis, July 21.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTION.

On page 37, of the last national minutes, may be found the following motion offered by Mrs. H. W. Smith:

"In view of the fact that our constitution was formed before we had attained our present growth, and therefore calls for frequent amendments, I move that the following ladies be appointed a committee to revise said constitution and report to the convention of 1884, and that they invite suggestions: Mrs. J. E. Foster, Iowa; Mrs. M. H. Hunt, Massachusetts; Mrs. Benjamin, Michigan, and two general officers."

In accordance with said motion suggestions are hereby invited. Address Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, secretary of the committee, Portland, Ionia county, Mich.

OUR SUMMER CAMPAIGN.

SPECIAL OFFER FOR SHORT SUBSCRIPTIONS!

We renew our offer of last year to send THE UNION SIGNAL TEN WEEKS on trial for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, and will give an extra copy to any person sending us a club of four names with one dollar. Our friends can do us good service by sending us a large number of clubs under this offer. We need all the help we can get during the next thirty days. Subscriptions usually come in very slowly during the heated term, but expenses go on just the same. We ask for your kind efforts on our behalf to carry us over this dry period. Remember THE UNION SIGNAL, at camp meetings and summer resorts where you may be present. We rely upon you.

LOCAL unions in many places have done good temperance work, "circulated literature" in the most effective way, by taking THE UNION SIGNAL for the pastors, physicians, editors, teachers, leading politicians, members of town and school board and most prominent objectors to their work. This is worth thinking about ladies. Your money tells in this way at both ends of the line, financially for your own paper, and educated public sentiment in your own town.

THE UNION SIGNAL Pledge Card neatly printed in red and blue is now ready and can be obtained at this office, price 60c. per hundred postpaid. Every worker should carry pledge cards and they should be found at all W. C. T. U. headquarters

MURPHY Pledge Cards and Blue Ribbons for sale at THE UNION SIGNAL office. Price cards $3 per 1,000; ribbons, $3 50 per 1,000.

TEMPERANCE MISSION.—German Branch. Are you in earnest with the temperance cause? Do you mean to go to victory? Then go at once at work at the Temperance Mission among the German classes, or they will vote against you and spoil your victory. Go right at work; let them have something to read in their own language. Send for a trial package (several different tracts) of temperance tracts; 50 cents the package; distribute them free, and they will bless you finally, and help you to win the battle. Send at once, and address Rev. J. R. Lauritzen, Port Huron, Michigan.

From Pole to Pole

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.

The Harpooner's Story.

New Bedford, June 1, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with Scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.

Respectfully yours, RALPH Y. WINGATE.

The Trooper's Experience.

Mavsen, Basutoland, S. Africa, March 7, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought out what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those for some time. I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well. Yours truly, T. K. BODEN,

Trooper, Cape Mounted Riflemen.

ST. JOHN ON EDUCATION.

We have two systems of education in this country. One hundred and sixty-four thousand public schools educating for God, and one hundred and seventy-five thousand saloons educating for the devil. For education of our children through the public schools to an honest, sober, Christian manhood and womanhood, we pay annually about $80,000,000. For education through the saloon, the hot-bed of misery, poverty, crime, and shame, we contribute about $1,400,000,000 per annum. In other words, for every dollar we expend to build up through our public schools, we invest $17 to tear down through the saloons.

And yet in the face of these facts the saloon system as well as the public schools, receives the sanction and protection of the laws of the land; and each of the great political parties of to-day while approving of the schools, are too cowardly to oppose the saloons. Such political truckling ought to be condemned by the ballot of every lover of "God and home and native land." What are we going to do about it? Why, one distinguished politician from the east, without a word against the evil, proposes to divide the revenue received from the liquor traffic among the several states, thus giving it a chance to buy its way into public favor. The idea! Sanction a business that destroys soul and body, and robs the the people of $1,400,000,000 annually, that the government may get $70,000,000 revenue from it! What statesmanship! Another equally great politician from the prairies of the west suggests that the liquor revenue be devoted to the education of the youth of the land. In other words, make a public school director out of the devil, and then expect God to bless such a plan.

New York is the center of the cigar-making trade. She has nearly 4 000 factories, and turns out 1,000,000,000 cigars a year. Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois rank after New York. There were made in this country last year 3,167,060,925 cigars, about forty for every pound of tobacco used. About 35 000 000 were imported, thus making a total of about 3,212,000,000, or sixty for every man, woman and child in the United States, and 250 for every man over 21 years of age. This twin brother of the drink curse will demand the same methods now advocated by the prohibitionists. The principle will be settled as to alcohol and then may be easily extended to include all such useless and destructive agents.—Living Issue.

T. D. Crothers, M.D., at the last meeting of the American Social Science association, read a paper which had for its subject the treatment of inebriate patients. Among other assertions, he says that it is estimated that over sixty per cent. of all inebriates inherit a defective brain and nerve organization, and even he goes so far as to assert that moderate drinking always leaves an impress on the next generation. "In heredity from inebriety," he continues, "there is a special nerve defect, which from certain exciting causes will always develop into inebriety, or one of its family group of disorders—consumption, insanity, pauperism, criminality, etc."

Mr. James C. Young, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, president of the North Western Loan and Real Estate Investment Co., offers some choice investments to our readers. He can give figures from which handsome profits can be realized. ## THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

The following summary of the work of prohibition in politics is from the Wooster, O., Herald. The compiler classes the prohibition work in Kansas, Iowa and Ohio as the work of the party, whereas the Republican party was the party of prohibition in those States.

The first national nominating convention of the Prohibition party assembled in the Opera House at Columbus, O., February 22, 1872.

A declaration of principles was adopted and the following nominations were made: For president, James Black of Pennsylvania, for vice president, Rev. John Russell, of Michigan.

In five states electoral tickets were put in the field; total vote polled, 5,508.

The second national nominating convention of the Prohibition party was held in Halle's Hall, Cleveland, Ohio, May 17, 1876. Hon. Green Clay Smith of Kentucky, was nominated for president, and Hon. Gideon Stewart of Ohio for vice president.

Electoral tickets were put in the field in seventeen states, and 9,957 votes reported.

The third national nominating convention was held in Cleveland, O., June 17, 1880. Gen. Neal Dow, of Maine, was nominated for president, and Rev. H. A. Thompson, of Ohio, for vice president.

Electoral tickets were put in the field in fifteen states, and 10,305 votes reported.

In 1882 the aggregate votes in eleven states for state officers was 75,822.

In 1883 the aggregate vote in seven states for state officers was 58,205.

In 1880 a prohibitory amendment to the state constitution was submitted to the voters of Kansas. It was adopted by a majority of 7,998. There were 92 302 votes cast for it and 82,304 cast against it.

In 1882 a prohibitory amendment to the state constitution was submitted to the voters of Iowa. It was adopted by a majority of 29,729. There were 155,365 votes cast for it and 125,636 cast against it.

In 1883 a prohibitory amendment to the state constitution was submitted to the voters of Ohio. Notwithstanding the fact that the issue was complicated by the submission of a license amendment at the same time and that the vote had to be given at a general election, 323,189 votes were cast for it while only 98,849 votes were cast for the license amendment.

Up to the present all the Prohibition conventions have been held in Ohio. Two Ohio men have received the nomination for Vice-President: Stewart in 1876 and Thompson in 1880. Ohio was also the first state to place an Independent Prohibition ticket in the field, which was done in 1869—the convention, we believe, was held at Crestline, O.

Two hundred years ago the first colony of Friends was organized in West Jersey under Deputy Gov. Jennings. This colony prohibited the sale of liquor to the Indians. A few years after the Friends abolished the use of liquors at funerals. About this time the conference of the Methodist Episcopal church adopted the rule of John Wesley, which was prohibitory both as to manufacturing and drinking liquor. From this onward the sentiment of total abstinence grew with considerable rapidity. In 1833 the first national temperance convention of America was held in Philadelphia. In 1846, legal prohibition was first enacted in Maine, but proved defective. In 1851 a perfected prohibitory law was passed by the legislature. In 1854, Myron H. Clark was elected governor of New York on the prohibitory platform. In 1869 the Ohio temperance party was formed. Now temperance workers are organized for political action in almost every state and territory of the union.

The W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land" should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD
Is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.

I WANT AGENTS TO SELL THE MISSOURI STEAM Washer
And to intelligent men and women of good character will afford a liberal chance to test it before paying, and return at my expense if not satisfactory. It works on a new principle, and is, by common consent, the only washer worthy the name.
The Onio Furniture Co., Onio, Ka., write, "We did two large washings in three hours. We cannot say enough in its praise. Send six at once. We took the orders yesterday."
Mrs. S. E. Jordan, Harrold, Dak., writes, "Have washed everything from a lace collar to duck overalls. Does its work perfectly. Send 6 more at once."
Jac. Neumann, San Antonio, Texas, writes, "Am here to get the last 12. Ship 24 more at once." Mrs. Bettie Barnett, Central Grove, Miss., writes, "It has surpassed my most sanguine expectations."
Parker & Lewis, Nelsonville, O., write, "Ship 25 more at once. Mrs. Lewis will order again in a few days," and that's the way hundreds are writing.
This is no "penny-wiggle jim-crack," and no "penny-wiggle" agents are wanted, but men and women who amount to something, and want business, are invited to send for illustrated circular.

ALCOHOLIC DRINKS AND NARCOTICS.

The only Temperance Physiology that Answers fully the Requirements of the new Law in the Several States.

—BY—

J. DORMAN STEELE, PH. D.

EDITED AND ENDORSED by the W. C. T. U. under direction of Mrs. MARY H. HUNT.

This work contains all the excellent and popular features that have given D. Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Physiology so wide a circulation; with carefully-prepared sections upon the Physiological Action of Alcohol, Tobacco, Opium, etc. These are scattered through the book as each organ is treated. This subject is examined from a purely scientific standpoint, and represents the latest teachings at home and abroad. While there is no attempt to incorporate a temperance lecture in a school book, yet the terrible effects of these "Stimulants and Narcotics," especially upon the young, are set forth all the more impressively, since the lesson is taught merely by the presentation of facts that lean toward no one's prejudices, and admit of no answer or escape. In this edition unusual space is given to the subject of Ventilation, which is now attracting so much attention throughout the country. 300 pages. 12mo., half bound, illustrated. Specimen Copy, postage prepaid, $1.00.

BY ALL ODDS THE BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.
Let it be forever remembered that the
Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY
is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.
It also operates the best route and the short line between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.
Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.
Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated
North-Western Dining Cars,
the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.
All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.
It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.
Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equipped roads.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 31. CHICAGO, AUGUST 14, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

LAST week's election in Kentucky gave two more counties to prohibition.

MR. MOODY'S latest word to the reformers is, "Keep hammering away at the 'dwellings of the poor' question, and keep moving on against the drink."

THE Marquis of Lorne was asked on his return to England from Canada how prohibition of the liquor traffic served the general prosperity. Said he, "It answers admirably. It makes all the difference between savagery and civilization."

AT a farewell dinner given to Mr. Weston, the pedestrian, by temperance men and women, and on diet-reform principles, not a particle of meat was served but all manner of vegetables and fruits, and half a dozen varieties of unintoxicating wines and fruit champagnes containing no alcohol.

IT must gratify Mr. Murphy on one side, and Mr. William Noble on the other side of the water, that teetotalism and especially its blue ribbon phase, has given rise to a Blue Ribbon Life and Accident Insurance company. The accident feature is a new one in total abstinence insurance societies, and the company's business will be watched with interest.

THE question has been earnestly asked, "Where can we get Catholic literature?" In reply Father Hagan, the total abstinence apostle of Chicago, says that the Catholic Temperance Advocate is published by John McCusker, 82 Central street, Central Falls, R. I., at seventy-five cents per year. "The Evils of Drunkenness," by the Passionist Fathers, is five dollars per hundred.

A PIECE of prohibition evidence comes from Evansville, Wisconsin, whose police justice writes that for the past four years there have been but ten arrests for violations of any village ordinance, "but," he adds, "our village has not been cursed with a licensed saloon for twenty-nine years, and with the exception of a railway station, our fire losses have not exceeded $1000 in that period of time, and our taxes have been only one and six-tenths per cent annually.

MRS. LIVERMORE'S political manifesto follows close upon that of Miss Anthony and Mrs. Stanton and in the light of all the facts seems even more inconsistent than theirs. Her record as a suffragist would point certainly to an endorsement of the only party which endorses the principle of extending the elective franchise to women. Her record as a temperance worker would certainly not point to an endorsement of presidential candidates both of whom are committed by their public acts to making the liquor traffic and the revenue therefrom, a "permanent resource" of the nation. It grieves us to differ from one so good and true, but the independent thinker is abroad in the land.

THE Russian government has issued a circular to school teachers declaring that they will be held responsible for the nihilistic views and tendencies of their pupils. What if they should be held responsible in all lands for the alcoholic drink tendencies and practices of those who wait upon them for instruction. This would be as unjust in the one case in America as is the other in Russia, but there is the germ of correct reasoning in both, and the Russian proclamation is a manifestation of the growing opinion that public education has no justice in its demands if it fails to make true, loyal citizens.

THE Prohibitionists and the W. C. T. U. are both regarded by very good people as unwise in their demand for an abolition of the government liquor tax. Here comes Cardinal Manning however and after speaking of the four hundred and seventy English statutes which have built up a great legal scaffolding around the drink traffic in England, says: "It seems to me the legislature ought to separate the government of this country from all beneficial interest in the trade in intoxicating drink."

He has discovered as have many others that there is no greater obstacle to prohibition than the fact that government grows fat in revenue from the manufacture and sale of liquor.

LAST Saturday night three little boys, all under fifteen years of age, bought half a pint of whisky without any difficulty from a West Virginia saloon keeper. All three drank of it, but one, the eldest, took the largest share. Another dram seller sold them another half pint and the half crazed boy drank it all. He endured the most agonizing suffering for one night and died the next morning. Fathers, brothers, sons, is there no way to avenge these whisky murders, which are the burden of every morning's paper? The blood of Jerry Porter cries out to you, "Am I not my brother's keeper?" to the extent of voting away these death traps from the land.

MR. AXEL GUSTAFSON, a Swedish writer who has earned a good reputation in literary circles on both sides of the Atlantic, has published in England a work entitled, "The Foundation of Death," a study of the drink question which deserves republication in America. He has undertaken and carried on this study with the enthusiasm of a young convert, as it is but two years since his attention was specially drawn to the temperance question, and yet has added to his zeal the knowledge which comes of research and patient toilsome investigation. The bibliography upon which his work rests comprises 800 English and American publications and 250 each of German and French scientific treatises, besides a large list of the works by other European authors The book is a cyclopedia which deserves a place in libraries, public and private.

THE Chicago dailies are making much of an interview with Mr. Francis Murphy in which he discountenances the third party organization. THE UNION SIGNAL has always paid high tribute to Mr. Murphy's gospel temperance work and we have nothing to unsay in that regard, but it should be remembered by all that his entire time has been taken up since his reformation with one noble effort, viz.: securing signers to the pledge. He has never been nor claimed to be a student of political prohibition in any profound sense, and his views upon its practical outworkings can hardly be regarded as those of a philosopher. We give him all honor for his total abstinence work, which is glorious, but take his views on political prohibition for what we think they are worth.

"We shall march prospering,—not with his presence
Songs may inspirit us,—not from his lyre,
Deeds will be done,—while he boasts his quiescence
Still bidding crouch whom the rest bade aspire."

THE death of the Rev. C. H. Collyns, secretary for many years of the oldest temperance society in Great Britain—the British Temperance League—leaves a vacancy in the ranks of the true and tried, which will be hard to fill. He was an Oxford graduate, curate of an Oxford church, head master of a large school in Derbyshire, and later a valued organizer of British temperance work. He brought to this work scholarly taste and accomplishments which made him an advocate of higher than ordinary grade, and in directing and aiding the reform along total abstinence lines was sincerely respected in all circles of society. A little correspondence more than a year ago, concerning the use of a UNION SIGNAL sketch in the series of leaflets published by his society, revealed to us the genial, high-souled gentleman who became at once our friend. This we believe gives us right to personally mourn his loss and to pray that his mantle may fall on a worthy successor.

SHE SAILS BY THE STARS.

MRS. LIDE MERRIWETHER.

She is launched on the wave—the good ship Prohibition,
The wave of humanity boundless and free;
Around her staunch gunwale in fierce ebullition
The mad waters foam as she heads out to sea;
White floats her canvas with brisk breezes fanning her,
Straight steers her rudder, with strong sinews manning her,
Safe shall her voyage be—cool courage planning her;
"God and our countr ," her watchword shall be.

What does she sail by, the ship Prohibition?
How meet the breakers, the shocks and the jars?
How safely steer off the reefs of sedition?
How shun the iceberg that shatters and mars?
Justice, her guiding star, shines through the darkest night,
Peace and prosperity lend her their lambent light,
Health, hope and happiness shine on her ever bright,
Truth is her compass—she sails by the stars.

What does she carry, the ship Prohibition,
Under her breastplate of staunch iron bars?
What treasure rare does she hold in transition,
Guarded by strong arms of v t ran tars?
Hope for the hopeless, now weeping so wearily,
Help for the helpless, whose hands hang so drearily,
Homes for the homeless—glad news, ringing cheerily—
She carries good tidings, who sails by the stars.

She is out on the sea—the good ship Prohibition,
Tne treacherous sea of political wars;
Sweet baby hands clasped in childish petition,
Sad woman eyes watching her broad streaming bars;
Their souls deepest sympathies seaward are wending,
Their sad supplications in unison blending,
Its earnest beseechings to heaven ascending,
"God speed the sailors who sail by the stars."

Ho! send out your pilot! the ship Prohibition
Has sighted the land, coming back from the wars;
Proud floats her pennant above competition,
Loud ring the cheers 'rom her jubilant tars;
Arms are stretched seaward from waiting hearts yearning,
Souls lifted upward with high purpose burning,
Victory sails with her, homeward returning,
God's beacons guide her—she sails by the stars!

FLOWER MISSION DAY AT SALT LAKE CITY.

MRS. ANGIE F. NEWMAN.

The preacher evidently stood upon the mount of vision, and looking down the line of the centuries, saw danger ahead when he dashed off the admonition, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap."

Notwithstanding the cumulative force of the prophecy, with the experience of the toiler through these thousands of years, yet today, with the fields white for the moral harvest, the wide world over, stand the reapers, sickle in hand, looking up to the clouds, while a still voice from within the vail cries, "Why stand ye here idle?" "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

Moreover it is a truth in nature that oftentimes the stony ground has hidden veins of richness; that many plants seem to spring from the heart of the rock, and draw their nourishment from the sun and air, which would die amid the moisture and the dews. Therefore are we bidden to sow beside all waters and withhold not the hand. Personal testimony to the validity of these propositions may cheer some doubter to whom the "many days," after which the promise is, that we "shall find," prove wearisome and hopeless.

In a private interview, at Louisville Kentucky, with Miss Jennie Casseday, of flower mission fame, the writer promised, in journeying through the "far west" where the "mission" had not gained a footing, to advocate its observance wherever practicable. Hence, passing the month of April in Salt Lake City, knowing Miss Willard, in her invincible faith, had established a union in that beleaguered city, I sought out the officers, met the union twice and laid before them, in detail, the plan for jail and prison and flower mission work and urged the inauguration of both phases of work in Utah. But only those who have lived among the Mormons, can conceive the difficulties to be confronted in the execution of any Gentile scheme. However, the ladies appointed committees who found (as feared), upon conference with authorities, permission of the officers (Mormon) to hold Sabbath services at jail or prison, or to conduct flower mission services, could not be gained.

It was my fortune to meet Marshal Ireland, before whom I laid the plan of prison visitation of the W. C. T. U. and he promised to take me to the penitentiary in his carriage, the following day. The day proved too stormy to drive, and the next morning I left the territory. Now for the sequel. I will let Mrs. Spurlock tell it in her own words, (Mrs. Spurlock, a veteran in the W. C. T. U. in Nebraska, went to Salt Lake City with me, to remain as city missionary for the Woman's Home Missionary Society). The union, by my request, appointed Mrs. Spurlock to prepare an article for publication in the Salt Lake Tribune, (Gentile paper), setting forth the plans and aims of the prison and flower mission department of the W. C. T. U. as an entering wedge for future operations. This she did without expectation of any response. Later, she writes me:

"I went yesterday to the Deseret (Mormon) Hospital, to know the particulars about Flower Mission day. I had previously met Mrs. Emeline Wells (editor of the Woman's Exponent, Mormon organ) and she thanked me in behalf of the inmates. I learned from the matron of the hospital that a lady by the name of Royal, a Presbyterian came to the hospital on Monday. June 9, with flowers, fruits and cakes. That she first read my article in the Salt Lake Tribune, aloud to the inmates, and then presented each, with a bouquet, fruit and cake. I gave the matron my card, and when she learned I was the lady that suggested the plan to the papers of the city, they were overwhelmed with joy at my coming, that they might express to me their gratitude, in behalf of the poor sick inmates. Then she conducted me through the wards, and explained who I was, and really, I never had such an ovation. Old ladies wept and blessed me, and said they prayed nightly for the ladies that had so kindly remembered them. I had hard work to get away from them and only succeeded by promising to come again.

"When I re-entered the parlor, a lady physician, the regular hospital attendant, was introduced to me. She was very warm in her greetings and thanks to me for my manifest interest in the inmates, and asked me if I would like to go with her on the morrow, to visit her patients in Emigration Canon. I replied, I should be delighted to go.

"According to engagement, she called for me yesterday afternoon. It was a pleasant and profitable trip, and I was treated royally to a lunch, at which I could have my choice of beverages. Now as to my little brief of the plans in the Tribune, this Mrs. Royal, a W. C. T. U. lady, from Kentucky (Miss Casseday's home) not knowing whom the writer of the article might be, or that the union had had the matter under advisement, and decided it impracticable, just acted on her own responsibility, went to her southern friends for assistance, and executed the work alone. Thus our little effort resulted in cheering the hearts of the inmates of Deseret and St. Marks (Catholic) hospitals. I have not learned the details about St. Mark's, which Mrs. Royal also visited, but shall call tomorrow. So you see, we builded wiser than we knew. That little article of mine, of which I was ashamed, when I read yours in the Lincoln papers, has won me many friends among the sick and given me access to many hearts. The Mormon papers copied the article, the Mormon people read it, and Mrs. Wells made mention of my work in the Exponent."

With reference to prison work, Mrs. Spurlock writes: "I went to the penitentiary yesterday, with Marshal Ireland. The prison is in a dilapidated condition. Nellie White, the polygamist who was imprisoned for refusing to answer the questions of the court concerning her plural relations, seems to think she is lionizing herself. "I had an interview with 'Welcome,' (Welcome is the noted prisoner, a young man who has been three times sentenced to execution, and each time granted a new trial, during which only by the utmost vigilance of the officers of the law has mob violence been restrained. The night before the last sentence was to have been executed, acting Governor Thomas, under great pressure, owing to some legal technicalities, granted a stay o execution." Mrs. Spurlock adds: "Welcome was much moved. I am sure I have made an entrance to his heart, and I shall go again." The value of this interview is apparent in the following quotation, from a later letter: "Marshal Ireland told Mrs. Iliff, that 'Welcome' said he was glad I came and talked with him, and if all persons spoke to him in the same manner, he would love to see them. But lacking confidence in ministry and laymen, he will allow no one to talk to him about his soul. I sent him a poem and the gospel of St. John, for which he sent me thanks."

Oh, faint heart, weary with long waiting, whose sickle seems dull and whose sheaves are scanty and few, take courage, for "no doubt somewhere on the mountain the night king is losing control; somewhere he is losing control."

FAIRS! FAIRS! FAIRS!

MRS. JOSEPHINE R. NICHOLS.

During the next three months fifteen hundred great gatherings of the people we most need to reach, will be held. At these there will be an average attendance of six million persons a day. Should not every county and state W. C. T. U. avail themselves of these grand opportunities to preach temperance through appeals to the ear by the voice of a speaker and to the eye and brain through the printed page? If a special work is being carried on, where is there so good a place to circulate petitions? We sometimes hear a complaint that people will not attend a temperance meeting, even after money and effort have been spent in preparing for it. What better thing can we do than to turn our fairs, and all other holiday gatherings and seasons of recreation, into temperance meetings? At such places one can find people at their best. Taking them, as it were, unawares, we have fewer prejudices to meet, and under the genial influences of the occasion their minds will all the more readily receive the truths presented to them.

Let no pressure of other work keep us from this that is just now in season, and must be done during the season or not at all.

Let there be no limit to our efforts to thus enlighten the people upon this most important of all the questions of the day. Distribute literature in such quantities, that if it be possible, every one of these six million persons shall each day take home a printed truth that shall shatter prejudice in favor of intoxicating liquors, and convince common sense of the righteousness of prohibition. When we shall be able to accomplish this, and in this way convert our immense rural population, it will not be long until the purer and better reign of prohibition will begin.

And now allow me a word or two about the world's exposition at New Orleans. So far, I have not been able to obtain space for a booth in which to make a special exhibit of W. C. T. U. contributions; but I am sure there will be an opportunity for the distribution of an immense amount of literature. The great need is a fund to purchase this literature. I propose to get what I can from the sale of articles that I receive as contributions to this fund at the National W. C. T. U. convention at St. Louis. Any one who has a gift for making delicate and dainty articles, such as any lady would be glad to buy, and take home with her as a souvenir of the convention, can thus contribute to this fund. I have already opened a list of such contributions, and would be glad to hear from any one who will make any such donation as soon as possible, so that a note may be made of it. I hope also, that every member of a W. C. T. U. will make an effort to secure a donation of something that can be turned into money. Let us not "despise the day of small things." The price of a pound of butter, or of a dozen eggs, will buy at least a dozen pages of temperance truths.

If every fair committee that has a lunch stand or any other kind of stand at a fair, will also contribute a per cent of its receipts, it will be a valuable addition to the fund. Now friends, the fair department is one of practical work and we must look for practical results. A national department has no treasury.

Any state, district, county or local union that tries to do such work, has its treasury to depend upon; but this work at the world's exposition will be national, and as such needs the co-operation of all the unions in the nation who can lend a helping hand.

A careful list of the name of every contributor, and the amount of money or article contributed will be kept, and will be published along with a summary of the work.

IS THE CHOLERA COMING?

REV. T. H. TABOR.

The question whether the cholera that is now prevailing in southern France will visit this country, is a very serious question. If it comes, it will deliver a stirring temperance lecture. It never fails to make its voice heard on this subject, wherever it goes. Other lecturers may fail to get a hearing, but tipplers and drunkards, always listen when the cholera speaks.

We learn from the Temperance Recorder, of 1832, that when the cholera first appeared in China, it selected its victims from the intemperate and filthy. Dr. J. M. Huber, who saw 2 160 persons perish with the cholera in one town in Russia, in twenty-five days, said, "It is a most remarkable circumstance that persons given to drink, have been swept away by it like flies. In cities containing 20,000 inhabitants, every drunkard has fallen; all are dead; not one remains."

A physician in Warsaw, says, "Out of one hundred individuals destroyed by the cholera, it was proved that ninety had been addicted to the free use of spirituous liquors." In villages in Scotland, every drunkard died. And it is said that in Poland, nine-tenths of all who died were intemperate.

The French Academy said in 1832, "It is especially necessary to avoid spirituous liquors. For the abuse of wine, brandy and spirituous liquors, almost invariably causes the cholera. We can not repeat this too often to those who sometimes indulge in these excesses.

When the cholera appeared in Quebec in 1832, Drs. Rhinelander and De Kay were sent from New York city to make investigations in relation to the best modes of prevention and cure. They wrote back, "The intemperate are invariably cut off by it."

Dr. Shew says, "It is plain from all authority, that the cholera manifests a decided preference for the intemperate everywhere. Often it has passed harmless over a wide population of temperate country people, to commit its most terrible ravages upon the drunkards of another locality."

Dr. Sewell, of Washington, visited the cholera hospitals in New York in 1832 and wrote, "There have been 204 cases of cholera in Park Hospital. Among these there were but six temperate persons, and these have recovered."

Dr. Mussey wrote concerning the city of Albany, "The cholera prevailed here for several weeks, attended with great mortality, and it is a remarkable fact, that during its whole period it is not known that more than two individuals out of the five thousand members of temperance societies in this city became its victims."

In Montreal, out of 350 members of temperance societies, only one died of cholera in 1832, and he was of infirm constitution.

The above facts seem deserving of serious attention, now that a visit from the cholera seems probable. It is well to have it generally known that this fearful disease selects its victims principally from the filthy, the dissipated, and the licentious, that it has always paid special attention to drunkards and prostitutes, and that those who pursue these courses of life, may as well prepare for it.

Dr. Joel Shew tells us that in a single street of Paris, there resided thirteen hundred prostitutes; and that we are told, on good authority, that in a very short period, twelve hundred of them died with the cholera, and in another street, there were sixty of these persons, and every one died.

If the cholera comes to our country, as we fear it may, it comes to confirm the truth of the inspired word which says, "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is death."

MAKE A CHAIN.—THE BEGINNING OF IT.

MRS. E. E. MARCY.

I have a great liking for literal translations. It seems to me the practical comes before the abstract: the literal before the metaphor.

I have observed some very good people avoid as much as possible, what they call a "too literal interpretation" of the Bible. When it speaks about giving they are willing to give what they call their best. This, I fear is not a very costly gift, if we are giving nothing else and of little worth in the economy of benevolence. The blessed command and promise, "Give, and it shall be given you," in superabundant measure is translated into a mere phantasy of the affections.

We kept a little school under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. It was composed mostly of such little girls as needed training in the little industries and nice ways of keeping themselves, and whose mothers were too busy to teach them.

Some were from homes where there was nothing nice, and never will be, because of strong drink. We met every Saturday afternoon. The first rule of the school was to have clean hands, and one of the verses that was most often repeated was in answer to the question, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, and who shall stand in His holy place?" Then about twenty little voices would answer, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." Literal again; because every one looked to see if she had clean hands. No matter, cleanliness is concomitant with godliness, and the outward sign of an inward grace.

And so we had made preparation for the administration of this ordinance of clean hands.

The way was this, a good friend of humanity had set us up with the necessary tin ware, a pail, hand dish and dipper. Water is abundant in Lake Michigan; and we had soap and towels and Indian meal. It may not be known to all learned people that Indian meal is one of the nicest cosmetics in the world. It is so, and we charge nothing for this revelation; so if there should chance in some corner of the wide world some benevolent heart that is urged by simple goodness to go out after the needy and neglected little grimy hands, and bring them together into a compactable fold, and seek to emblemise purity of heart in literal clean hands, you have without cost that which will make them soft and white. Try it. But the grace of clean hands is not acquired simply by one effort. A good many and oft repeated lessons will fail and ten to one you will see them dip their hands in the water and dab them on the towel, and say they have washed them, when they are as grimy and grey as though they had never been washed since the world began with them. But to all labor there is ultimate reward in kind, so we need not fear. He that hath commanded the sowing, hath promised the perpetual order of the season, and the harvest is as sure as the seed time. But "he that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." Some schools of this design and order in the large cities have the convenience of a bath room, and all the children as a part of the privilege and training there received, take a bath. This should be so everywhere. All the comforts of our modern civilization, so far as they tend to make pure and happy the lower orders, ought to be provided for them, as libraries, baths, etc. The child is father of the man. The soul of the dirty, ignorant, comfortless child, bred in squalor and imbrued by harshness, is the very hot bed of evil. And we can not put aside the obligation we owe these waifs of fortune to help them to a better life, nor the allegiance we owe our country to make them better citizens.

"What about the chain?"

Well, this was a sewing school because every one was taught to sew. It has come now to be an established doctrine of education that no one is thoroughly and completely educated who has not had a proper physical training, and this belief finds recognition in all grades of schools; and particularly it is not of much use for the children of the poorer classes to have mental training only. They must be taught the use of the hand and the eye. The great question is being debated whether the state is doing all that it should in its present system of merely mental instruction to make the most efficient citizens. While the state is debating good women can be at work in making use of the simple means at hand to demonstrate the problem in a veritable object lesson. And this we have done, for in this, the third season of the school's existence, we have a good many girls who are making for themselves comfortable garments. They have also made "holders" and sold in sufficient number to defray the expenses of the needles, thimbles and thread and pay for a little monthly paper that goes into the families of all the pupils. And now about the chain. While we sow we do whatever occurs to the mind that it may be pleasant to do, and one of these is to repeat verses of scripture. Every one repeats whatever she pleases, and sometimes as this goes on we talk about it in a familiar way.

One day we said we had found a new verse, "Make a chain; for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence."

Now here was a command, and we must interpret it first literally according to our capacity, and then obey it. I had frequently said to them about such and such things, "Now think of it when you go to bed," and so I said, "I will think of this at night;" but in the first place tell me what it is that makes the land full of bloody crimes, and the city full of violence? Even the children know the proper answer in these days. Now if THE UNION SIGNAL is not distressed with this long beginning I will tell you some time something about the chain.

SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS.

MISS C. E. BURNETT.

No. 11.—Juvenile Work—The Public School.

If temperance instruction were properly given in every Christian home and by every Christian church there would still be a wide field unoccupied, for there are many especially among our foreign population who never enter a Christian church. The state must reach out its arms and gather up these little waifs and so infuse new life into them that they may become good citizens. No system of charity has ever been devised that was broad enough to cover all classes. Then, the state should supplement the teachings of home and Sabbath school by a system of wise instruction through the week.

There are 141.500 public schools in our land costing us annually $96.000,000. To these schools the morning bells call over 7,000.000 children. These schools are the bulwark of our nation. On the principles and morals there inculcated the stability of our nation depends. Culture of the mind alone will not make a nation great since intellect is a power that may be applied to good or evil purposes. The culture of the moral nature is as essential as that of the mind. It is the duty of the state to keep up the character of its citizens; if we do not do this our experiment of self-government will be a failure. As Mrs. Hunt says, "Whatever Ohio wants to appear in the character of her citizens it should weave into the public schools." It is the promise of the public schools to give just such instruction as shall best fit our youth for the work of life before them and since temperance as well as intelligence is essential to good citizenship the state has a right to see that it is taught in all schools supported by public funds. We pay taxes freely to support these schools because we believe education increases the value of the child to the nation. We have a right to demand an equivalent and not an army of boys sent out yearly who have not learned the first principles of self-government, not learned their duties as citizens of a free republic whose foundations are intelligence and virtue, not learned anything of the great temptations before them or how to meet them, not learned that duty to God and man requires them to make of themselves all that is possible under the conditions in which they are placed.

After twenty years of close relation to our public schools

I declare they are not half doing their work. In a land like ours where money is poured out freely for school purposes ignorance is a crime that ought not to be tolerated, and vice need not be half so prevalent if only the whole nature, physical, mental and moral, were symmetrically developed. Our children are forced to obey rules but no proper incentive for doing so is placed before them.

The introduction of temperance instruction is one step toward a higher culture of the moral nature. It will set both teacher and student to thinking and can but result in good. The day will come when our children will be taught that which most concerns them.

God speed that day!

Correspondence.

MORE ABOUT WOMEN IN THE CHURCHES.

Dear Union Signal:—In the "overturning and overturning" in which your correspondent, in common with most other housekeepers, has been engaged, this last spring, a copy of the Congregational Quarterly, for April, 1874, came into my hands. With no thought or time for investigating the contents of the large files of newspapers, magazines, etc., stored in a certain "upper room" of my house to be twice a year brought into line in the march of divine orderliness, "something moved me" to open this one number, when my eye fell upon these two captions, "May Women Speak in Meeting?" and "May a Woman Speak in a Promiscuous Religious Assembly?" The determination was at once made to read the articles so introduced and find what ground their authors took ten years ago upon this phase of the "Woman Question." Now my policy and habit in regard to this subject has been that of a certain bachelor, who, being present in a social assembly where this topic was discussed and approached by a lady who asked him, "Sir, what do you hold on the woman question?" replied, "Madam, I hold my tongue." I have always found this policy to work very well indeed. Nevertheless, when one is distinctly told to "hold her tongue," human nature at once feels a strong desire to evade the command. So, while reading the article "May Woman Speak in Meeting?" written by a woman, Augusta Moore, in which the ground was taken that Paul distinctly commanded women to hold their tongues there came an uneasy sensation at the root of one woman's tongue I wot of, as if it were getting ready for action.

Here is the way in which the proper duties of women are suggested by Augusta Moore: "Christ, who might, had He seen fit, have at least appointed one or two women among 'the twelve,' or among 'the seventy,' appointed not one; and never hinted that He should want one to preach. This, followed by Paul's clear, ringing command, surely ought to teach the church effectually that the Master did not want women for such work. For He was as good and true a friend to woman as she has in any man to-day. He loved her company; He loved to hear "her sweet voice," but He did seem to prefer to hear it when agitation or excitement did not shake it into a mutter, worry it into a whine, nor hoist it into a screech. He was familiar with the best and most gifted women of His time. Women of wealth and high position followed Him about and helped to support Him. The sisters of Lazarus were intelligent, noble, splendid women; and His mother! what a grand genius was hers who sang the song of Mary on the hills of the Holy Land! If mortal woman might preach with power and acceptance surely it were these. But how 'silent' they all were, and are, in our churches."

So then women may know "effectually" that they may follow the speaking brethren about and help support them.

One more quotation from this truly feminine article, (pre-eminently so if one judges by the display of quotation marks and italics sprinkled all through it, like dandelions on a green lawn), and we will turn for a moment to the other one written by a man.

After saying that woman's constitution, nerves, voice all declare that the representative, the model woman, was never made for public efforts, she thus commiserates her sisters (or her sisters' children). "Poor babes! They know this truth—the agonies of colic they have endured in consequence of their mother's idea that not to take up the cross by 'speaking in meeting,' was to 'deny the Savior.' With cold feet, clammy hands, shaking limbs, and heart almost knocking them over, the poor victims of a false idea—nay, of neglect understandingly to study their Bible, the only true guide to the Lord's will—arose, whispered, squeaked or screamed out (not one woman in ten can control her voice) something of their sorrow for their sins, their love for their Lord, and their desire to 'be more faithful.' Then dropping back into the seat they tried to regain composure. But alas! baby has to reap the harvest. The commotion in the maternal heart was transferred to poor baby and he kicked it back to his mother, through hours, perhaps, of a suffering night."

Now there are so many things taken for granted, so much begging of the many questions involved in that paragraph that is "just like a woman," and one hesitates to attempt to analyze it. After our introduction to all the positive wisdom in the article, such as is involved in the declaration that "Crabs go backward as well as forward," the inferential wisdom, such as we find in the passage quoted and other equally entertaining ones; and the pity for her deluded and suffering sisters, it is a relief to turn to the cold, clear logic and calm reasoning of the article by Mr. Loomis. In the subject matter of that article and its correspondence to one in The Union Signal of some time since by Rev. Daniel L. Collie, lies my excuse for intruding upon your columns.

Mr. Loomis' article, like Mr. Collie's bases its argument upon the signification of the Greek words chosen by Paul at different times, all of which are translated by the English word speak. There are five Greek words covered thus with one English word. To express the varying meaning of those five Greek words ten English words are needed, i. e., talk, prate, babble, prattle, gabble, wrangle, argue, dispute, discuss, teach or speak authoritatively. Your readers are referred to this article for a full explanation of the force of these terms in their different connections in the New Testament. But we may spend a moment on the famous one in I. Corinthians 14:34. In the first place the clause "They are commanded," is an interpolation. The Greek word used in this passage implies that there was in the Corinthian church insubordinate wrangling or profitless discussion with the men. "It is as if the apostle had said to the Corinthian church: There is discussion and confusion enough among you made by the men, without adding a woman's voice to it. Let your women keep silence from this babble and wrangling. The responsibility is not placed upon them to discuss in public these disputed questions.....and if they will learn anything of these questions, let them inquire it out of their husbands at home, for it is a shame for a woman to prate and gabble to no profit or edification in the assembly. These English terms are not elegant, but expressive; while the Greek terms are very soft and musical, and must have sounded so to the Grecian ears of those Corinthian ladies when the epistle was first read in the church.....Let Paul speak for himself in his own precise and musical Greek, and it spikes every gun and silences the whole battery. A recently returned missionary from the field where Paul once labored, says: 'The Greek women are now, as of old, very excitable, perpetually asking questions, given to talking, often to the disturbance of the meetings. In plain English, Paul told them to stop their gabble.'"

In the 29th verse the men, or prophets, are permitted to "gabble," while in the 34th verse the women are prohibited from it. That is, "There was evidently a doubt in the case whether these prophets were really moved by the Holy Ghost in these utterances, or, self deceived perhaps, were only giving utterance to their own unedifying imaginations or fancies; of that matter 'the others were to judge.' Till that can be decided, therefore, in the Hebrew sense let him 'word' his dubious words, or in the Greek sense, let him babble for the time being. But if there is an inspired message more certain and edifying, let this dubious talk, this unedifying babble cease. The men as well as the women are cautioned against that kind of speaking or talk in the assemblies.....To the Corinthian women the injunction was, —silence from wrangling, and subjection. To the Ephesian women —freedom from 'authoritizing.' We conclude that Paul has never uttered one syllable, in epistle or by word, so far as the record shows, to prohibit a woman to pray, to herald the news of salvation, to utter God's messages to a promiscuous Christian assembly, small or large, when constrained by the love of Jesus and of souls, under Divine influence so to pray and exhort and preach, only she is to do it in a modest, womanly manner; nor has Peter, nor James, nor John, nor Matthew, nor Mark, nor Luke, nor Moses, nor the prophets. The great commission was to every member of the church for all time. If gifted laymen or women are called by the Holy Ghost to speak of the love of Jesus, and endowed with natural gifts and graces of the Spirit to win souls; by what authority does any man, or any body of men forbid their heeding the Divine call?"

I am aware that I have given your readers the conclusions with but a small part of the argument. But the line of argument in Mr. Collie's paper will suggest that of the one I have quoted from. And I have done so in the hope of emphasizing and drawing further attention to this admirable paper.

IOWA'S JUBILEE.

Dear Union Signal:—We have a few things we want to tell you about the Clear Lake Temperance Jubilee.

At rather a late day the Iowa W. C. T. U. consented to take this annual temperance meeting under its wing.

Assisted by the courteous and generous managers of the Clear Lake Park Association, Rev. J. W. Walker, Mr. Frank J. Bush, attorney, both of Clear Lake, they succeeded in rendering the meeting both pleasant and profitable. The success of the meeting and the pleasure of our stay was largely due to the untiring efforts of these gentlemen.

The time was too short either to extensively advertise the meeting, or to obtain many speakers from abroad. However, they were successful in securing Mrs. Clara Hoffman, president of Missouri W. C. T. U. to be with us Sabbath and Monday. She came filled with enthusiasm, fresh from the Pittsburgh convention, and thrilled her audiences with her glowing thought and ready utterance; and left us all feeling that should we soon have another jubilee Mrs. Hoffman must surely be no the program.

Then too we had our own loved and eloquent Judith Ellen Foster, just from the last and latest W. C. T. U. convention, but the first in Yellowstone Park. She had been listening to the giantess' spout, and was inspired with her lofty eloquence, and all the sights and sounds of that magnificent wilderness had filled her head and heart with most apt and beautiful illustrations of temperance truth. Depriving herself of one more week of rest and recreation, she came with heart full of helpfulness for the Iowa sisters—always dear to her—and as bouyant and lighthearted as a girl's were her greetings for us all. Dr. Braden and daughter from Nashville, Tenn., were also with us with words of cheer and a "God speed." We were especially happy to meet Miss Braden as secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Tennessee.

The opening of the jubilee occurred Wednesday evening, when our president, Mrs. Aldrich, was never more felicitous than on that occasion in her greetings to those assembled in the beautiful pavilion, which had been very tastefully decorated the day previous by her own skillful hands and those of our secretary, Mrs. Maxfield. There were flowers, flags, and many mottoes, setting forth in brief sentences the benefits of prohibition, and the proposed enforcement of the law by Iowa's law abiding citizens.

Over the platform was suspended a tricolored banner. On the crimson stripe "Iowa Redeemed," on the white, "For God, home and native land," on the blue "This is the victory—even your faith."

Every evening a fine choir from Clear Lake under the excellent leadership of Mr. Mather, furnished music. The ministry was largely represented, and many of them gave us excellent brief addresses, on the outlook, enforcement of law, and the needs of the hour, prominent among them, Revs. Keeler, Keagle, Crippen and Cole. Many of the morning sessions were especially interesting and spirited because of the informal discussions which followed many of the addresses.

Mrs. Goode-Hinman was with us, and in her own interesting way conducted, as one lady said, "The most delightful children's meeting she had ever attended." This lady expressed the opinion of many. We also had Mrs. Benedict with her plea for the erring ones, and Mrs. Palmer, who held a large audience in rapt attention on Sabbath morning as she spoke of God's peculiar agencies. The scientific department was not overlooked in the making up of the program, and brief, illustrated talks were given by Mrs. L. D. Carhart on Thursday evening and each succeeding morning, Sabbath excepted, the nine o'clock hour of that morning being devoted to Sabbath school which was unusually well attended. Our president proved herself an excellent Sabbath school superintendent, and deeply interested the scholars in her closing remarks upon the lesson whose subject was the Rechabites.

Sabbath afternoon Judge C. C. Nourse, of Des Moines, spoke grandly and forcibly upon the enforcement of law. Judge McKean, of Anamosa, was also present during the entire jubilee, adding much both to the pleasure and profit of the meeting. We were especially favored in having these two gentlemen present, for they are men "who stand four square" and in whose hands justice finds an honest balance.

We were more than glad to grasp again the hand of that staunch advocate of prohibition, Hon. Elias Jessup, whose nomination for governor on the Prohibition ticket was one of the outcomes of the Clear Lake temperance convocation in '79. For a few years he has been living in Oregon, but we are happy to welcome him back to Iowa and to the ranks of temperance workers.

There too was Hon. Aaron Kimball and B. F. Wright, men whose names will always be honorably associated with the State Alliance inasmuch as they have so nobly stood at its head for several years.

We were also happy to welcome Mr. Foster and Emory, and when the cider question was discussed, Mr. Foster showed himself at home in law, and both able and eloquent in denouncing this treacherously "innocent" beverage.

On Saturday evening Mrs. Foster made an earnest plea for honorary memberships for the W. C. T. U., to which many readily responded. Mr. Frank J. Bush of the Clear Lake management being the first to respond, with his five dollars, the price of such membership.

A portion of Monday morning was devoted to reminiscences of former jubilees, when we looked over all the wilderness way, in which God had led us, to our Canaan, but there are many fenced cities to be taken yet.

Monday evening came with its hour for farewell words preceded by fine addresses by Mrs. C. A. Dunham of Burlington and Mrs. Hoffman. Mrs. Foster was to have spoken again, but the hours were too brief for us to have all the good our eager, hungry hearts would fain have taken.

The audience seemed loath to accept the final farewells without further testimonial of their appreciation of these meetings, and they insisted upon increasing the number of honorary memberships to twenty, and of course the W. C. T. U. were not very loth to accept such substantial testimonials of appreciation.

Tuesday morning we left the lake over whose clear, bright waters we had enjoyed some delightful sails, its two commodious hotels on the shore, with their well spread tables, its cozy cottages nestled here and there amid the trees, chiefest among them for comfort, neat and tasteful arrangement, the Lozier cottage kept by Col. and Mrs. Shaw, whose untiring courtesies we all gratefully remember.

We went forth from these meetings filled with praise for the past and earnest endeavor for the days to come. Iowa feels all eyes turned upon her and expects to be true to her sacred trust. L. D. Carhart.

RATIFICATION IN ILLINOIS.

Dear Union Signal:—We ratified the nomination of St. John and Daniel, last Saturday evening in our court house.

The sheriff, a good Democrat, was terribly worried for fear we should make a dirt and clutter in the court room, but we got the key, and went in. Across the end of the room we swung three long narrow banners, the top one, "For God, and home, and native land," in blue and gilt, and eighteen feet long, the second, "Home Protection," fourteen feet long with white letters eighteen inches high, the third the Iowa women's legend, "A schoolhouse on every hill top, and no saloon in the valley," on a banner over twenty-five feet long and with letters eight inches high. Then we had smaller banners of various sorts, and one in particular, "Prohibition party; St. John and Daniel."

We made the judge's desk a bank of cut flowers, (in pans of sand) and at the back placed a handsomely decorated picture of St. John, around which a delicate spray of clematis crept softly up, with its delicate sprays of white blossoms. The table was covered with a pretty spread that belonged to the Band of Hope, and our stars and stripes draped one side of the rostrum. We hung the court yard trees full of chinese lanterns, to attract notice.

We sang first America, then Hail Columbia, A Thousand Years my own Columbia, Which way is your Musket a P'intin' today, and The Star Spangled Banner. We passed printed slips containing the national songs to the audience so all might join in.

Revs. Wallar, and Sears, gave stirring speeches. Brother J. Wendal Hotz, a German third party prohibitionist created the most enthusiasm; a great craning of necks occurred when his energetic tones, with their pronounced German accent fell upon the ears of the crowd. He was born in Germany, has always been a Democrat, and is one of the solid and influential Germans of our county.

In the German fashion he made his speech plain. He assailed violators of Sunday laws and exhorted men to vote for principle and conscience. Joshua Bradley, Henry B. Kepley and Thos. Basset, declared their devotion to this new party. For want of time a number did not give in their testimony but the meeting was a pronounced success. The speakers were evenly divided from the old parties. We have had our St. John and Daniel flag flying on a wire in the middle of the main street for some three days. Some are quite agitated thereat. It is the only candidate's flag that has been flown here so far, and the letters are so big they can be read from one end of the street to the other.

Apropos of the meeting, I decorated a window after our return from Pittsburgh with a large picture of St. John with various pictures from the convention, and which all saw there and could have had, and I bought a copy of that wonderful picture the "Whisky Dragon," and framed it and put it in the window too. I had "Our Candidate," in large letters over St. John's head, and our "For God, and home, and native land," below it and with Mr. Hobbs' picture from the Sun and with flags and mottoes, and a big star at the top ("Our star is going up"), I made that window gay and it has preached in a way that we could not have preached, ever since. A crowd frequently hangs about it, and no hour passes that some one does not stop there to see or read. A good Republican said to me the other day, that Lelia, (his six year old daughter) came home and said, 'Papa, I saw 'Our Candidate' today."

"Our Candidate?" said he, "Why, who is that?" (he had not seen the window), "Why, Mr. St. John, don't you know, in the window up town?" "Now," said I to John (for I knew him well), "vote for the candidate your daughter has selected, vote for her this time." He laughed but did not say nay.

We can get the children's feelings for us by beautiful and attractive displays of our candidates and our work.

Excuse haste, the work this way presses us mightily.

TEMPERANCE IN THE NORTHLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—One of the best examples of what can be done by individual effort when sincere desire is supplemented by energy, is found in the history of the work done in Winona, Minn., by a Polander whose name is John H. Czeszinski, and whom I came to a knowledge of while inquiring into the possibilities of a work among the foreigners of that city. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. scarcely thought it possible to get a wedge in for temperance where drinking was so u[niversal] as it was there among the foreigners, and the p[rejudice so strong] against anything like Christian effort in [that direction.] They said the prospect was dark. There were [so many] foreigners that they ruled the politics of the city, [carry]ing all the elections. That last spring a saloon keeper was elected mayor, who kept his saloon open every Sunday in violation of law, and they could not see that there was any redress for it. Ninety saloons followed the example of the chief official and disgraced the city by constant violations of the ordinances. Through a friend I heard that a Pole was doing some temperance work, and sent for him to come and see me. He is a young man about thirty years of age who eight years ago when he came to this country, could not read or write even his native tongue. He soon began to look around him and to perceive that where the possibilities are as great as they are in this country fitness is a necessity, and that education is the first essential for fitness. He accordingly went to work to study after work hours, obtained a good common school education, went out into the country and taught school. Now he is attending the State Normal at Winona, and perfecting himself in Latin and the higher branches, all this time he supports himself by manual labor, besides assisting his brother and family recently from Poland. He told me that about six months ago he felt that something must be done to check the tide of intemperance that threatened to engulf his countrymen, and he set about the work. He has succeeded in forming a total abstinence society of two hundred and twenty-five members, has organized and teaches a temperance night school, has formed a mutual benefit society in which these poor people invest two or three dollars a month, in consideration of being cared for in sickness, and their families given a sum at their death, but in case of their breaking the pledge, which is a principle feature in the contract, they forfeit all they have invested, so this is a double armor for the enemy. Czeszinski also holds an evangelistic meeting every other Sunday evening, has good audiences of his own people to whom he delivers Bishop Ireland's temperance addresses, which he translates into the Polish language, and any other good papers sent over. One of the first persons he induced to sign the pledge was the Polish Catholic priest, who drew up a cast iron pledge for the society, and also a saloon keeper who has "shut up shop" and turned to a cleaner way. Czeszinski said to me: "Our people elected a saloon keeper for mayor last spring, because our ward gave him five hundred votes which decided the election. But we intend to elect a temperance mayor next spring. When I go to a man to talk about his vote I tell him, Don't ask whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, but is he a good lover of his country and a good citizen and is he right on the temperance question?" There! isn't Czeszinski all ready for the third party. I asked him how the women were about drinking. "O, the men educate the children to drink because the children are all sent to the saloons for drink and never taught any better."

While visiting Winona in May, it was suggested that the ladies petition the city council to enforce the ordinance against having the saloons open on Sunday; accordingly they circulated a petition to that effect, obtained the names of twelve hundred ladies, eight hundred men and the two hundred and twenty members of the Polish Total Abstinence Society. This they presented to the council last Monday night, with the following result of its being passed unanimously except the negative vote of the mayor. He said, "others might enforce the law he should not." His offensive language to the ladies, one of whom was Mrs. Swartz, the president of the W. C. T. U., was rebuked by Father Colter, the Irish Catholic priest, who represented the Father Mathew Society. Since the decision to enforce the ordinance, one man has been arrested and held under three hundred dollars bail for selling last Sunday. The citizens of Winona mean business, and to none is greater credit due than to John H. Czeszinski. This young man should be encouraged in the work he is doing. He is bound to rise in the world, for such noble efforts, not only for self culture but for the benefit and advancement of his fellow men, mark a man of no ordinary ability. Great credit is also due to his fellow worker and co-laborer, Rev. John Byzeiski, the Catholic priest, who is a tower of strength to those who are trying to reform. They need Polish literature, how shall they obtain it? S. F. Grubb,

PITCHER OR JUG.

M. P CHICK.

They toiled together, side by side,
In the field where the corn was growing;
They paused awhile to quench their thirst,
Grown weary with the hoeing.

"I fear, my friend," I said to one,
"That you will ne'er be richer;
You drink, I see, from the little brown jug,
Whilst your friend drinks from the pitcher.

"One is filled with alcohol,
The fiery drink from the still;
The other with water, clear and cool,
From the spring at the foot of the hill.

"In all of life's best gifts, my friend,
I fear you will ne'er be richer,
Unless you leave the little brown jug,
And drink, like your friend, from the pitcher."

My words have proved a prophecy,
For years have passed away;
How do you think have fared our friends
Who toiled in the fields that day?

One is a reeling, drunken sot,
Grown poorer instead of richer;
The other has won both wealth and fame,
And he always drank from the pitcher.

"FATHER MAKES THEM."

E. GILMORE.

They were having the celebration in the town park, a large, delightful spot, shady nearly the whole of it from the beautiful branching of tall trees. It seemed as if the whole park was surrounded with booths, there were so many of them. In them one could find everything possibly wanted in the way of refreshments, cakes, buns, sandwiches, pies, cold meats, coffee, lemonade, ice-cream, ice-water, and, I regret to say, beer, and other drinks still worse than beer. Of course there were all sorts of people gathered in and about the park, and the occupants of the many elegant carriages going to and fro were vastly amused at some of the queer specimens of humanity that met their view. A lady leaning languidly against the satin cushion of a very handsome carriage suddenly aroused herself as she passed a booth in which lemonade, candy, buns, etc., were sold. There were quite a number within the booth refreshing themselves, but it was upon one young boy that her gaze was riveted. A boy of thirteen or fourteen was talking earnestly to seven or eight little boys much younger than himself. Each little boy had a glass of lemonade from which he was drinking. The older boy was dressed in expensive clothes and presented a strong contrast to the other boys, who wore patched or ragged clothing. He evidently was treating the little ones; at least that was what the lady thought. Turning to her coachman, she said: "Dennis, did you notice Arthur in that booth?"

"No, ma'am; I wasn't a lookin' that way. These horses be a prancing so on 'count of the music an' fire crackers, an' such like, they take up all my attention."

"Turn around, Dennis, and drive slowly past the booth."

Dennis did as requested. As he drove close to the curb stone, she saw distinctly her Arthur passing a basket of cream-cakes to those same dirty little boys. She was very angry, but she would not stop and call to him, she was too proud for that; but she would find out what he meant by associating with such ragamuffins as soon as she could have an opportunity to speak with him. It was late in the evening before that opportunity came to her. The lady's two little girls had just returned home with their nurse in gay spirits.

"O mamma!" said one, "you never saw such fire works in all your life; they had George Washington all spelled out in great fiery letters, with stars shooting out from every letter."

"And they had the star-spangled banner all red and white and blue, and 'twas all burning," said the other child excitedly.

"All burning! Why, I should not think they would want to burn up the star spangled banner," answered the mother.

"They didn't, ma'am," exclaimed the nurse. "I don't know how 'twas ever done, but 'twas all ablaze as if in glory, and the pink and blue lights were makin' everything look like fairy land, and then when all the lights went out there 'twas waving as beautiful and sound as ever. Is Master Arthur home, ma'am?"

"No, he has not been in the house since tea. Why do you ask?"

"'Cause I'm a bit worried. I saw him an hour ago a leadin' an old drunken man, and I called after him, but he told me to 'Hush.'"

"And oh! mamma," said little Edith, shivering in disgust, "I saw brother Arthur leading two awful dirty little girls by the hand, and he bought them lots of things—sandwiches and cakes and even dolls."

"That he did, ma'am. We watched him, but he didn't see us," nurse added.

Quick, boyish steps came up the steps and through the hall, and in another moment Arthur entered the room. Arthur had always been his mother's pet and pride, but it was in a very angry tone that she asked: "Where have you been, sir? Who have you been leading along the public street?"

"I'll tell you, mamma, as soon as you are alone," the boy answered respectfully.

"Then you can tell me now. Nurse, take the children right to bed."

As soon as the door closed upon nurse and children Arthur said: "I've been out seeing the fire works, of course, and I led Dan Carpenter home; he was too drunk to go alone."

"O Arthur! how could you so lower yourself?"

"Why mamma, I don't call it lowering myself to lead a poor drunken fellow home. The boys were shouting at him, and throwing stones, and little Rose Carpenter was sobbing because he wouldn't go with her. What else could I do? And then Mrs. Carpenter was so thankful. What a sweet pretty woman Mrs. Carpenter is, mamma."

Arthur's mother sighed. Yes, she could remember the time when she had thought Mrs. Carpenter a sweet, pretty woman; but that was long ago. She had nothing in common with them now.

"What will your father say when he finds out his only son has been seen parading the street with a drunkard?"

"I'm sure I don't know what he'll say; but he ought not to find fault considering he makes the drunkards," Arthur replied fearlessly.

Arthur's mother ignored his remark, but she said: "I saw you treating a host of dirty boys this afternoon, and the children saw you with two wretched little girls, leading them by the hand as tenderly as if they were your own little sisters. What have you to say in explanation of all this?"

"Well, those little boys were every one of them drunkards' children, and so were the dear little girls, and if I had not done something for them they wouldn't have had any Fourth of July. Papa gave me just so much money to spend, and said I could spend it as I liked; so I did."

There was a tremor in Arthur's mother's voice as she asked: "Didn't you use any of the money for yourself?"

"No, ma'am, I didn't feel as if I had a right to," Arthur replied, his voice quivering. "You see, mamma, the money papa gave me came from the saloon where his men sell liquor, and so what he gave me I gave back to the poor little children. It must be very hard to be a drunkard's child; and, mamma, it's hard, too to be the son of a man who makes drunkards."

That night Arthur's mother told his father what he had said, and he was very angry. He wanted to call Arthur from his bed and "give him the thrashing he deserved," but his wife said: "Let him go until morning." When morning came she said: I almost believe the boy is right, after all. All through the night I have seen Rose Carpenter as she was before you opened your saloon and began to sell liquor to Daniel."

Her husband answered with a groan: "I have had a wretched night, too—dreaming, dreaming, dreaming. Such faces! Such ghastly forms! Such wretched homes! Such pallid, starving children! And some one always shouting in my ear: 'Father makes them! Father makes them! FATHER MAKES THEM!' But I'll never make another—never, God helping me! I've been sowing seed for a lingering pain, and I'll have to gather the harvest, I suppose; there's no dodging that, but I can stop where I am and sow another kind of seed, so there'll be another kind of harvest after a while."—Sel.

A LETTER FROM OUR GENERAL.

DEAR CAPTAIN DEBORAH:—I hear quite often from the little ones of the Prevention Army and nothing would give me greater pleasure than to reply in full to each one, but of course I have not time for that. The children from Illinois for some reason, have written more frequently than any others. I think it must be because they breathe the same air as our Miss Willard and live under the shadow of THE UNION SIGNAL. One of the latest from your state came from Carrie Rosa, Waukegan, Lake Co., Ill. I should like very much to have you publish one of the last I received. It comes from Staunton, Mass., and is such a fair specimen of many of these lovely little communications, that I should like my children all over the union to read it and observe the interest this dear little girl takes in the good cause.

STAUNTON, June 16, 1884.

DEAR MRS. HAMMER:—I am only a little girl eleven years old but I have heard of you quite often. Mrs. Fultz, the president of our Band of Hope, has read several very nice letters from you. I have signed the pledge and joined the library. I go every Wednesday evening; I love to go and wish it met every evening. Mrs. Fultz lives about four miles in the country, don't you think it is very kind in her to come so far to teach us? We are going to have an exhibition before long, we are learning pieces for it now. Mrs. Fultz wishes me to ask you what she must do when she has 275 children on the roll, and there are not more than 25 or 30 that attend? I am trying to get a medal, I have gotten several of my friends to join. Mamma has a class of girls in Sunday school from nine to thirteen years; all of them belong to the Band of Hope but one, and we hope to get her also. I belong to the Woman's Missionary Society, of which Mrs. Juliana Hayes is the president. I expect you know her, as she travels about a great deal. Every year I have a missionary hen, I have a name for her and keep it. The one I have now has six beautiful chickens and when I call "Julia, Julia," they all run to meet me. Dear Mrs. Hammer, if you think this worth answering, I will be delighted to hear from you. With much love, I remain, Your little friend, LILLIAN M. FULLER.

There! dear Capt. Deborah, is not that a letter worth answering? I have sent that faithful teacher, who weekly travels her four miles for that little band, a new circular for our department and trust she may find it helpful and suggestive. I would mention here, for the benefit of state superintendents of juvenile work, that an early reply is requested to the postal I recently sent them, in order to supply them with the new circulars, that they in turn may send one to each local W. C. T. U. in the state.

Most cordially yours,
ANNA M. HAMMER, Nat'l Supt. Juvenile Dept.

FLOWERS CAST UPON THE WATERS.

The W. C. T. U. of Wheaton observed Flower Day according to the program laid out by our superintendent by making up nineteen bouquets, sending them with a scripture text to all those known to them to be sick, as as well as to each of the six prisoners in our county prison. The following was sent in response to our offering:

To the W. C. T. U. of Wheaton:—

When once creation's work was done,
A place for man's abode;
Well pleased, the Great Eternal One
Pronounced it very good.

We can but see the truth divine,
That shines in Nature's face;
But beauty too in every line
We there may clearly trace.

The heavenly spheres by law revolve,
From which they cannot swerve,
Yet forced to move, till all dissolve
In parabolic curve.

Old masters ne'er could canvas touch
Nor aught in art can vie
With mantling tints and colors, such
As deck both earth and sky.

Hence, since the bright creation's morn,
Which lightened Eden's bowers,
The dress of Nature to adorn—
The flowers, delightful flowers!

"Behold the lilies of the field,"
Nor anxious be for dress,
But trust the Savior's richest yield,
And seek His righteousness.

Sweet mission that which scatters flowers
'Mong those on beds of pain,
To cheer and bless their weary hours
And yield them joy again.

The flowers shed light on Nature's gloom,
And, while the sun and dew
Shall cause the flowers to bud and bloom,
God bless the "C. T. U."

A FARMYARD PARABLE.

SIR ROMADA.

In a certain farmyard a large family of fowls had lived for many generations. Few poultry yards could boast of more distinguished characters. There was old father White, who had aroused the whole neighborhood at daybreak, every morning for the last ten years. So anxious was he to be the first to announce the dawn, that he would often crow in the middle of the night, imagining that he saw a faint streak of light in the east. Captain Game had won trophies on many a hard fought battlefield, and on all great occasions his spurs were exhibited for the admiration and warning of all young cocks of military aspirations. Judge Black, of Spanish descent, settled amicably all disputes, without in the least compromising his own dignity. Young Feathertop had recently been purchased for a large sum of money, (no one dared to say how much) and being a great favorite with the master, was, therefore, the occasion of some jealousy among the older residents. But as he was a well disposed rooster, no serious trouble ensued. Then there was old mother Brown who "set" regularly three times every year and raised more chickens than any other hen on the place. But time would fail if we should attempt to give even brief biographies of Dame Speckled, Madam White and all the other celebrities of this famous yard.

Now the circumstances of this community were uncommonly favorable. They had a kind and provident master. An ample supply of grain was set apart for their use. No contagious disease had ever prevailed among them. Cyclones and tornadoes had passed by on either side, and they had been left unharmed. Their only anxiety was from the rats who had established themselves in their midst. The rats not only devoured large amounts of their portion of grain, but destroyed many young chickens. They would even attack half grown chickens. Though they could not carry them off bodily they would bite them severely; and after a chick had once been bitten by a rat, he seemed quite crazy, and instead of avoiding the rats, would seek their society, only to be bitten again and rendered more miserable. And those who associated freely with the rats, when at last they came to die often suffered agonies too terrible for description. In their delirium they would imagine that they were wrapped in the coils of a deadly serpent, or that they were being devoured by spiders and scorpions. At the same time they were tortured by an unquenchable thirst, and called continually upon the rats to relieve them. It would seem that such sufferings would be a warning to the rising generation but strange to say, the number of chickens who placed themselves under the power of the rats steadily increased.

Now you will say these were very foolish chickens. So they were. But then you can not expect chickens to be so very much wiser than men. At last matters came to such a pass, that every respectable chicken declared that something must be done. The hens thought, that as it was a matter in which they were concerned, they ought to have something to say about it on election days. But the roosters were horrified at the mere suggestion, and declared that it is no place for a hen in politics; and that it would be a most unmanly thing for a hen to vote.

So the cocks met in convention to discuss ways and means. Judge Black took the chair and called upon father White to state the object of the meeting. He reminded the assembly that he had seen more winters than any other two cocks in the yard; that he had helped to frame and execute the laws of the commonwealth. He wished to have it distinctly understood that he was in favor of the free institutions of the yard. But he had observed of late the growth of a force which was opposed to all free institutions. When he was young, there seemed to be but little real danger from the rats. But as years had gone by, the rat power had increased, till it had assumed gigantic proportions, and threatened the very existence of the commonwealth. It therefore seemed expedient to take some measures to restrict this power, and the meeting was called for this purpose. He said further that he understood young Feathertop, who had been a great traveler, had made a study of the matter, and so might have some suggestions to offer, which they would all be glad to hear. Young Feathertop arose, and thanking father White for his gracious introduction, said that he had lived in several different yards and in every one the ravages of the rats had caused more distress than all other evils combined. He had observed the workings of different plans for restricting their power, but in his judgment there was none that worked better than the one in operation on the Kansas farm. There a number of cats had been introduced which were quite a prohibitive of the rats. He therefore moved that three cats be procured to protect the community against the direful curse. At the end of Feathertop's speech a storm of indignation arose, such as was never before heard of. It was in vain that Judge Black called out, "Order, gentlecocks, order!" One said such a plan would be inhuman as well as impracticable, "for havn't the rats as good a right to live as any body?" Another shouted: "Feathertop is a fanatic." And the convention took up the cry, "Down with the fanatic! down with him!" Then they chased Feathertop, and pitched upon him with beak and spur, till they drove him out of the yard. Poor Feathertop, by this unlucky speech, lost all the favor he had earned by months of good conduct. Being well rid of the troublesome member the worthy assembly was finally reduced to order. A motion was then made to regulate the rat business by allowing only those rats in the yard who would pay a license of one hundred bushels of corn yearly. Professor Grey said the advantages of this measure were apparent. The business would be taken out of the low rat holes and put into the hands of big rats who could afford to pay the license. This would elevate the business and make it respectable. Treasurer Brown remarked that it would be very desirable to use some such means of increasing the public revenue, as since the rats had been among them, stealing not only life but provender, the supply of grain had not been equal to the demand.

Captain Game said he should like to be allowed to say a word in regard to that Kansas law they had heard about. He had been to the Kansas farm himself. He went on purpose to observe the workings of the new law. "And," said he, "fellowcockizens what do you think I saw while I was there? I will tell you what I saw. During my two weeks stay there, I saw as many as three lean looking rats, sneaking around under the fences. Now if that is not enough to prove that cats are a failure, I should like to know what is." (Applause.)

Much was said in favor of high license, and it may seem surprising that when the question was put to vote it was lost by a large majority. The truth is many of the cocks secretly favored the rats, and wished to have them stay. The convention sat with closed doors for several hours. Many plans were brought forward and much eloquence displayed. It was finally declared that a compromise had been made with the rats. By the payment of a half bushel of corn yearly the rats were to be permitted to stay, and continue their depredations as in the past.

The hens were not at all satisfied with the proceedings and set up a terrible cackling.

"Why!" said one who could cackle louder than the rest, "the rats will steal that half bushel of corn from us and go on just as bad as ever." But then you know a hen never amounts to much in an argument.

However, it turned out about as old Cackler said, and after a while a good many concluded that Feathertop's plan might be a good thing after all. The hens were quite decided on the subject, and though they could not vote, they were determined to keep up a cackling.

So they got together and formed a Wonderful Cackling Teetotaler's Union. As there was a law against rats carrying off young chickens they meant to see to it that the law was enforced. But as there were rats on the jury and some of the judges and lawyers looked very much like rats they found it a pretty hard thing to do. But they resolved to keep up their cackling whether or no; and they soon found out that they could do more than they thought at first. They had the training of all the young chickens so they signed a solemn league and covenant to teach their chicks from the very dawn of reason to beware of rats. The pullets agreed to have nothing to do with the rats, or with any young cock who associated with rats. This was a great movement in the right direction. But of course all the hens did not join the union, so there were many chicks who grew up without proper training. And then where rats and chickens are together in the same yard the rats are sure to capture some victims, as there are often foolish chicks even in the best of families. It is to be sincerely hoped that the cocks will become convinced of their error, and not only vote to try cats but see to it that they are kept in the yard and in sufficient force to overcome the rats.

WHY WE WEAR THE RIBBON.

It is but a little matter,
But you know when soldiers fight
They always bear the colors
Of the regiment well in sight.
So we who fight an enemy,
The murderous one called "Drink,"
Must bravely bear our colors,
And show we do not shrink
Before the blast of ridicule
That meets us every day,
But bear the banner of our King
In the thickest of the fray.

TOPIC: THE PLAGUE STAYED.

Lesson Text.—II. Samuel 24: 15-21.

Golden Text.—So the Lord was intreated for the land and the plague was stayed from Israel. II. Sam. 24: 25.

Time.—B. C. 1017.

Place.—Mount Moriah.

1. David had sinned through ambition of conquest. He had chosen to fall into God's hand for punishment rather than make his own choice of a penalty. If he thought thus to escape he presumed on both the mercy and justice of God. Punishment is as necessary as reward. Even God's anointed are not and cannot be exempt.

2. A question is often raised why Christians are afflicted and that so deeply. The answer is easy. Their voluntary relation to God imposes a responsibility that does not rest upon the worldling. They have vowed an allegiance to Him which if broken involves penalty. The student at college has taken upon him the obligation of its laws. He suffers privations in consequence that his brother who is outside college authority knows nothing of. A soldier enters the army. He is under special allegiance to the king. If he is placed on duty, and sleeps at his post, his life is the forfeit, though his friend who is a civilian may sleep eighteen hours out of the twenty-four without incurring any penalty.

3. It is sad that the people suffer for the sins of their rulers. Seventy thousand died ot the plague in consequence of David's sin—but it is generally true as well, that the people are in some way or other a party to that sin. It is often a sin on the part of the people, not to protest against and resist the sin of the ruler.

4. God stays His hand at the prayer of penitent souls. we may not understand the law by which Divine justice suspends execution at human importunity, but neither do we understand the law by which an acorn becomes an oak, nor the law of our own beginnings. The fact we accept, because the phenomena justify its acceptance, and go on praying with faith in Him who "repenteth Him self of the evil."

We believe however in the sacrifice of infinite righteousness, as made in Christ Jesus our Lord, as the real basis upon which God may be just and yet remit or restrain penalty.

5. There is no necessary connection in the two events, and yet the fact that the site of the temple of Jehovah was secured in the atonement of David for his sin, reminds us how often in our own lives, sin repented of and atoned for as far as we are able, brings us nearer to God and into His presence, which is the real temple, as never before. The broken spirit is a sacrifice God will not depise, and often our own sin and the sorrow and shame consequent upon it, are more powerful than any thing else in pulverizing pride and reducing self to nothing. "None of self and all of Thee" is the heart's conclusion only when it knows the real unworthiness of self. It is through many sad experiences that we gain this knowledge.

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best endorsement of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH AND THE TEMPERANCE REFORM.

The past week has marked the advent among us of a national representation of the Catholic total abstinence societies of America. The delegates from thirty states, two territories and several of the British provinces made up one of the most practically useful conventions which has deliberated in our midst for many a day. The clerical coat of the Catholic priest was elbow to elbow with the secular and business like habiliment of the Catholic parishioner. Irishmen predominated as to nationality and Pennsylvania as to state representation. The whole body was one of fine appearance, enthusiasm and business like methods.

The well heralded and bannered procession upon our streets was an object lesson to our citizens. "Wearing o' the green" was never coupled with more beneficent significance than as these true hearted men marched through the town in behalf of total abstinence.

The Rev. Father Cleary in opening the convention in a strong and well delivered address, gave utterance to such truths as these:

The protest of the total abstainers against the liquor traffic was not a protest against individuals, but an unqualified condemnation of the traffic, no matter who might be its friends.

Timid but well meaning men lengthened out the time when they should witness the final grand triumph of temperance ideas by their diffidence and lack of earnestness. They weakened the force of the strongest resistance to alcoholic influence by their groundless fears of fanaticism, while blind to the imminent dangers that threatened from extreme caution and dilatory action.

The voices of the two great political parties of the nation were heard but yesterday in this great city clamoring to seat their respective favorites in power. The present convention sought to place that man in power who was now a slave, and it worked that every man might fill the place of honor that gave a more than kingly dignity to his manhood, where he was master of himself and with no appetite to rivet on his chains.

Upon the acceptance of the annual report by the national secretary, Mr. Philip Nolan, it was found that fifty-seven new societies had been admitted during the year and an increase in membership of 2,448 was the result of the year's work. The total membership is less than we had supposed, being less than 40,000, and nearly half of them are in one state—Pennsylvania. But the work of extending the society is in earnest hands, and it will not be long, judging from present appearances, till the total abstinence society is co-extensive with the church itself.

A ticketed assembly crowded Central Music hall in the evening to its utmost capacity. Through the kindness of the Rev. Father Hagan, the W. C. T. U. of this city was given most eligible seats from which to see and hear. The chair was taken by Archbishop Feehan of Chicago, who made a brief address and then introduced Rt. Rev. John Ireland, co-adjutor bishop of St. Paul, who said:

Today the world is too much given to selfishness. The world needs heroes; men who are prepared to sacrifice their own pleasure and like the old crusaders forego their own interests for the good of Christianity. Ever since the Savior appeared on earth His spirit has accomplished the work planned, and it is His spirit that influences the members of the union. Intemperance was the vice that the masses at large were invited to practice. Set against it was the means, the methods, the evangelical forms of combating it—the course of total abstinence. It was temperance, not total abstinence, it was claimed, that was wanted; but not so, only the sublime degree of the virtue of temperance would suffice. Too late was the day to talk of the ravages that intemperance made in the land, for all had listened to the shrieks of wives and children and looked on the wrecks it had wrought—had seen even society endangered. All knew that there was scarce an evil that did so much harm to the individual, to the society and to the church. Why, then, should not intelligent, strong men raise up a barrier against the extraordinary evil? Extraordinary measures should be adopted to combat it. One of the principal practices to be employed in the battle was that of praying, but God demanded not that alone, but personal zeal among his followers, and when special effort was put forth God would honor by the gift of special power. Men were free agents. Folding their arms and praying would not have the desired effect. It was necessary for them to act. All the world should be let know that they themselves were above suspicion, as was done by their taking the pledge, after which their zeal necessarily became greater. Temperate men, but men who were not total abstainers, were cowardly in their attack. The soldiers in the movement should be total abstainers, and then their own sacrifice would compel attention, and the world would admit that they were honest; their position would inspire confidence.

Public opinion should be changed, the weak made strong, and the strong encouraged to vigorous effort. That could be done by organization in parishes and by moral suasion. Moral suasion was in the very front ground of battle. But there were other methods also. Opponents of the cause were so shortsighted they saw nothing else; but, though total abstainers gave it all the prominence it should be given, they were prepared to appeal to the laws of the land. The law as it had been administered in America had been brought to the service of alcohol. Men engaged in the liquor traffic had been able to secure the passage of laws in their interest, and to make a dead letter of laws directed against them. The laws should be remodeled. It was useless to work among men who were so weak they had no desire for reformation. The weakness of a great portion of mankind made legislation in their behalf necessary, The laws to be passed on the subject should go as far as the need of the citizens demanded. There were many dead letter laws. The church, as well as the state, approved of the laws forbidding the sale of liquor to habitual drunkards, and also of the law for the proper observance of the Sabbath. Every opportunity should be taken to have those laws enforced. The liquor men were bold; they had gone far, and were striving to go farther. Soon would come the cry, halt! and then the traffic would be stopped. The freeing of the people from the domination of the saloon element was the mission of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union. The union should teach how the ballot could best be used. The ballot was a strong weapon. By it the liquor power had been enabled to continue in supemacy. By it the downfall of that power should be accomplished.

The applause and enthusiasm which followed this address showed that the heart of the delegation was with the speaker, and that of the audience as well.

Archbishop Elder of Cincinnati, the successor of Archbishop Purcell, followed, and his words were no less pungent in their reference to prohibition as well as total abstinence. "Let no one say we are not for moral suasion," said he, "for we are—let no one say we are for moral suasion alone, for we are not."

Archbishop Elder is of a small wiry frame, but it seemed tremulous with repressed feeling as he preached the duty of law enforcement. Said he, "If a king complains that he cannot enforce the laws of his kingdom, you tell him to abdicate. In this land where the people are king, let the people abdicate if they can do no better."

Bishop Spalding of Illinois who is a man of refined and cultured manner and appearance, read an address which contrary to expectation, lost nothing by being read rather than delivered offhand as were the speeches of all the rest. His animadversions upon Sunday desecration, and newspapers which were the bulletins of crime, were timely and well received. He answered the objection that if the principle underlying prohibition were carried to its ultimate consequences it would change government into the most odious of tyrannies by saying:

Precisely what distinguished a statesman from a doctrinaire, the framers of the American constitution from the authors of the reign of terror, was the knowledge that political principles were not always to be pushed to their ultimate consequences; that practice and speculation were not the same thing, and consequently it did not follow, because one was a prohibitionist, that, therefore, he ought to be in favor of a law to forbid women the luxury of tight-lacing. The political axiom that the will of the people was the supreme law, would, if insisted upon, justify all possible tyrannies, of which the majority might approve, and was, if taken in a logical and not a practical sense, in contradiction with freedom of conscience, which was the basis of civil liberty.

Bishop Watterson of Ohio endorsed all that had been said by his brethern in a short speech and was followed by several laymen whose main burden was their thankfulness that the hierarchy of the church had come up to this high level of thought and effort in the temperance reform. It is noticeable that all churches are alike in this regard. It is, as a rule, the laity who first mount the heights of reform—and as in the days of Hosea the prophet so now—it is 'like people, like priest.'

The resolutions adopted by the convention declare for strict and total abstinence—for law enforcement, for restriction of the traffic to whatever extent may be deemed best in the wisdom of Catholic citizens, and against any encouragement of the liquor interests by voters. Looked at in all its bearings this convention is a source of great encouragement to all temperance workers. And not the least of its ministries is that it brings us all together with a feeling of comradeship not possible before. The grand army of temperance has greater solidarity and firmer brotherhood for the fourteenth annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society of America.

It is said of us all that sometimes we strain our eyes to see the good that is far off, overlooking that which is nearest at hand. This was surely our editorial blunder last week when the name of Wheaton college was omitted from the list of those characterized by sympathy with the temperance reform. There is not only sympathy at Wheaton, there is the most active co-operation. Its president, Rev. C. A. Blanchard, and its professors, among them Prof. Fischer, who with the president has done such valuable service on the temperance platform, are all strong advocates of the cause. Its trustees, twenty in number, and among them "our very own" Mrs. L. H. Plumb, (for Wheaton believes not only in co-educating, but in co-honoring) are all staunch friends of the temperance reform. Every student who was a legal voter in the town last spring, voted to put prohibition in place of license and succeeded, greatly to the comfort and peace of the town. There is no institution in the country, east or west, which stands out so grandly as the friend of all moral reforms, as the propagandist of so many ideas which should be enshrined in government as well as cherished by the people, as does Wheaton College, and the stupidity which overlooked it on the hunt for good things deserves the castigation which we hereby give ourselves. One thing more, Wheaton College authorities not only forbid students the use of intoxicants, but tobacco, and on a recent evening when it was the writer's good fortune to stand before these students, a finer, cleaner looking body of young men, it was never her good fortune to see. As to the young women, it goes without saying that their faces were pure, sweet, refined and earnest.

Blackburn University at Carlinville, Ill., should be named as one which gives most cordial welcome to temperance speakers and raises high the standard of all moral effort.

Westminster College, of New Wilmington, Pa., sends us word as to the healthful atmosphere surrounding it, arising from the fact that local prohibition drives out all whisky malaria.

Will the author of "Teddy" please give us her name and address.

Mrs. Sibley writes from Georgia, that some of the most prominent citizens of that state will vote for St. John in November, no matter what his prospects for election may be, simply to add to the volume of prohibition power in the government.

It is a little odd to note that she pictures many other Democratic prohibitionists as so afraid of the Republican party that they will vote for their party anyhow, just see every day Republican prohibitionists so fearful of the Democrats that they too will vote for party before principle.

The Prohibition party thus becomes the only one that is not sectional.

The Dakota W. C. T. U. is out with a program for its annual convention, which occurs September 2 and 3, at Mitchell.

Tennessee now has thirty unions. Mrs. Harrison th president, and Mrs. Saxon the organizer have wrought mightily to the building up of these strongholds.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens is helping in Maine, and the Portland Press speaks of her as graceful and self-possessed, with devotion to the work written upon every lineament of her expressive face, her eloquent words find ready response in the hearts of her hearers.

Miss Kimball, too, is at work for constitutional prohibition in the state of the Maine law. When she was in the White Mountains a short time since, she charmed the "summer resorters" so wisely that temperance and the W. C. T. U. were greatly profited thereby.

The Rahway (N. J.) W. C. T. U. mothers a Reform Club of 500 pledged members.

Mrs. Ellen Watson, the "never-say-die" forerunner of temperance day in the week of prayer, had a petition on the ground at Belfast during the session of the Pan-Presbyterian council which has so recently closed.

Many people think that this indefatigable worker has nothing to do but sit at her desk and fulminate the lightning bolts that strike ever and anon in all parts of the country where church people most do congregate. I happen to know however that she riseth while it is yet night in order to prepare meat for her farmer household, seventeen strong, and that she is with all this, able to get into town (she lives six miles out) at eight o'clock in the morning to consult with the president of the W. C. T. U.

A real tonic to her has been the activity of organization in the state. Pennsylvania will lead the list this year, I should think, with its 141 new unions.

The Carlinville (Ill.) W. C. T. U. are bright in invention. They circulate a well displayed circular which gives a list of all the dram shop keepers of the town with the bondsmen of each. By this it appears that two of the bondsmen are members of the board of education. Which educates most, the school or the saloon, especially when the directors of the one are also the foundation of the other?

Col. Nate Reed, in a answering a Fourth of July toast "Our State," set it down as one of its chief glories that Illinois is the home of Frances E. Willard and Mrs. John A. Logan.

Mrs. P. D. Browne, president of northern California W. C. T. U., secured one Sabbath for her cause in the Pacific Coast Chautauqua assembly at Monterey. Three other summer meetings have been held under these auspices, at which all our lines of work were fully discussed.

Miss Casseday has been prostrated recently by the draft upon her affectionate sympathies in the death of her sister's beautiful child. She is getting stronger now, and will soon let the U. S. hear from her.

The Cameron (Mo.) W. C. T. U. has recently feted and feasted the editors of the town. Why not? editors have "pheelinks" as well as other folks. They give their pens and types to many a good work which when done, they are forgotten. This ought not so to be.

Mrs. Harriman's address on this occasion is said to have been very fine.

Mrs. La Fetra says that the W. C. T. U. keeps "open house" in Washington all through the "heated term." Mrs. Wells, Indiana's president, recently "helped those women" at their Soldiers' Home and Seamen's Bethel meetings, greatly to their delight. Mrs. Wells is at home again now after a very successful term of eastern engagements.

* * *

Mrs. C. L. Roach, president of the District of Columbia, with her family is spending the summer at Brightwood, four miles from the capital, among the trees and flowers.

On Duty.

News From the Field.

CUTTINGS FROM PENNSYLVANIA TO MAINE.

We are often told "The Germans will have their beer." Hence let us do away with whisky and have beer saloons just to accommodate the Germans. Iowa tried this plan for years. Thus throwing the responsibility of beer saloons upon the Germans reminds me of Henry Ward Beecher's story of a whole family that went to the circus just to accommodate one little child that wanted to see the animals. It is true that the brewing is done chiefly by Germans. At the recent national convention of brewers almost every delegate bore a German name. Still thousands upon thousands of Americans are found among beer drinkers, while some of the best temperance people I know are Germans. Said my host in Allentown, Pa.: "There are four in our store; not one uses any kind of strong drink including beer, cider, or tobacco, and only one uses coffee." He gave an added thought which it would be well for all to ponder: "Neither do I think it right to visit restaurants to indulge in expensive dishes that are not shared by my family. Restaurants are not for men who have homes and can be there at meal time. So, when invited to step in and have a dish of oysters, I decline. I prefer to eat oysters with my family."

At Guthsville, my address was given in a temperance hall owned by the Sons of Temperance, who have had an organization there forty years. The meetings until recently have always been conducted in the German language. I was introduced in German as well as English, and never was so sorry as then that I had not two tongues.

A charter member was present who could understand but little of my tongue but with other older members gave me a grasp of the hand that spoke a common language. I appreciated the situation next morning when I attended German Reformed church. "Moses and the prophets," "Jesus Christ," and "Mine Father's house," was all I understood, but that sufficed. Whatever the rest sang in closing to the tune of Old Hundred, I sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

At Macunchie, Sabbath evening a large union meeting was held in the German Lutheran church. Again was I presented in two languages and never more kindly received by pastor or people. At the close the pastor said: "I am glad to be able to tell our speaker that our church has a total abstinence membership."

Oh, that translated literature might be scattered, and German workers increased, was my prayer as I left the Lehigh Valley.

In the same column in which this wish was expressed in my last letter to The Union Signal, I found this response as answer. Please print it again:

Rev. L. Pfeifer, Beaver Falls, Pa., is ready to enter the field of German work for total abstinence and prohibition. He has studied the nature of the alcoholics and their effects on the human system, and is now occupied in translating Julia Colman's Catechism on Alcohol into German, hoping there will be a call for its publication in that tongue. He may be written to at Beaver Falls, Beaver Co., Pa.

Returning home with my school girls, after three days went to fill a postponed engagement in Worcester, Mass., under auspices of W. C. T. U. An unusually pleasant children's meeting was held in Plymouth Congregational church in the afternoon and a mass meeting in Piedmont church in the evening. The plan of holding children's meetings in the various churches is proving successful. Mrs. Palmer, the president, (my hostess) seems very devoted in all her work. The last week has been spent in Maine, two evenings at York, which was the first incorporated city in New England. It is becoming a popular seaside resort. Five hotels and almost innumerable cottages nestle amid its rocks and give life and beauty to its magnificent beach. Passing a cozy cottage I was told Longfellow's daughters spend their summers here.

Here as at Alford, Augusta, Kennebunk, So. Berwick, I found most earnest advocates for the amendment. At Clinton I found an earnest W. C. T. U. organized eight years ago. Semi-monthly meetings are held without interruption and well attended.

Upon arriving found forty women gathered under the refreshing shade of Maine's famous trees, where a bountiful repast was spread. I was told "We always have refreshments." Thus the meetings advance temperance sentiment, promote social intercourse, and afford a restful change from the often too monotonous duties of every-day life. All desire constitutional prohibition, not only state but national.

I must mention a brief stay at the delightful home of Miss Lord, the faithful state secretary of W. C. T. U. I did not see an intoxicated person in Maine.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

I beg to be again allowed the privilege of writing a few lines on the temperance work in the far off province of British Columbia. A year ago this place was visited by Miss Frances E. Willard, who planted here the tree of temperance and who organized that band of noble and courageous workers known as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Although not the only band of workers here they are certainly the most religious, and give not only to themselves but to all the other organizations a high moral tone and an earnest zeal which together with intelligent brains and consecrated hearts, must be successful in winning many recruits from all ranks in life. This society have just held their first annual convention and the reports which have been read were both encouraging and instructive and show that temperance sentiment is growing faster and farther in this province than we had any reason to believe or hope for from one year's work.

The citizens of Victoria and New Westminster as well as the members of the W. C. T. U. have been afforded a rich intellectual treat in the lectures which have just been delivered by Mrs. Judith E. Foster, and as our provincial secretary, Hon. J. Robson, prettily put it in his address of welcome to her, she indeed has come to water the beautiful tree of temperance which a year ago Miss Willard planted.

Mrs. Foster is a woman not only with a mind capable of penetrating the deepest thought, but of impressing that thought on her audience in such a forcible, logical, interesting and winning way, that they not only are convinced that her views which are founded on the Bible on all temperance, moral and religious questions are right, but her arguments take such a strong hold on all minds that one can not go away without retaining many clear thoughts and much valuable information. It is not often we are visited by those who lecture on this subject, but certainly if our province is only visited once in twelve months by such persons as Miss Willard and Mrs. Foster the temperance work will receive an impetus which nothing could excel, and we hope that it will not be long before our province will be ripe for total prohibition.

OREGON.

MRS. J. ELLEN FOSTER AT CORVALLIS.

Another "red letter day" in our W. C. T. U. annals when Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster came to give us the treat of one of her addresses. We had just been reading in The Union Signal how Southern California came out to welcome her, throwing open her thousand seated churches, and we began to think how small we should seem in her eyes, but we did our little best with music and mottoes, flowers and many up-turned faces in our City Hall. Mrs. Foster was so pleased with the offering of our last year's president, Mrs. Nora Williams, and her words of welcome, that she wanted to have them in The Union Signal too, so here they are:

"Mrs. Foster:—It is in the hearts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to give you a warm welcome. Words fail to express our sentiments, and in casting about in our minds for a fitting expression of our tender regard for you and our high appreciation of your labors and your presence with us this evening we bethought ourselves of a basket of flowers, which simple token I now offer you.

"You will see that it is varied in hue. May its many colors suggest to you the many plans of work adopted by our union to obtain the one great purpose, and as all colors properly blended form the white, which is the center piece of this offering, so may our plans of work be blended and carried on in such a manner that, ere long the white banner of total abstinence and prohibition shall wave over our land and our nation be proclaimed free from the curse of intemperance.

"The evergreen which you see interwoven with these colors, shall be an emblem of the cause of temperance in our hearts, until this end be accomplished, and the white ribbon shall be a sign unto you that we are private soldiers in the grand white ribbon army of which we are proud to call you one of our noble generals.

"From this station we send with you this blessing:

"'The Lord bless thee and keep thee. The Lord make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in, from this time forth, and even forever more.'

"In behalf of the people of Corvallis, and of Corvallis W. C. T. U. I extend to you a cordial greeting."

Our national war cry was high up over Mrs. Foster's head. She could not see it but the audience could, and it kept her text right in their minds. Have the pioneer women of Oregon lost the faith which brought them to this well favored and tempered climate? They traveled six weary months across the plains a band of missionaries. The very threshold was made sacred by one of their number folding her arms in an axe-hewn grave, while she held within their grasp her new born infant. Standing over that grave the love of God in the soul waxes warm in the hearts of the women of Oregon. They will work as handmaids of God's church into which they have been dedicated in infancy, and to which anew they have consecrated themselves. They will work to cast out from that church "whatever defileth," and to "gather in all to whom the Spirit says come."

What woman does not love her home? Why she loves to have the sidewalk clean that leads up to it, and takes broom in hand herself to cleanse it. Brother man why make it hard for her to keep her sidewalk clean? The circle embracing home narrows in, while it deepens round her. Her boy is her own, she can keep him pure and good by her counsel and her word of love. No, she can't. Brother man, the meshes of the genteel saloon are gilded. You say to her boy: There is no harm entering there, all is refined and nice. She pleads in vain; manly companions have a more persuasive voice. He enters in and God only knows what will become of him a little later on. Home is degraded too by the very man who sought his bride; placed her there, and called her its queen. Bye and bye, she feels for her crown. Where is it? for her scepter? It is gone! Yet she is a queen still, but she will have to fight the liquor traffic for her kingdom.

Who says woman may not love her country and show her love by her works? She may work for the good of her country. What is for the good and profit of the country? All industries are for the country's good. What is an industry? The bestowing of labor on raw material by which its saleable value is both actually and proportionately increased.

Now is the liquor traffic an industry? Your own mouth answers, No! So down with this traffic! But now comes the question, Is the state entitled to abolish, that is to prohibit, the liquor traffic from the point of view of constitutional law? Let us test this for a moment. What is the state? The people of the state, men, women, aye the little children too. Women, do you say? Are women citizens? Can they perform the citizen's duty and help to make the laws which bind them at every town? Not yet, but their day has dawned, and the clear light shines from the east to the west. The people of the state, yes, then the principle of self-preservation must come into play for the state, which rules the lives and actions of every individual, young and old, male and female, constituting the body politic. The individual sees an extended fist, a swinging club, a deadly weapon, and appropriate remedies are instantly and naturally suggested, proportioned to the impending danger. If then the state, that is the people of the state, recognize the deadly weapon of the liquor traffic, worse than threatening, actually striking at the homes, happiness and lives of the individuals constituting the state, who is so dense or so interested, as not freely to admit the state's right, (not to regulate and license,) but to destroy now and forever the deadliest enemy, in whatever Protean form it may be masquerading.

I wish I were a true press reporter, as then my short hand notes would have come to my aid. They would have been but imperfect help, for they could not have given the sparkle with which the address was given, the true logical sequence was of course the back bone, but the warmth of tone and manner, the merry twinkle of the eye, the life and play of imagination, enough quaintness of humor to call out a laugh, and in a few moments pathos enough to bring up tears. Mrs. Foster understands the use of the ninth and last part of speech according to the old fashioned grammar of my youth, the Interjection!

TENNESSEE.

The friends of temperance everywhere, have cause to rejoice over the good work going on in Tennessee. Mrs. E. L. Saxon, state organizer for the Prohibition Alliance and the W. C. T. U., has been doing noble work this summer.

In April she was engaged by the Prohibition Alliance, with the understanding that she was to work for both organizations. She has worked faithfully and accomplished much. Between April 15, and July 26, she delivered two addresses daily, Sundays not excepted, speaking to large and attentive crowds, and seeing everywhere the good seed sown springing up with promise of an abundant harvest. Within six weeks she organized twenty-five W. C. T. U's. and seven prohibition clubs; besides obtaining a large subscription to temperance newspapers, notably The Union Signal. She has sown temperance literature broadcast over the state, which, doubtless will yield its harvest in good season.

Her progress through middle Tennessee has been a continued ovation. Everywhere enthusiastic crowds have listened and applauded, editors have eulogized; the best men, ministers, doctors, lawyers and politicians have declared her eloquence most persuasive, and her arguments unanswerable; earnest women have crowded around her, with warm hand clasps and tearful words of gratitude and sympathy; flowers have been showered upon her, hospitable doors opened to her and every evidence given of a deep interest in the cause she represented.

She returned to Memphis, July 26, and rested at the home of her daughter, four days. She entered upon her second campaign July 30, at Collierville. From that date until August 23 she has daily appointments. After the 23rd she expects to return to Memphis for a ten days' rest, and then to resume work and fill daily appointments, until the meeting of the state convention, the last week in October. She will have a cheering report for the national convention.

KANSAS.

The interest in the work of the W. C. T. U. is growing rapidly. Organizations have increased during the present year from less than thirty active unions to one hundred and eighteen. This is the result of a great deal of prayerful effort on the part of those entrusted with the interests of the cause. The Kansas Prohibitionist has also helped materially. Early in the year the state union accepted an offer of the free use of its columns. Mrs.

Slosson, of Leavenworth, was chosen editor, and the influence it wields has been quite marked. To none other can we attribute the interest that addresses inquiries in regard to organization so frequently to the state officers.

Next to organization, the effort to secure scientific temperance instruction in our schools is engaging our attention. The state superintendent has a plan of work that does not include the laborious and unremunerative task of petitioning. Should the state convention think this unwise, there will be time between its close and the convening of the legislature to do it thoroughly. The leading educators of the state, the state superintendent of public instruction, many of the conductors of teachers' institutes, the governor of the state, anti-prohibitionist, though he be, and the candidates for governor, all endorse the plan, and an effort will be made to have the governor and state superintendent of public instruction recommend it in their message and report to the law makers of the state.

On July 26, 1883, the loyal citizens of Osage county organized to enforce the prohibition law. On July 26, 1884, the anniversary of this organization was appropriately celebrated, W. C. T. Unions and Bands of Hope of the county assisting. Our state organizer, Mrs. Drusilla Wilson, was also present, and in speaking made significant the rather amusing fact that the little girls of the Barclay Band of Hope carried a banner on which was a motto which I cannot repeat, but which predicted woe to King Alcohol "when we shall vote." A valuable paper was read which gave a history of the union, including statistics carefully gathered. Appended is an extract from this history:

|---|---|
| Number of liquor cases brought in the district court of Osage county, Kas., from July 26, 1883, to July 26, 1884 | 33 |
| Number of convictions and pleas of guilty | 22 |
| Number of acquittals | 0 |
| Number cases dismissed by county attorney | 1 |
| Number now pending, defendant in custody | 1 |
| Number now pending, defendant not arrested | 9 |
| Number cases carried to supreme court | 3 |
| Number cases continued under bond for appearance and good behavior | 14 |
| Amount of fines assessed | $2,200 |
| Amount of fines paid | $750 |
| Number defendants sentenced to jail | 2 |
| Number now in jail | 3 |
| Aggregate imprisonment in days | 120 |
| Aggregate amount of costs | $3,000 |
| Aggregate amount of costs paid | $1,650 |

The above was accomplished at an expense to the Osage County Prohibition Union of about $900. In the fourteen cases mentioned where defendants plead guilty and gave bond for appearance and good behavior the fines have not yet been assessed, and will not be until the court is satisfied that the defendants have violated the prohibitory law again.

One defendant, a female, was released by the board of county commissioners from the payment of a fine of one hundred dollars. The costs of three cases now pending in the supreme court, amount to $900. So much success has never attended any other class of criminal cases.

The influence of this effort to enforce prohibition has been felt in our criminal courts. At the last session of the district court the only criminal cases on the docket were violations of the prohibitory law—a condition of things before unknown—and a careful examination of the records of the justice's courts and those of the police judges reveals a decrease of forty-four per cent. of criminal cases, while the returns of our assessors show an increase in population. Why? The principal cause of crime, the saloon, was almost destroyed. Kill the cause and you kill the effect. Abolish intemperance, and crime will almost cease. F. R.

NEW JERSEY.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

Our state W. C. T. U. met in convention in the tabernacle at Ocean Grove, July 9, Mrs. Downs presiding. Our first session was set apart for young people and children's meeting. After devotional exercises Mrs. Baldwin of Newark, state superintendent of Juvenile Work, gave one of her rare blackboard talks and illustrations on the total abstinence question. The boys and girls of Asbury Park and Ocean Grove listened attentively to her instructions. Indeed, we older children received help in the great work before us. She gave also a chemical illustration of the process of distilling alcohol from beer, obtaining a tablespoonful of alcohol, and its genuineness was proven by setting fire to the liquid and consuming it. The evening session, after devotional exercises, led by Mrs. Emma Browne, was devoted to the reception of visitors. Address of welcome by Mrs. Crane, president of W. C. T. U. of Ocean Grove and Asbury Park; also letter of welcome from Rev. Dr. Stokes, who could not be present. Responses by Mrs. Hammer, our National Superintendent of Juvenile Work and by Mrs. J. T. Ellis, state secretary. Short addresses followed from distinguished workers sojourning at the Grove. A touching speech from Major Scott received hearty applause. Mrs. Seabrook of Keyport, superintendent of Legislative Work, appealed to all voters to cast their ballots for God and home. Her quick flashes of wit and humor, backed by stubborn facts, kept the house full of laughter. Rev. J. B. Miller of Nebraska stated that the hardest blow given to the liquor dealers in that state was that the law demanded the closing of saloons at 10 p. m., thus cutting off the most remunerative hours of the day.

Thursday, the 10th, at 9:30 a. m. a temperance love feast was conducted by Mrs. M. C. Nobles, vice president. At 10:30 a workers' conference opened led by Mrs. J. T. Ellis, the question box being in charge of Mrs. H. B. Anderson, superintendent of Sunday School Work. Five minute speeches were made by a number of these workers concerning the outlook of their special departments. At 12 noon-tide prayer. At 2 p. m. devotional exercises led by Mrs. Denman of Newark.

Convention called to order at 3 o'clock by Mrs. Downs. Mrs. M. G. Baldwin addressed the convention on the importance of temperance instruction being introduced into our schools, so that the children of the land might understand the question in all its aspects. Mrs. Pearson of England followed and held us spell-bound for more than an hour. The house was crowded and all around outside the people stood catching her words of cheer. Restful and joyful the people sat receiving the truth as it fell from her consecrated lips. She won all hearts to her by her grand, loyal and loving spirit. Out of courtesy to our Christian cousin from over the water the English flag and our stars and stripes were formed into a large shield and placed over the pulpit, with our national motto "For God and Home and Native Land" wrought across it and W. C. T. U. in the center. A poem recited by Jessie Ellis, daughter of our J. T. Ellis, who is being trained for future usefulness in the good work, being a representative of the juvenile department. At 7 p. m. devotions led by Mrs. J. P. Perry of Ocean Grove. During the evening Mrs. Collins, one of the Crusaders of 1874, of Pittsburgh, was introduced. She was one who had been cast into prison with thirty-three of her co-workers. Mrs Major Scott made a short but very effective address. Dr Ball also gave a five minute speech concerning his own work in New Jersey. Then Mrs. J. T. Ellis, For God and Home and Native Land as her theme grandly, urged the claims of home and protection from the crushing effects of the liquor traffic, begging all who hold the ballot to cast it for their wives and children and for the redemption of our land from the curse of alcohol. At the close the choir sang "Home, Sweet Home." Gen. C. B. Fiske announced in a short speech that hereafter, "So help me God, I will vote against this great evil." Now the voice of our orator from beyond the sea is again heard in logical and scriptural arguments against man's greatest foe. Cheer on cheer was given to this electric light of Nottingham, as she spoke on these all absorbing questions, total abstinence and prohibition.

Dr. Stokes very kindly invited us to come next year, and Mrs. Downs responded with, "Thank you, doctor, we will come." Every hour spent at the Grove was a benediction.

At the close of the convention a special meeting was announced for the evening to consider the question, "What are you going to do about it?" Dr. Stokes led the meeting and opened the discussion, committing himself to prohibition. Others followed and pledged themselves to vote for the overthrow of the liquor traffic. The discussion became intensely interesting. Mrs. J. T. Ellis made a powerful appeal to voters and all Christians, followed by Mrs. Pearson of England in her happiest mood. Every prop was removed from the undecided, and we felt sure that the days of the Liquor League were numbered.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Chews Landing.—The ladies of this place are about moving against their one tavern in the organization of a W. C. T. U. which shall put forth a vigorous crusade against all intoxicants.

Atlantic City.—The rum men of this city have purchased meadow lands, to be deeded FREE to men who, in consideration, would sign liquor licenses. It is likely to get the rum lords into trouble. This little scheme has not even the merit of originality. A similar trick was tried in Elizabeth (State Excise Board, at the relation of Smith vs. Board of Excise of Elizabeth) but signally failed, as it undoubtedly will in this instance. The suit against the Atlantic City rummies was brought by the Temperance Alliance. All those liquor men whose licenses were secured by these bogus signers are now without authority to sell intoxicants and their cases will not come before the court until September.

Ocean Grove.—Mrs. Nobles, our vice president, and Rev. J. E. Lake, planned for meetings and entertainment, in this quiet temperance summer resort. We had a good audience at each of our seven sessions and the people heard us gladly. Our Sabbath services opened at 9 A. M. by a love feast, led by Mrs. Crane. At 10:30 Mrs. Pearson's Bible reading and sermon from the text "God so loved the world" etc., touched all hearts. The children and young people's meeting Sabbath afternoon, led by Mrs. Baldwin, gave much pleasure to those who had never witnessed her gospel way of teaching temperance truths, and I am quite sure they will be ready to aid in the good work.

On Monday afternoon a W. C. T. U. was organized with Mrs. M. B. McMartin, president; Miss Hattie Vail, corresponding secretary; Miss Josie Leonard, recording secretary. This new union was to meet the coming week to plan for work and we hope much from it with Mrs. Nobles its willing aid. Later an excursion from Newark's first W. C. T. U. visited the Grove, six hundred and fifty strong. An informal meeting was held with them in Janes Memorial Tabernacle at 3:30 p. m. A short service of prayer, song and repeating Bible promises was followed by earnest speeches from Major Scott and Mrs. J. T. Ellis. A parlor meeting was held recently at the Sheldon House, conducted by Mrs. Ward Woodruff, state superintendent; addresses from Mrs. Ellis and Mrs. Pearson; over one hundred ladies present.

July 18, Mrs. Downs, Ellis, Woodruff, Scott, and Perry, held a meeting at Red Bank with a view to organize a W. C. T. U. A meeting was also held in the evening when Mrs. Ellis gave one of her best addresses.

EASTERN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. for Eastern Washington Territory was held at Walla Walla, April 1 and 2, 1884. Mrs. M. G. C. Leavitt, presiding.

The officers elected for the coming year are: President, Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, Cheney; corresponding secretary, Miss Eliza R. Hatch, Dayton; recording secretary, Mrs. J. A. C. Merriman, Cheney; treasurer, Mrs. J. B. Allen, Walla Walla, W. T.

Superintendent Departments:—

Heredity—Mrs. Dr. M. H. Whitney, Cheney.

Hygiene—Mrs. Dr. Sanford, Cheney.

LOUSIANA.

We have now seventeen well organized unions in our state (white unions) and about seven colored unions, the latter are hard to keep organized. Several unions are just about being formed. At Brookstown in this parish we held a gospel meeting last Sunday evening and are to go out again next Sunday, when we hope to organize a good working union there. Mr. Goodale and I have accepted a call from the "Preachers' Prohibition Association" of East Feliciana parish to go to Clinton and Jackson and help them. They wrote, "On the 4th of August we are to vote 'for license' or 'against license'. We are doing our best, we have aroused the monster. We need help. It is the Macedonian cry, 'Come over and help us'."

I had a letter last night begging me to come to the aid of some unions in the northern portion of Louisiana. Our scientific temperance education bill bore the approval of our State Medical association and New Orleans Sanitary association and strong men were interested in it but all did not avail, I own it with shame, but a few thousands would have carried any bill through. I am not discouraged but will work with more zeal and more earnestness, and having more experience and knowledge perhaps with more success. Mary R. Goodale.

ILLINOIS.

Flanagan.—Our union was organized last March with seven members, but has steadily increased until we now number thirty-four pledged and paying members. We went into the work with fear and trembling, but leaning on the strong arm of the Lord, and today we feel to thank God and take courage.

On Saturday, July 27, Mrs. L. S. Rounds came to spend a few days with us. We had planned a woman's meeting for that afternoon, but the clouds, which had been gathering all day, grew blacker and more threatening, and she had just arrived and got safely housed when the rain fell in torrents making a meeting for that day impossible.

On Sunday afternoon Mrs. Rounds held a children's meeting and lectured in the evening. The house was filled to overflowing. The audience paid marked attention while she sent truths home to their hearts and consciences with a clearness and force that carried conviction with them. At the close of her address she appealed to the gentlemen in her jovial and spirited manner to help the women by a liberal contribution. A collection was taken and $8 raised.

A woman's meeting was appointed for Monday afternoon at the Christian church, and when the time came, although there was every indication of an approaching storm, a goodly number assembled and Mrs. R. gave them a plain talk upon alcoholic heredity and the duties and responsibilities of mothers. Two of those present joined our union. At four o'clock the children came in and a Band of Hope was organized with twenty-four members. In the evening she spoke again to a full house. A collection was taken of $5.30. Two gentlemen signed the pledge; five ladies joined our union, and the Band of Hope gained six members.

On Tuesday a reception was tendered Mrs. Rounds at the residence of one of our members, and Mrs. R. left us for new fields of labor. As the result of her three days' work among us we have had two public addresses, which were rare treats to us; our union has received seven members; we have a Band of Hope which now numbers forty pledged members; we have been strengthened and encouraged for the conflict, and financially we are better off than before; the collections and dues from our new members meeting all of our expenses and leaving a surplus of $3.50 to go into our treasury, and we trust seed has been sown that shall bring forth fruit after many days. M. A. Walton, Pres.

FRANKLIN GROVE MEETING.

The first of the series of temperance camp meetings that are to be held this season under the auspices of the Illinois W. C. T. U., opened at Franklin Grove on Saturday afternoon, August 9th. The opening session was devoted to a discussion of the various lines of state work. Miss West gave a most interesting account of the work accomplished during the year, dwelling especially upon the advance made in young ladies' work, and the missionary work of the southern part of the state. Through the conventions held and the earnest work done by Mrs. L. S. Rounds, the work in that part of our state has receive a new impetus.

Our legislative work was presented by Mrs. Mary B. Willard. In accordance with the plan of work adopted at Alton, every effort is being made to secure a legislature pledged to support woman's ballot and scientific temperance instruction.

Saturday evening found the spacious "preaching tent" crowded. After the opening devotional service, Mrs. Willard told of the great demonstration made by the Catholic Total Abstinence association at its recent annual meeting in Chicago.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster followed Mrs. Willard with a stirring address, in which she gave the latest news from Iowa, and the Pacific coast and northern territories, especially dwelling on the beneficent results of woman's work at the polls in Washington territory. "Mothers are just as much mothers as before they voted," she said, "and babies cry in the same key."

The concluding address, by Miss Helen L. Hood, was short, but full of the "strong meat" upon which the temperance men and women need to be fed, that they may have the strength the hour demands. Much anxiety had been expressed by our Republican friends lest an influence be exerted for Third Party. All unconscious of this Miss Hood was constrained to give expression to her own strong convictions, and so the ball was started that acquired wonderful momentum before the meeting closed.

Sunday's session opened with a consecration meeting at 8:30 led by Miss Hood, in which the Spirit of God was manifestly present. The children's meeting at 9:30, conducted by Miss Gordon, was one of the most interesting of the day. The words of Miss Hood, Mrs. Willard and Miss Gordon not only interested and pleased the children, but were such as must leave their impress, and be manifested in their lives.

When the hour for Miss Willard's morning address had arrived an audience of three thousand had gathered, and as she told of the work of the W. C. T. U. along the line of gospel temperance, the advance made in the departments of franchise and scientific temperance, the interest and enthusiasm her words aroused were evinced by tears and cries of "Good," "That's so," and hearty "Amens."

The purpose of a mysterious meeting of the ladies of the district at the close of this session was an evident surprise to their worthy president, Mrs. Mingle, she never dreaming that they thought it necessary to place a watch upon her movements, until Mrs. Huff, of Sterling, with brief but eloquent words placed a silken cord about her neck to which a beautiful gold watch was attached. Mrs. Mingle's surprise and pleasure at this substantial proof of the estimation placed upon her work by the women of the district were evident, though expressed in a few tearful words.

At 2:30 a still larger audience greeted Mrs. Foster, and her story of the gains to the prohibition movement through "the accretions of time, the blunders of statesmen and the brutality of the rabble" took strong hold upon the hearts and consciences of her hearers.

The meeting for young ladies at the close of Mrs. Foster's address resulted in the organization by Miss Gordon of a Y. W. C. T. U. A look into the bright, earnest faces of the girls composing it would have gladdened the heart of Mrs. Fannie S. Best, and assured her that the Illinois Y. W. C. T. U. had received an acquisition to be proud of.

In the evening Miss Willard gave a clear, logical explanation of the principles of the Prohibition party, the demands for its formation, and the position of the W. C. T. U. regarding it, closing with an appeal to the temperance men so earnest, so searching that its influence must be felt.

The hour was late, and Mrs. Foster gave but a brief address in conclusion full of tender plea for total abstinence and work for the fallen, which formed a fitting close to this meeting, so characterized from its opening by earnest Christian effort and pervading spiritual power. Rev. Mr. Schoonmaker, though ill, was the "the power behind the throne" all the way through.

Looker On.

Plainview.—Our union was organized July 12, 1883, by our county president Mrs. Eva Wilcox.

During the year we had twenty-five names enrolled, including three honorary members.

Our time of meeting is every two weeks on Thursday afternoon.

We have a Band of Hope of fifty members.

We have had several public meetings. Our district president, Mrs. Boulter, of Brighton, addressed us one evening.

We celebrated the crusade decennial, distributing twenty-five Union Signals and many leaflets. "Causes for Thanksgiving." January 8, the "Call to Prayer" was responded to, and we listened to a sermon from our beloved pastor, Mr. Willis Fatchen.

Our dinner on election day netted us over $15.

A box sociable for the benefit of our Band of Hope brought in $4.65.

We responded to the "Call to Prayer" May 27 and listened to an address by our M. E. pastor, Rev. S. P. Groves.

We begin another year with two new names and the promise of more. Mrs. F. E. Otwell, Cor. Sec.

Greenfield.—The temperance sentiment of this city through the W. C. T. U., was quickened in an unusual degree recently by the address of Mrs. L. S. Rounds, delivered in the M. E. church. She was logical, witty, eloquent and pathetic, by turns, and sound all the way from hard cider to miserable whisky, and so pursuasive that she drew the entire audience to their feet in a pledge to help put down the traffic in the land. No speaker for years has so charmed and pleased our people as Mrs. Rounds, and her presence here will insure her for an audience at any time in the future.

Mrs. Annie Stover, President W. C. T. U.

Ipava.—Mrs. Clara H. Smith met the ladies of Ipava July 11 and organized a W. C. T. U. In the evening Mrs. Smith gave an entertaining chalk talk. The union begins with twenty members and the prospect of many more. The officers are: President, Mrs. Dr. Everndon; corresponding secretary, Miss Jennie Babcock; treasurer, Miss Lizzie David; recording secretary, Sarah E. McCaslin.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Mrs. C. H. Smith of the tenth district, has so far organized the largest number of unions this year.

—Mrs. S. M. I. Henry will fill engagements for four evenings in Septe ber. Apply to headquarters 161 La Salle street for dates and terms.

—Unions have been organized at Momence, Kempton, Hersher and Bonfield by Miss Emily Shedd, at Kansas, in 15th district, by Mrs. Jenkins, and at Reno, in 18th district, by Mrs. Morrison.

—Superintendent of departments are expected to prepare a written report of their work at state convention, as well as an oral one. Please note.

—Engagements for September and December are already being made at headquarters for Mrs. Rounds. Please take notice and send in applications early.

—The W. C. T. U. of Yorkville, Kendall county, have charge of the union temperance meetings in that place the last Sabbath evening in each month. Mrs. Jennie F. Willing, of Chicago, will address their next meeting, August 31.

—The executive committee will hold its last meeting of the year at Peoria, Tuesday, October 7. Every member is expected to be present. Mrs. E. G. Hibben, Peoria, is chairman of the entertainment committee. Delegates will send notice of their coming to her before October 1.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

The fortieth annual session of the national division of the Sons of Temperance, was held in Halifax, Nova Scotia, July 9–11, 1884. The attendance was very large and the meetings enthusiastic.

For several years past, the management of the Fitchburg (Mass.) railroad has arranged for Fourth of July patriotic and temperance celebrations at Lakes Walden and Pleasant. At Lake Walden addresses were made this year by Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin.

Prohibition conventions will be held in twenty different counties in New Jersey during the month of August by the New Jersey Temperance Alliance. The quarterly meeting of the Alliance recently held in Atlantic City was deeply interesting. Our W. C. T. U. are holding the fort all along the lines.

New York reports four new unions in Columbia county. Canaan, thirty members, president, Mrs. S. B. Hamilton; secretary, Mrs. A. A. Chapin; treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Wackerhagan. Stockport, fifteen members, Mrs. B. Van Buren, president; Lydia E. Butler, secretary; Mrs. J. P. Van Buren, treasurer. Philmont, twenty members, Mrs. Dr. W. D. Mercer, president; Miss Lockwood, secretary. East Chatham, Miss B. A. Rowe, president; secretary, Miss Kate W. Rowe; treasurer, Mrs. Rev. Heroy. Columbia county has now seven local unions and a strong county union with about 130 members. Last March there was no interest of the kind in the whole county.

PRESS DEPARTMENT.

To the Local Superintendents of the Press Department,

Dear Sisters: As the time is drawing near for our bringing in of sheaves for the "harvest home" festival of the national union, let me whisper a little word in your ears! It is a characteristic of our W. C. T. U. women to be so busy doing that we have no time to tell it. But we shall not know either our strength or our need unless we tell of what has been done through the year.

If the plans of the national department were fully carried out, wherever a union was organized, one paper, at least, would publish some sort of temperance truth. And thus directly the hand of home would be on "the lever of civilization"—the Press. If in your union no press superintendent has yet been appointed, let me most lovingly urge you at once to select the best woman possible for the place, and begin the new year of work with knowledge of what the times demand of you. Let all work that has been done, be carefully reported, (if not already) and forwarded to your state superintendent. We especially desire to know the attitude of papers toward our great reform, how many publish temperance articles, and what number have W. C. T. U. departments conducted by our women. Please send to my address a copy of the paper under your care, with articles marked.

And from the press superintendents of the unions in our large cities, I would be glad to have, before Sept. 15, a personal letter giving a brief summary of work done, and best methods of work learned from experience.

So may all our straws make a golden sheaf for the day of rejoicing. Yours in faith and love,

Esther T. Housh.

MORE TESTIMONY.

PRIVATE LETTERS TO MISS CASSEDAY.

OHIO.

The work in this state, though organized so late has brought forth blessed fruit. At Springfield a prisoner was converted and we have reason to believe that a young man in our own infirmary was also. I hope there were others.

Most of the cities of Ohio observed the day. Toledo made very special preparations, as did also Marietta, where they had a fine banner and report very profitable services. Springfield's work was a grand success. Steubenville reports good work, and a standing committee appointed to carry on this work. Our own day was one long to be remembered by all who participated in the work, and cannot but bring forth much fruit. Akron sends a report that interests me exceedingly. They observed prison day and the day of prayer for the state convention together. The Sunday before being children's day, the flowers and garlands from the Methodist and Congregationalist churches were sent to the W. C. T. U. for their use prison day.

After prayer and reading of the circulars, four ladies with bouquets and floral designs visited the infirmary, and five the jail. Over two hundred persons were in the infirmary as inmates. All who were able assembled in the reading room and the ladies held a meeting of prayer and song with them, at the close of which they gave each a bouquet with scripture text. The ladies then visited each one confined to a sick-room and left blooming pot plants. Their hearts were made so glad by this visit.

They found at the jail fourteen prisoners. All listened with bowed heads, while tears stole down the cheeks of many. The prayers, the songs, the talks, were all of Christ who came to save sinners

The ladies write me that they were themselves greatly blessed, for the dear Savior was right there with them.

An inmate of the infirmary, Geo. H. Mills, a bowed, gray-haired man, has written this little poem as a tribute to the dear women who so kindly ministered to them that day. The paper from which my copy is clipped says, "The cramped, trembling handwriting lends a touch of pathos to the written verses that cold typ cannot convey."

They were ladies four in number
Coming from the city fair,
Some were young and some were older,
Some with threads of silver hair.

And they came with kindly greeting
Bringing sweet bouquets of flowers;
Just like sisters fondly asking
To make glad these hearts of ours.

Garlands fresh in beauty gleaming,
Hues of various shades and dyes;
Like a dream to us the seeming
Only, we had open eyes.

Songs they sang and prayers they offered,
Mixed with deeds to us of love;
They shall find them each recorded
In the book He keeps above.

Up through the pearl-gates loved ones are waiting,
Fondly we'll hope that we each may meet;
There in their joys forever partaking,
Joys that will ever be full and complete.

Our own union visited the jail, the city prison, and the county infirmary. The religious exercises were very impressive, especially in the jail where were five persons, one on trial for his life. Aunt Mary Hadley, one of the dear old crusade mothers and a minister among the Friends, spoke very tender, loving words of sympathy and exhortation, after which three of our sisters offered such earnest and powerful prayers that the words seemed to have been breathed directly from the warm heart of our Heavenly Father. After reading the prison day scripture selections, we sang, "Just as I am without one plea," and "Jesus lover of my soul."

Words are too empty to convey any idea of the spirit that pervaded the meeting. Christ was indeed there with us and the old crusade fire came right down and took possession of the entire meeting. Never in any church in my life have I been so impressed by the services.

The white ribbon bouquets with their beautiful texts made a vivid impression upon those poor fellows who had, some of them, not in years had the same opportunity, free from the influence of liquor, to consider their soul's welfare. We recalled so vividly the words, "I was sick and in prison and ye came unto me." We reached not only the prisoners but the hearts of the prison keepers. The jailor told some of us afterward that the men were deeply impressed and that they remained perfectly quiet until an hour or two had passed. The meeting in the city prison was similar and the keeper was much affected and impressed. Here were six prisoners. At the infirmary we held a union service, for those able to attend, and then visited each one confined to his or her room. Oh, these poor sick and dying creatures! how much they seemed to enjoy the words of sympathy and kindness, and the possession as their own of the beautiful flowers. We gave each of the sick a bouquet, each child a button-hole bouquet, and many others received, if not a full bouquet at least a few flowers. One poor, paralyzed young man, brought to that condition through strong drink, was led to accept the Savior as the One all-sufficient for him. My mother, who was with sisters Mary Hadley and Mrs. Gustin in his room, said she never heard so beautiful and inspired a prayer as Mrs. Gustin made in behalf of this young man; and God sent a speedy answer.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

The great popularity of this preparation, after its many years of test, should be an assurance, even to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed.

It causes new growth of hair on bald heads—provided the hair follicles are not dead, which is seldom the case; restores natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthful and clear of dandruff; prevents the hair falling off or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER produces its effects by the healthful influence of its vegetable ingredients, which invigorate and rejuvenate. It is not a dye, and is a delightful article for toilet use. Containing no alcohol, it does not evaporate quickly and dry up the natural oil, leaving the hair harsh and brittle, as do other preparations.

Buckingham's Dye
FOR THE WHISKERS

Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye, because it is harmless; produces a permanent natural color; and, being a single preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

Signal Notes.

Every man has some peculiar train of thought which he falls back upon when alone. This, to a great degree, molds the man.—Dugald Stewart.

Sampson got his honey out of the very lion that roared against him. The Christian often gets his best blessing out of his greatest seeming calamities.

A little girl said to her mother one day, "Mother, I feel nervous." "Nervous?" said the mother, "what is nervous?" "Why, it's being in a hurry all over."

The Citizen's League of Chicago, did a rushing business one day last month. Fourteen saloon-keepers were prosecuted by its agents on that day for selling liquor to drunkards and minors, and for keeping disorderly houses. While high license licenses, it does not appear to secure an observance of law by the liquor-sellers.

A well known cobbler, in the town of Kilmarnock, having occasion to pass the door of a public house just as Boniface was endeavoring to lift a poor, helpless inebriate from the gutter, was greeted with—"Hey, man, come here and gie us a lift." "Na na," returned the knight of St. Crispin, "ye can jist dae as I dae when I'm fin'shed wi' a job; I aye pit it in the window."

There is a gentleman in Portland, living there now for a year. A friend of his in Ohio wrote to him to know whether the Maine law is usually a success or a failure. This was his reply: "I have been living here now a year. I see all sorts of people and mingle with them freely, many of them gentlemen who like myself are not fanatics, not sentimentalists, not teetotalers. I have had no connection with the temperance movement here or elsewhere, though I am on good terms with some temperance men, as I am with many who have no sympathy with the temperance cause—and very little with those engaged in it. If a friend from abroad should come into my office today and I should wish to offer him a glass of wine I know of no place in the city where I could find it. There are such places here, and on inquiry of persons whom I know I could learn where I could go to obtain the wine, but it would be in such a place and of such character and surroundings that I would not take a friend to it, and no man with self-respect would go there." Such is a fair account of the way in which liquors are now sold in Portland, and even this is only for want of a few amendments to our law, which we expect to obtain from our next legislature.

It is easy to decide which of the two young men was the gentleman, in the following story from an exchange:

On a Fort Wayne train approaching Chicago there was a short statured, straight-haired, copper-colored Indian, going back to the reservation after a trip to the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa. He wore a nice suit of clothes which fitted him badly, and a paper collar without any necktie. He attended strictly to his own business and was unmolested until a young sprig came into the smoking car from the sleeper. "An Indian, I guess," said the young chap, as he lighted a cigarette. And then, approaching the son of the plains, he attracted general attention by shouting, with strange gestures: "Ugh, heap big Injun! Omaha? Sioux? Pawnee? See great father? Have drink firewater? Warm Injun's blood!"

The copper colored savage gazed at the young man a moment, with an ill-concealed expression of contempt on his face, and then he said, with good pronunciation: "You must have been reading some dime novels, sir. I am going back to my people in Montana, after spending three years in the east at school. I advise you to do the same thing. No. I do not drink whisky. Where I live gentlemen do not carry whisky flasks in their pockets."

The cigarette was not smoked out, and, amid a general laugh, a much crestfallen young man retired to the sleeping coach.

Miscellaneous Selections.

The Whig party held their last nationa convention in 1852. It lasted six days, and on the fifty-third ballot General Winfield Scott was nominated for president, and William A. Graham for vice president. The platform on which they were placed indorsed the compromise measures of 1850. Horace Greeley and his followers "spat upon the platform," but supported the ticket. In August of the same year a Free Soil convention was held at Pittsburgh, which nominated John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, for president, and George W. Julian, of Indiana, for vice president. The Democratic candidates were Franklin Pierce and William R. King. They received the electoral votes of all the states but Vermont, Massachusetts, Kentucky and Tennessee. The Whig party never appeared again in the field as a national organization. It went to pieces on the slavery question—the northern wing being pretty thoroughly abolitionized. Two or three years thereafter the American or Know Nothing party sprang up. It was thoroughly squelched in the south, during the canvass of 1855, by Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, and Henry A. Wise, of Virginia. Then came the Republican party, entirely sectional in its character. It met in convention at Philadelphia, June 17, 1856, and nominated John C. Fremont of California for president, and William L. Dayton of New Jersey for viee president. James Buchanan and John C Breckinridge were the Democratic candidates. Though the Republican candidates were defeated, the popular and electoral votes received by them pointed to the ultimate triumph of their party. By-the-by, there was a third party in this presidential race. Millard Fillmore and Andrew J. Donelson were the American or Know Nothing candidates. They only received the electoral votes of Maryland.—Boston Advertiser.

In some of the southern states strong tax laws and license laws have been enacted with little or no discussion, and the liquor traffic has thus been placed under the regulation of the police. The last session of the Mississippi legislature took up the subject of dealing with habitual drunkards, and with scarcely any debate, enacted a very wise law. It empowers the chancellors of courts to decide who are drunkards, to have them arrested with or without complaint from relatives or friends, to appoint guardians for their estates, or to order them into confinement in an asylum, or reformatory in or out of the state. The action of the chancellors is almost discretionary, but will, it is calculated, depend largely upon the wishes of the relatives and friends of the drunkard. If any one informs the chancellor that a man is abusing or neglecting his family, is wasting his fortune or ruining himself or his business through drinking, such individual at once becomes a subject of judicial attention and steps may be taken to secure his reform before he is too far gone. This law makes drunkenness a crime, as it should be. Before it has been in operation long its tendency will be to make drunkenness an indelible stain upon a man's character. His arrest will be a disgrace which he can only outlive by years of strict sobriety and good conduct, and it will not be long before every one in the state will seek to avoid such disgrace.—Cleveland Herald.

Edward Payson Weston, the well known pedestrian, was given a dinner in London the other day in honor of his approaching return to this country after the extraordinary task of walking 5,000 miles within 100 days on temperance principles. The dinner was served in the Vegetarian Restaurant at the health exhibition and was attended by a number of prominent people interested in temperance.

It is said that General Haldeman, the American minister at Siam, has persistently refused to permit the granting of a license to any American liquor-seller in that country. If so, he deserves all the more credit, because his action is in marked contrast to that of most representatives of foreign governments at that court.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD
Is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.

HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe.

Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause; the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 32. CHICAGO, AUGUST 21, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE very pertinent question put one day by a political Prohibitionist to an old party antagonist was this, "Can it ever be wrong to do right?"

"MUM" has been analysed by an Iowa chemist, and is found to contain nearly five per cent. of alcohol, and eighty-five of water. The amount of water will doubtless make it so unpopular as to practically take it out of court.

THE people of Maine will vote on the 8th of next month for or against incorporating prohibition in the constitution of the state. "Knee deep" convictions are wanted now in this Pine Tree corner of the United States.

TAWHAIO, king of the Maories, told recently in England of his three years' work for total abstinence in New Zealand. Many of the young chiefs having died from drink, the king, untrammeled by politics, came naturally to the conclusion that drink should be prohibited.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA in London Echoes, prophesies that when Blue Ribbonism has completed its triumph, and guests at grand dinners require only one tumbler apiece for their water quaffing, the dinner toasts will survive just as the toasted bread in the "flowing bowl," from which they were first named among us, has long since disappeared, but the post prandial favorite still remains.

THE Chautauqua Assembly gave Miss Willard a social reception at the Hotel Atheneum on Friday evening of last week, this day being the tenth anniversary of the birth of the W. C. T. U. idea at Chautauqua. A fine program numbering Mrs. Lathrop, Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Woodbridge, and the national president among the speakers was spread out over two days, Friday and Saturday, and we hope next week to publish a full account of all the proceedings.

AT a medical temperance convention to be held at Lake Bluff on the 29th of this month, Prof. W. E. Quine, of the Chicago Medical College will present the subject of the Physiological Action of Alcohol; Dr. N. S. Davis will speak of the Substitutes for Alcohol in the Treatment of Disease, and Dr. C. W. Earle will give a lecture upon the pathological effects—morbid action—resulting from the use of alcohol. This is an incursion upon the temperance field most heartily to be we

THE W. C. T. Unions of northern and southern California have engaged in a united and vigorous effort to secure a prohibitory amendment to the state constitution. Not only are petitions to be circulated, but the forelock of time is to be laid hold of by these wise women who propose to do just what the Illinois W. C. T. U. have engaged to endeavor to do, viz: elect a legislature pledged to the adoption of the movement. The amendment to be submitted will include the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of native wines.

THE moral education society of Chicago organized by a few earnest women about eighteen months since, has printed 10,000 leaflets, a large share of which have been distributed, has held regular monthly meetings, to which ladies only are invited, and two large public meetings, finding at adjournment all expenses paid and a trifle left in the treasury, for postage. The above work has been accomplished by these women with less then one hundred dollars—membership fees and gifts. Can any society show a more economical record?

THE opinion of the attorney general of Michigan, concerning the scientific temperance instruction law, recently given, makes it obligatory upon school boards in cities and villages having a special charter, as well as upon those of towns incorporated by general law; it also shows that while the act of 1883 does not require this instruction in state normal schools in order to the granting of diplomas, the diploma and its authority may be suspended if the holder thereof is found incompetent to teach the special studies required by the act; also, that an occasional talk or oral instruction by the teacher will not be a compliance with the law which requires the use of text-books. This law goes into effect in Michigan on the first day of next month.

WHEN the Washington market in New York city was found years ago to be in an unsanitary condition, the health authorities after exhausting peaceful measures and plans, set a corps of 150 laborers protected by 300 policemen, to work by night pulling down the two-story sheds which constituted the covering of the market ground. The proprietors sued for $60,000 but the courts sustained the destruction as necessary to the public health, and declared that if the city hall itself were detrimental to public health, the board of health might safely tear it down. The courts further lay down the law that no man can have property rights in any thing which is injurious to the health of the people. Some day such declarations will include that greatest of injuries to public weal, the licensed liquor traffic, and the "compensation" so clamored for by brewers, distillers, and saloonists will be denied upon the grounds above stated. Speed the day.

THE eleventh annual report of the London Temperance hospital is just issued, and shows a large increase of labor on its beneficent plan. The number of in-patients has increased 25 per cent. and the out-patients 50 per cent. during the last year. The rate of mortality has been 7-32 per cent. The second instance of the administration of alcohol in any form occurred this year. A young woman was suffering from an affection of the jaw. The local disease was almost cured when she became weak and complained of sleeplessness. As she was gradually sinking, the house surgeon ordered champagne, which temporarily quickened the pulse. The dose was repeated in an hour and a half, but after a brief rally she suddenly expired. The hospital management are not bound by any rigid rule to reject alcohol, but in the only two cases in which it has been used since the founding of the institution, the result of such use has been unsatisfactory. An analysis of fever cases since the opening, shows that no death has occurred from fever among the total abstainers.

Is there any extent of presumption or depth of depravity to which the abettors of the liquor interest will not resort to carry out their infamous business in spite of law? We remember hearing years ago of prohibition in one instance, being fought with "The Pilgrim's Progress." Books bearing that title were sold, which, on being examined, were found to contain nothing of the devout classic but the outside name. Inside was a bottle of whisky. We thought of the above in reading the following, written by a Prohibitionist in Iowa, who says: "We have had a month's test of the prohibitory law in this state, and it answers the purpose full as well as we expected, and unspeakably better than its enemies predicted; but it is evident that all the inventive power of men and devils is in operation to place the accursed drink within reach; and to the old traffickers and tipplers it might be said: 'This is your hour and the power of darkness.' It is said that there is a company in Chicago making boxes, in the shape of an elegant book, and on it in gilt letters, 'Prayer Book,' and inside there is room for a bottle. It is said they are designed for Iowa drinkers. I trust 'the cat is out of the bag' in time to prevent this infernal plan from being carried out."

HELP.

MRS. EMILY J. BUGBEE.

Help for the perilled millions
Tossing in dire dismay,
Out on the raging billows,
Yawning for the prey.
Man ye the life boats quickly,
With the resolute, and the strong,
And send o'er the angry surges
A shout to the struggling throng.
Chorus:—Swiftly speed, Oh swiftly
Out from the safe warm shore,
For some in the seething waters
Are sinking to rise no more.

Carry them food and raiment,
Seek them with loving care,
Cheer them with songs of gladness,
Strengthen them with prayer.
Work with a will together,
Breasting the mighty tide,
Nor stop for the weak dissension,
Turning your strength aside.
Chorus:—Swiftly speed, Oh! swiftly,
Out from the sheltering shore,
For some in the seething waters
Are sinking to rise no more.

Ye who may sit untroubled
In beautiful homes of ease,
Come out from your idle dreaming
And look on the boiling seas.
And hasten, quick to the rescue,
Signal or token send,
That, you watch in the love of Jesus
For, the life of the drowning men.
Chorus:—Swiftly speed, Oh! swiftly,
Out from the sheltering shore,
For some in the seething waters
Are sinking to rise no more.

From the battlements of that city,
The home of the glorious King,
With the ransomed host—He watches
To see if the lost ye bring.
And listen! thro' all the peril,
And noise of the storm, to hear
The lift of their glad hosannas,
For the help of the toilers here.
Chorus:—Swiftly speed, Oh! swiftly
Out from the sheltering shore,
For some in the seething waters
Are sinking to rise no more.

PRISCILLA'S QUEER STREAK.

IN TWO PARTS.

MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

PART I.

"Yes, yes, yes! The hot weather comes all of a sudden, when it does come!" was the greeting our neighbor tossed over the fence at us one very warm morning in June. She was standing on tip-toe to reach her clothes line, and she had the head of a clothes pin in her mouth and her sunbonnet tilted to the top of her head. But a clothes pin was no barrier to her talk, which came forth in little spasmodic jerks from the unoccupied corner of her mouth.

She was a very good neighbor, was Prissy Price, a small, wiry, old maid, as smart as a trap, and as springy. The slope on which stood our cottage was a slice from the home-lot of her farm, and there was only a fence between us and the red house which she had inherited from her father, the good old Deacon Price. In the farm house she lived alone, or as she phrased it, "Without either chick or child."

To our social household, consisting of four women and one young man—Ralph Walters, a college youth, his mother, grandmother, and pretty Aunt Kate, with their one old servant—Prissy's seemed a peculiarly lonely life.

On the piazza or at the windows or in the garden, we never saw any figure or face but hers. There was a hired man, Caleb by name, who tilled the ground, and worked the more distant fields, but the home garden near the house was tended by Priscilla's own hands. She harnessed her own horse, milked her cow, and when Caleb came to take her order or to render his accounts, she talked to him sitting in the doorway or standing on the steps.

It was three years since her father died, and before that nobody knew that Prissy Price was "queer". She had grown wrinkled and old at housework and nursing her aged parent, but, so far as the neighbors knew, Prissy was "no queerer than other folks." She went to church always, and had a new bonnet often enough to be an ornament to the deacon's pew. She was a "good hand" at all picnics or church frolics, and there was no house where the people liked better to drop in to tea. And as for chat, and "sociable" ways, and all sorts of neighborly fashions, there was nobody more popular than she. But shortly after the deacon died there came an awful change over his daughter's mode of life. Somebody noticed one day that the old house had a shut up look, but before people had time to wonder where Prissy was gone, it was opened again. No one knew whither she went or when she returned. She harnessed her own horse and rode away and that was all there was to tell.

When they found she was home again, one neighbor and another came over to "set a spell" and one or two brought their knitting and meant to stay to tea. But Prissy met them at the door and talked and talked, of all their affairs, but not one word of her own, and offered them a chair on the porch, but did not invite them to come in. Of course they all tried it round once, and two braver than the rest walked straight in without knocking, and Prissy straightened herself up, and said: "Now, I'm sorry if my neighbors don't like it; I like them as well as ever, and if there's ever anybody sick I'm willing to go and help and nurse, and all that, but I have given up visiting unless I can be of some use."

"And you mean to say you wish your old neighbors would keep away?" spitefully asked her old crony, the dressmaker of the town.

"No, I couldn't say just that," said Prissy, grimly, "but I do say I have no place to ask anybody to sit down, but the porch. I can't have any more company in my house."

Probably nothing ever happened in Herndon that created a greater sensation than the stand taken by Prissy Price. For many sewing circle afternoons it was the one topic of discourse—if Prissy was not there; and if she was, the subject was uppermost in everybody's mind. As for Prissy, she showed by her manner of cordial kindness how much she missed her friends, and she was full of neighborly interest in the teething children and rheumatic grandmothers. Nice little dainties, the pitcher of cream and the freshest eggs, the roses and the choicest fruit, were sent just as ever to those who needed them.

At church, or the village store, nobody seemed so heart glad to see anybody else as did Prissy Price, only she would go into nobody's house, nor would she allow any one to enter hers. Old Mrs. Purdy, the village gossip, finally declared that "Prissy was such an everlastin' talker, that SHE believed she had had a sign or a warnin' that she was in danger of talking herself or her neighbors to death, and she knew if she went among them she could not stop. And it does seem," she added, "as if she was possessed to talk somewhere enough to make up; for she talks twice as often in prayer meeting and she talks to every soul she meets; and lately, she has joined the temperance society, I believe for nothing in the world but because it believes in letting the women talk all they want to, whether they've got anything to say or not."

"Well, I think she's crazy," said the dressmaker, who resented what she considered Priscilla's snub. "People are crazy, you know, in streaks and spots, and this is just Prissy Price's streak. If she had any poor relations now to come and fetch their children and stay whether-or-no, 'twould be a blessed thing for her; some body to jest come in and set down and set right straight along. But that's jest the way, a big house and farm and lots er money and no relations. 'Twouldn't be so, if she hadn't a cent."

"I thought she had a brother," said one old lady, looking up from her work. "Old deacon Price had a son by his first wife."

"Yes, and a minister of the gospel and a heavenly minded young man. He went as a missionary and died in foreign parts. I forget whether the heathen eat him or not; they did some of the brethren I know, and kinder seems to me, 'sef they eat him."

"I never could see for my part, how they could relish 'em," put in Mrs. Purdy complacently, as she cut a button-hole in a little frock intended for a heathen child, "I don't see how the pagans could find the stomach to do it, though perhaps the piety in the missionaries made 'em set. I'm sure the saintliest of 'em would go agin me."

And so the conversation worked away from Prissy and her peculiar streaks, and little by little people ceased to mind.

For us, who lived in the cottage and had many a chat over the fence, it mattered little that Prissy had never invited us into her house.

All that part nearest us she occupied and the more distant side she had closed up. "It's more room than I need," she said in explanation, "and only takes time to keep it clean." Yet she seemed to grudge neither time nor labor, and as far as we could judge, bestowed it impartially upon both sides of the house. To us of the cottage, she seemed a most energetic and kindly soul, and we came to look upon her as in full exercise of a privilege we had all sometimes craved, that of keeping the people who bored her entirely away from her sight.

So time sped until the third summer after the deacon died and the first of the occupancy of our cottage was at an end. We had bought the sunny slope where our house stood, in the last year of the deacon's life, and he expressed himself as willing to sell it in order that Prissy might not be without neighbors should he be "taken away." The cottage had only been completed a year, and Prissy had never crossed its threshold, nor had we once been beyond the porch of her old red house. The creeper over this porch was beginning to take on its crimson color and a great maple at the end of the house was already swinging out boughs of crimson and gold. Taking a stroll one evening to the village, on our return in the twilight, we had met Prissy walking rapidly toward the town. She was hurrying on with her head bowed and looking weary and worn and old. When she saw us, her ordinary air of cheerful resolution was at once assumed, and though her previous manner had been one of great haste, she seemed willing to linger and talk.

Reaching home we found the evening fire burning brightly and the curtains yet undrawn. As we stepped upon the piazza my cousin Kate glanced at the dining room window, and there, crouching on the ground, was a dark shape which soon took the outlines of the figure of a man; a thief or a tramp no doubt, waiting an opportunity to enter or to make his escape. The dining room was open to the porch on that side, and the crouching figure looked as if it held much booty hugged to its breast. Fortunately we had sufficient presence of mind not to scream. Remembering the only man of our house, our young nephew, had not yet come in, and that there was no silver to be stolen, we quietly entered and closed and bolted the door. Creeping softly to the door of the dining room, meaning to reach the window and close and lock that, we listened and watched. There was no light behind us, and safe in the shadows we saw the man arise from his crouching position and start toward the gate. Suddenly pausing, his eyes glaring around as if to see if he was watched, he turned back and raising a bottle from the ground lifted it to his lips and drained it to the dregs. As he stood thus the light from the parlor fire flashed up for a moment and illumined his figure and face. Cousin Kate saw him clearly and he saw her, for he dropped the bottle and turned abruptly and fled. It was only the work of a moment to lock the shutters behind him and to rush back to the front of the house and even to get courage to go to the door. But though there was no turn in the road he was nowhere to be seen.

Our nephew coming up the path at the moment declared he had met no one. There was but one conclusion, he had turned in at Prissy's gate and would be lying in wait to frighten, perhaps to murder her.

Just at this moment Miss Prissy appeared walking toward home at her usual rapid pace. We rushed to meet her, told her of the thief, and begged her to come to us for the night or allow the young man to enter and search the house, and remain to protect her. She was very quiet, and her face was grim and hard, but she insisted upon it that she was not afraid. Very reluctantly she allowed Ralph to search the barn, but, though we found a cellar window open, all was still as death about the place, and she would permit no one of us to go into the house. Troubled secretly at her obstinacy we withdrew, resolved to watch the house from the outside, without her consent.

"Really, Miss Prissy," said my nephew, half in vexation and half in jest, "I don't know but you'd rather be murdered in your bed than to let me enter your house."

"Not so bad as that, Mr. Ralph," she answered bravely, "you are all, more than kind, but I am not afraid. I promise you to call out if there is the least need of help. You could not fail to hear. Indeed, if you will stay where you are, I will search the house and put you at ease before you go away;" and with the utmost coolness, she put her key in the door. Breathlessly we waited, our hands upon the knob, while she lighted her kerosene lamp, and went alone from room to room. In a very short time, that seemed long enough to us, she returned, declared herself satisfied that no thief was in the house and there was nothing left for it, but to go home.

Outside our window were two bottles, one of wine and one of brandy, which had been in the dining room closet, neither had been full, and of the brandy the quantity was small, but both had been drained to the last drop, and nothing else had even been disturbed.

"So much for having intoxicating liquors about," said Kate, the only woman of us all, who belonged to the W. C. T. U.

"So much for not locking the dining-room door," said Ralph.

"But we have no business to put temptation in the way of any poor creature," said Kate with spirit.

"Fie, Kitty. It isn't likely the tramp smelled it through the wall, and we didn't invite him in. Anyway we only keep it for medicine, and now you can rejoice to see the curse removed and go to bed."

"Well, I never mean to have another drop in the house," said Kate.

"All right," answered her nephew, "Miss Prissy is a living witness that any woman can keep out of her house anything she likes to keep out. If she can do it why not you?"

In the morning, Miss Prissy was all right, though, to our anxious eyes, she looked pale and very tired. After all, she might have suffered from some feminine fright. If she had, "it was only what she deserved for her obstinacy," said Ralph, whose gallantry was a trifle hurt at Miss Prissy's indifference to his protective powers. 'Some brute will kill and rob her one of these nights; and serve her right, for so sensible and straightforward a woman as she is, has no business to be a crank."

WOMAN'S EFFORTS AND MAN'S DEVICE.

MARCIA HUMPHREY.

As Christian temperance workers we are often startled as from a dream, with the uprising cry from within, "Why are we so deeply and painfully interested in the welfare of these drinking and suffering men and women? Why do our hearts yearn over them and our eyes often become sleepless, and filled with compassionate tears when we witness their many woes, brought upon themselves by their own act, or by weakly yielding to the temptations of others? We may have no friends to save or receive no financial reward; nothing of a selfish nature can possibly actuate us in this humane work. Oh, friends, what is the answer welling up in your hearts? Does it not come spontaneously from the soul's depths, "Our brother's blood crieth to us from the ground?" Do we not feel it is the Christ principle emanating from our souls, and actuating us to "Do unto others as we would they should do unto us," and His voice saying "If ye love not your brother whom ye have seen, how can ye love Him whom ye have not seen," and what is this love but charity; and charity is love, and love ever seeks the good and uplifting of those loves, and seeking the good of our fellowmen, is to lift them from degradation and want and sin. If we have not this love as professed Christians, than we are assured we are as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." It is the Divinity within, which we cultivate by prayer and work, to which we passively yield our whole being, letting in the spirit which opens ever before us our duty. It is a transcendent light permeating our spiritual nature, that sends us forth amid the vile, armed for the conquest, and wise are we if we yield to its influence, fully and deeply, working, toiling and striving daily as much as lies in our power, to lift men out of the depths, from which an agonizing appeal of woe, rises every hour in the day; every day in the year; every year of our lives. But "not unto us be the glory" for anything we may do, or efforts we may make in this noble cause. We are servants only of the Most High and do His bidding. We yield submissively to the dictates of His spirit, which goes out from us embracing all fallen humanity, lifting hopeless beings, bringing manhood out of the gutter to his true position in life; wiping away woman's tears, and hushing with comfort children's cries for bread; and teaching, if possible, wicked men in God's name to spare from their polluting touch, their fellow men; no longer to thrust the poisoned dagger at their hearts, by putting into their hands the deadly weapon of rum; no longer to ride in chariots of gold, polluted by the blood of the slain; to no longer trample over the mangled, scarred and torn bodies and garments of brothers, husbands and friends. All this and much more, are we incited to do by Him who first loved us.

One hundred thousand a year, of our citizens, hurled into a drunkard's abyss! What a wail would come from our nation as a whole were this occurring every year on our roads by some careless switchman, or indifferent car engineer, or captain of our steamboats, or a broken rail or bridge! What a sound of horror would mingle among thousands of voices! Yet as a republic of only a hundred years' growth, we tolerate this high handed iniquity! and as Frances Willard has said truly, "a country in which each rumseller and drunkard is a sovereign citizen, and at every election casts in his blurred and muddled ballot, a seed from which we reap such fruits as bribery, corruption and shame," and I will add a mantle of untold misery to cast upon the future generations of men and children's children. Oh what a cry of anguish must enter every day into the presence of the "Lord of Hosts," from these one hundred thousand hearts and homes! Have Christians, especially, no tears to shed? no hands to help? no time to spare? no self-denials to make? no prayers to offer, no vote to cast? no influence to shed over our blinded, greedy and selfish men in power, in behalf of these self-destroying, bleeding, debauched and dying men? Ye men in power who cast aside woman's prayers and tears, and childhood's pitying cry, which wells up every day from the lips of hundreds of children: "Please don't sell my papa or mamma any more liquor," a cry too often heard; who forbid women to protect her home and little ones from this accursed thing which "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Law makers, have ye no ears to hear? no eyes to see? no hearts to feel? While it is evident they have not, what have we to do but to rise in all the grandeur of true womanhood, and motherhood, striking the axe if possible at the "root of the tree," lest our homes become forever desolate and our nation as a whole a curse to the world?

Will not Christians of every church stand with open hands and hearts ready to suppress and denounce this death-trap of sin and misery? If each of the thousands who professes to "love his neighbor as himself," would do this how soon we would trample this curse under foot, and cry, Victory! Victory and conquest over intemperance and its attendant evils! How soon these sinks of plunder and fighting for power and money, crushing in their reach frail men and women, would cease, and our land be beautiful with thousands of new traces of beauty and peacefulness. If we fail to do this, with a prophetic eye I see the cup of gathering wrath and destruction hanging over this nation for which so much blood has already been lawfully shed. It will come unless rulers learn to "fear God and regard man." As surely as the slave cry entered into the ears of the "Lord of Sabaoth," so the cry of these wounded millions is ascending to God, and the stripes which are now falling upon these poor victims of unrighteous laws will soon fall upon this nation and its rulers. Oh the power of men and women to do evil! The craftiness and designs to beggar men in order to reap financial fruits is astounding to those who work in this cause.

In my temperance tract distribution among the working Irish I have found what pen and time would fail me to write. One good and seemingly American educated wife and mother, said:

"I belong to the Catholic Band of Temperance, but my husband does not, and he has 'spells' which seem to have been born with him for drink, but he is so ashamed when he comes home in that state, and crawls slyly up stairs to the front room on the lounge, and when the little ones ask if he is sick he always says, 'Yes, I am sick,' and he is so much afraid they will know he has been drinking. But yesterday they went to him as usual and received the same answer; but ran back to their mother for the first time and said, 'Mamma, I do believe papa is drunk.'"

Oh the poor woman did feel so sad that they should have come to know it! And she said, "Their father says he does so want to leave it off for his children's sake, and it does trouble him so much that he can't resist, that I fear it will lead him to commit suicide."

When I gave her some advice for him and tracts she said, "What is the use? It is sold at every step of his way, and men use every inducement for him to drink. Just near us is a rum store where every night nearly they have music, or some attraction, and on the counter are platters of salt fish, nicely prepared, and free to all, that they may eat and create a fresh desire for drink. And what can a poor, tired, craving man do but drink, and then he is forgetful of everything."

She was a sensible Irish woman and seemed out of place there. She protested against our government allowing it to be sold. I think the women, although some of them drink, would be glad to see it removed.

But horrible as these seductions seem are they any worse than those in hotels and other places all along the street, where "free lunches" are to be had? It may not be so cheap a lunch but is equally as thirst-creating and as pernicious in its effects. I received many a "God bless you," from these people, who say, "If we would do as well as our priests say, we would do well." But most of them think they "must have beer to give them strength," and "How can we work without our beer?" And it seemed to be a new idea to them that a mother's drinking would entail a thirst in her children, and quite affected them for good; it touched a tender chord in the sympathetic Irish mother heart. I think a tract on "Beer and Strength," written by some one, would be good for distribution among them.

If men in power could attend some of the Boston evening meetings, where reformed drinking men gather to tell to a tearful audience their varied and bitter experiences and hear some of the almost imprecations coming from their lips regarding the "ignoble and brutal and foul government they are under; the defilement and temptations given them at every turn of the street by a Christian (?) government," methinks they would shrink into insignificance with all their power and learning under the lash of these poor ignorant—and learned ones too—reformed citizens. And their hearts would surely be touched too with the pathos of the reclaimed ones. Men in power! the Ship of State is ready. Hundreds are on board, and hundreds are climbing in, and hundreds more are waiting for the path to be cleared of its debris before they can enter. Set your sail! Choose a wise captain, one who can guide it safely through the blinding and raging storm hovering over it, and which it must encounter ere it land safely on the temperance shore, thanking God for deliverance on the No-license Rock.

Do not look for wrong and evil,—
You will find them if you do;
As you measure for your neighbor
He will measure back to you.

A ST. JOHN RATIFICATION MEETING.

Dear Union Signal:—The first meeting in Missouri to ratify the nomination of the Prohibition candidates was held at Kirkwood on the evening of Friday, August 8, 1884. It was a decided success. The charming country grounds of Mr. J. B. Roberts displayed their features of tree and lawn and flower under the light of Chinese lanterns while the vicinity of the speakers and main audience was made brilliant with headlights. The audience in number, interest and behavior was everything that heart could wish; the absence of beer and whisky was the guarantee of decorum; enthusiasm cropped out in plaudits of every "point" made by the speakers, while the listeners sat and stood, not only within the grounds, but blockading the street. The abundant presence of happy children and handsomely dressed, intelligent and charming women gave a new feature to a political meeting and made it seem like a midsummer night's fete. For here these women came not as powerless spectators, unable to help or to hinder the engrossing cause of the moment, but as equals, working with heart and head and voice for their nation's and their own salvation. Most if not all of them were the members of the W. C. T. U. and it was by them that the meeting had been planned and organized. They had also met together the day previous and made a splendid flag, thirteen feet long, which now floated in brilliant color against the vine-embowered portico, and displayed in large letters the names that spoke their hopes, "St. John and Daniel." Over the entrance to the portico, which served as a platform for speakers and choir, was draped a second banner, while a third bearing the motto of the W. C. T. U., "For God and Home and Native Land," was above the hall doors. Here and there among the trees tables were set, adorned with flowers, for the serving of ice cream and cakes during the social meeting that followed the business program. A band from St. Louis discoursed sweet and inspiring strains and accompanied the singers. The meeting progressed as follows: Doxology; prayer by Prof. Jno. S. Collins; singing, "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Here followed the chosing of Mr. J. B. Roberts, one of the state electors, as permanent chairman, and his brief but happy remarks on being elected. Reading of the Pittsburgh platform, Mr. Booth.

After the platform a number of speeches were made. At the close of one of these Mr. Collins was called on by an acclamation which testified to his standing both as a man and a speaker.

At the close of his response, he moved to endorse the platform and ratify the nomination, which motion was seconded and carried with enthusiasm. A letter from the Hon. B. Gratz Brown was read endorsing the principles and commending the action of the party. The social part of the meeting followed the adjournment of business and was carried on in the on in the same brisk and happy manner. Electioneering went on among the grave and gay, and arguments progressed over ice cream and cake, while a band of children drew their elders into a ring, dancing gaily around the musicians. The actual and serious results of our work are most encouraging. We receive converts, help and counsel from the most unexpected quarters and are growing not only in faith but material strength. Old Democrats and Republicans are leaving their corrupt and worn out parties to join the ranks made incomparable by pure men and a clean, just and progressive platform. If the women and the men who consider themselves pledged by integrity and live principle to the aid of great questions, to the putting down of great evils and the establishment of grand measures would work, would trust and falter not nor pause until the election, in every town where integrity and conscience responds to the call of the earnest, we would elect St. John by a wonderful majority. And this would mean the election of purity and growth in all good directions. Would that God's hand would stir up the idle hearts! Would that a more universal knowledge could displace the ignorance and apathy of our men and women! I often think that a residence abroad in countries where wine and ale are the water, where the masses are sacrificed to the few, where gain and custom shut out justice and thought, would be the swiftest and most convincing education for every American citizen to the needs of his country. To the truth that immorality unchecked and unfrowned on in legislators and legislated, that the imprisoning mold of senseless traditions are sure and simple death to the future of a country.

The following is a rendition of "America" made by one of the ladies of the St. John club, Mrs. Geo. W. Chambers, for the use of that body.

Our country! 'Tis for thee,
Land pledged to liberty,
We do and dare;
Each man with right imbue,
Each woman's soul endue,
Each child receive anew,
God of our prayer!

We lift to Thee the cause
Of honest men and laws!
Lord, guide our ways!
Deliver us from wiles
From tyranny and spoils
Corruption that assails
And Thine the praise.

The land and homes we'd save
Their deep foundations lave
In tides of wrong.
Each heart, and voice, and brain,
From coward sloth regain!
Thy servant's cause sustain!
Lord, hear our song!

Mrs. S. F. Grubb.

A PRAIRIE FLOWER MISSION.

Dear Union Signal:—"Blessed is he that considereth the poor," has been literally verified in the experience of the ladies who participated in the observance of Flower Mission day in Nebraska. With us, it was the initiative service. The inception of any given enterprise is marked with irregularities, and yet, such was the harmony of sentiment, the unanimity of action that not a jar was felt. The officers of our state institutions, without exception, did their utmost to make the day memorable. Donations of flowers were abundant. Most of the state institutions are located at Lincoln

In consequence of the contract labor system, the services at the penitentiary were held in the chapel Sunday June 8, Rev. P. M. Howe, the chaplain, presided. Mrs. H. W. Hardy moved every heart by the touching parallel she drew, of the mother-love clinging to her wayward boy, and the love of Christ for the prodigal son. Miss Minnie Parker rendered, with telling effect, the "Wine Cup." The writer told the story of the invalid author of the Flower Mission. Of the holy ministry of the flowers in her sick chamber, and how she sent their perfume to every lonely cell in all this fair land of ours. The penitentiary choir, with their own organist, sang blessed words—304 bouquets, each bearing a scripture text, tied with the white ribbon of the W. C. T. U. had been laid upon as many plates at breakfast, and the recipients came to the service with the flowers fastened on the left breast, in strange contrast with the stripes of black and white of their prison garb. The hearts of many were thus already moved to thoughts of "God and home and native land," and never was audience more receptive. We disbanded. A sense of something hallowed, had entered every heart to abide.

The insane hospital was visited at 3 p. m. Sunday. An audience of 322 insane and half as many sane, greeted us in the chapel. A song and prayer service followed and again the writer told the simple story of the sick girl and the message she sent of hope, and loving Jesus, to the "shut in" classes of society. Surely speaker never looked into so many wondering eyes, to read stranger histories, or more varied responses.

Many were moved to tears, others to devotional attitudes and expressions. One clear, cultured voice, with no trace of wandering, followed Mrs. Jansen's solo of "Home Sweet Home," to the end, and upon adjournment she (the wife of one of Nebraska's most able statesmen) came to me, with a light in her dark eyes I shall never forget, clasped my hand and said, "And I had a 'sweet home' once, you have brought me memories of that sweet home; mine no more, which will linger till I enter that other home, where disease can not follow me." Dr. and Mrs. Matthewson conducted us through the seven wards and we suspended, from each of the three gas fixtures in each ward, a basket of flowers, with the white ribbon and the scripture text. Wild, wondering, happy or tearful eyes turned upon us meanwhile, low incoherent mutterings grating upon our ears. One pale faced girl threw her arms about Mrs. Matthewson, clinging with death like tenacity said, "Oh Mrs. M. I'll never let you go till you promise to take me back to my own dear precious home." I stood adjusting the basket wire, a slender arm fell gently about my waist, a soft voice whispered, "Oh dear Mrs. Newman, I am an orphan girl and an epileptic. I am sane except at the intervals of the spasms. It is necessary I should be here, but oh! the Saviour bless you, for your sweet words today, and for bringing us flowers of home, and thoughts of Jesus. Will you send a lone girl's love to the sick girl at Louisville who sent us the flowers?"

In other wards, strong, violent men were subdued and tearful, their passions hushed as though the excited brain rested under a spell. Surely, it was blessed to be there.

Monday, June 9, Miss Casseday's birthday, the entire morning was given to preparation. From 12 a. m. to 1 o'clock we visited the city jail. Dark, dismal, without chair or bench, the intoxicated men stood, as we, in the corridor during the service. But every eye glistened with recurrent rays of the lost hope of home, sweet home. One cell, apart, was occupied by a man of character and repute, an expert machinist. Now, in the wildest fury of the delirium tremens, his face pressed against the iron bars, with his unsteady hands, he strove to break them asunder. Unyielding, he would fall upon his knees, stretch his arms wildly through the gratings, thrust his trembling fingers into the soil, in a vain effort to uproot the serpents which were hissing at his feet. We stood before him. The strange fire in his eyes kindled like a demon. Mrs. Pratt passed a bouquet through the gratings. The glaring eye calmed, the demonical voice grew still; the man extended his hand, took the flowers, laid them in his other shaking palm, and said with steady tone, "Thank you, ladies, thank you," changed them to the other open palm, gazed upon them an instant, as if taking the last glimpse of the beautiful, the lost, and said again, with painful tremor, "Thank you, ladies, thank you." A moment more, and the crazed brain dashed itself against the stone wall, as if recklessly to dash out every memory of the once beautiful past. We left him with the serpents of the "Still". Oh, accursed woes of the accursed traffic in human souls! At the county alms house thirty sad faced men and women listened reverently and took the flowers with a strange expression of surrendered love which only comes to such as have gone "Over the hill to the poor house."

The inmates of the Home of the Friendless, were made to feel, they were no longer "Friendless." At the county jail, such was inspiration of the scene, the jailor dashed off a charming little poem to the "Invalid Jennie C."

In the city of Omaha, the sick in all the hospitals, stretched their fevered hands for the fragrant blossoms, as though a glimpse of heaven's flower land flashed upon their receding vision. At the county jail there were silent tableaux, expressive of vivid memories, all too painful to witness. The secretary, Mrs. Dodge, writes: "Snell, the murderer of Jessie Snell, was presented with a special bouquet from a member of the M. E. church, with the scripture text, 'Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as wool.' The people of Omaha responded with donations of exquisite flowers of all varieties."

At Kearney our peerless president, Mrs. Ford, with assistants, conducted services at the state reform school, and after the distribution of flowers, every inmate (61) took the pledge.

At all these points the individual sick were visited and many fervent prayers went up from lips well nigh dumb with pain for God's blessing upon the saintly sufferer at Louisville. Altogether, the day was memorable as yielding the richest, sweetest, most notable tokens of love's labor rewarded, which have ever been chronicled in the calendar of deeds and fruits of the W. C. T. U. in Nebraska. Its impress upon public thought is indicated, in the formal request of the editor of the Democrat to the W. C. T. U. to repeat the services at the expense of the Democrat. Surely that tin pair of hands at Louisville, wasted to very thinness by the long ravages of disease, will take on new strength as these glad tidings of great joy come up from the dark places illumined by God's messages, and made fragrant with the breath of flowers.

THE OUTLOOK FROM A SICK ROOM.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Since writing the letter published in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 15th, I have received several beautiful letters.

I was not able to leave my room the day appointed for national prayer, but two or three Christian woman met in my room and we took up the topics one by one, and we plead with God for our nation, our sin-cursed nation. In my agony in prayer I asked God to direct me to a passage and I took my Bible and opened to these words, they are found in Ezekiel the 22d chapter, the 29th, 30th and 31st verses: "The people of the land have used oppression and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully." Did not these words seem as though they were spoken to us today. We have oppressed the stranger wrongfully. And I sought for a man among them that should make up the hedge and stand in the gap, but I found none. Oh, how sinful we are; the same sins that were pronounced against Jerusalem are the sins of our own nation today. We have used oppression and exercised robbery and have vexed the poor and needy. Yea, we have oppressed the stranger wrongfully, we have forbidden him from coming to our shores. Oh that God would avert our just punishment, oh, that He could find a man at Chicago today "that should make up the hedge and stand in the gap" before the Lord. I believe God has sought for such a man but I fear has found none. The rabble of this country have beat and tormented the Chinese and instead of being punished by this free country, our drunken congress only smiled; and with their tremendous foot kicked the Chinese out, but kept the drunken mob to pillage and burn. God certainly has a controversy with this nation and his judgments never fail. In the catalogue of Israel's sins was this: "They have oppressed the stranger wrongfully." How hideous must our sin be in the sight of God. I believe the golden shore of California will be rocked with earthquakes, yea, the very nation from Maine to California will be racked with dissension; financial troubles, drunken mobs and riots will engulf us with the lava of fire and sword. Oh, that today God would find a man "that should make up the hedge and stand in the gap." Oh the gap, fearful chasm, when I look my head swims.

"They have devoured souls, they have taken treasure and precious things, they have made her many widows and orphans." Oh, Lord, Thou alone know how many her legalized vice of intemperance has made. Find a man "that should make up the hedge and stand in the gap." Is there such a man? Oh, dear sisters pray, pray earnestly for such a man.

I send you a beautiful piece of poetry written by Mrs. Mary J. Floyd, which has been a great comfort to me and I think will comfort other sick ones. In a letter she says, "I feel that I ought not to withhold from you the verses which the Lord gave me, expressive of His recent gracious dealing in raising me up from a very severe attack of lumbago."

I have passed through the valley of suffering and pain
But Jesus abode with me there;
And His presence sustained, and His love it remained
While faith took the healing by prayer.
Oh, fear not this valley so dark and so drear
If Jesus shall lead your feet there;
Keep the eye fixed by faith on the Healer divine,
And receive all his fulness by prayer.

Oh, the lessons I learned in that valley of pain,
Were so sweet, and so rich, and so blest,
If Thou wilt, blessed Lord, I would pass through again
And be taught by Thy love all the rest.
And when I go forth into labor for Thee,
Keep mine hand firmly held in Thine own;
Let my time, and my words, and my life ever be
All for Jesus, yes, Jesus alone.

With love for the suffering and sorrowing ones and thanks for the dear letters, I am yours,

MRS. W. W. DENNY.

CONGRATULATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The St. Louis County W. C. T. U. has just sent to the presidential nominees of the Prohibition party the following letter of congratulation:

GOV. JOHN P. ST. JOHN and WM. DANIEL,—Dear Sirs: On behalf of, and representing the St. Louis County W. C. T. U. we desire to tender our most earnest congratulations on your nomination for the places of president and vice president by the Prohibition party in convention assembled at Pittsburgh, July 23, 1884. The principles enunciated by the platform of that party make it peculiarly fitting that the women of America should regard your nomination, and the issues of the election, with the most profound interest. If you become the chief executive officers of this nation, you will represent for the first time in the history of the world, "a government of the people, by the people, for the people." Your election will inaugurate an administration that will usher in "the acceptable year," the "year of jubilee," when the people will not only be redeemed from the evil of the liquor power, but when the bondage of caste in sex shall cease. The daughters of America look for their day star to arise in the dawn of your election. But whether success or failure awaits you, we know and rejoice that a great moral victory has been achieved in the brave, grand and just principles enunciated by the platform of the party which you represent.

Believing, working and praying for your success, we are and shall remain

Yours most faithfully,
MRS. SOPHIE F. GRUBB, Pres.
MRS. CHLOE STURDY, Rec. Sec.

A NEW WORK FOR WOMEN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Much has been written regarding proper and remunerative employment for women. Silk culture, poultry raising and many other theories have been well ventilated and the result has no doubt been very beneficial; but there are many ladies who cannot raise silk worms or follow employment of that kind. To this class I wish to introduce what to me was an entirely new field. Some three months since my uncle from Albany, N. Y., was visiting at our house. We were talking of plated ware, in the manufacture of which he is engaged, and to gratify my curiosity he made a plating machine and replated our knives, forks, spoons and castor. It cost only $9.00 and did the work perfectly. Some of our neighbors saw what we had plated and asked me to do some plating for them. I have since worked twenty-two days and cleared $94.34. At almost every house I got from $2.00 to $3.00 worth of plating to do, and such work is most all profit. This business is as nice for ladies as gentlemen. It is indoor work and anyone can do it.

I am making a cabinet, and to any of your readers who will send me a curiosity I will send full directions for making and using a plating machine like mine, that will plate gold, silver and nickle. Send small pieces of stone, ore, shells, etc. My object is to get as varied a collection of specimens from as many different parts of the country as possible.

MISS M. F. CASEY.

A BIBLE WORK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Among your correspondents who are largely women, I do not discover one class represented whom I know are included in heart, as belonging to your number.

While reading Solomon's song, 1, 5–8, I was deeply impressed with the symbolic fitness of my yesterday's experience and of those I studied with so much profit and pleasure God's own word.

Mrs. Jennie B. Beauchamp, state superintendent of the Texas W. C. T. U., says in an article in Woman at Work, "In the ministry woman has created the office of Bible reader." I wish this could be a watchword all along the line, just a Bible reader, nothing more, that comprehends all. The grandest university in the world cannot graduate a Bible reader to equal one inspired by, whom? Let us read: "And He was clothed in a garment dipped in blood. His name is called the Word of God, and out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword."

But it is of this little company of whom I was writing, that as I read such blessed words and whose faces lit up with such light and love as we appropriated them to this present time. They seemed to say I am black but comely. Oh ye daughters of Jerusalem, look not upon me because I am black, (as Seeser translates it) because the sun hath looked fiercely at me: my mother's children were angry with me. They appointed me to be keeper of the vineyards, but my vineyard, which is my own have not I kept. Tell me, oh thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest and where lettest thou thy flocks rest at noon? for why should I appear like a veiled mourner by the flocks of my companions.

These are questions we must, as Christian women, answer promptly. We have no time to consider, it is not left for us to decide, God has written as it were in blood. He whose garment was dipped in blood. Love thy neighbor as thyself. Do unto them as ye would they should do to you.

The Bible, though consisting of reading of the highest culture, can enrich and make wise the simplest minds. It is by reading and explaining by reference, they catch the spirit and meaning of the word.

Our class hold themselves as belonging to the W. C. T. U. Would it be possible to have articles adapted to the colored sisters in THE UNION SIGNAL?

Yours in Christ, JULIA A. LITTLE.

CHURCH AND HALL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I wish to make a suggestion to our unions, growing out of my recent work in New England. Most of the unions have their lectures Sabbath evenings in a church, and so far as my inquiries can find out, they draw in only the ordinary congregations of the churches. But recently I was called to Westerly, R. I. Here the wide awake president of the union said: "I want you to give one lecture in a church, and the next evening we will go into the town hall for the second. There are many who will come to hear you in a hall who will not go into a church." The day of the second lecture posters were sent to every house in the town inviting to a free lecture in the town hall. I think the wisdom of this union might well be imitated. We want to identify the churches with the work and rouse them to a sense of responsibility, but we desire also to reach the masses of the people who seldom or never go to church. How shall we do this? We want to make the movement popular. We shall never do this so long as we associate it entirely with the churches. On looking over my audiences, I have been pained with the thought: "How many of those who most need this gospel of temperance are here?"

Cannot we solve the problem of reaching the masses better than the churches are solving it, or must we follow only in their lines? I am for a more energetic outpushing. Let us unite the enterprising spirit of the age to the spiritual power of the kingdom, and I am convinced our progress will be greatly accelerated.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The report from Winona in your last week's issue was correct, with the exception that through misunderstanding it was credited with more than I deserve. If you should be so kind as to correct it, you would oblige me very much.

Father Byzewski took the pledge on his own accord. And in referring to the children about the carrying beer from saloons, I did not refer to all Polanders, nor to Polanders only, but to all nationalities who live yet in so uncivilized a state as to demoralize their children by sending them over the thresholds where in general, the most shameful and nefarious work is practiced. The influence of the Rev. J. B. Cotter and Rev. J. R. Byzewski, who were not overlooked in that report, is not only the strong backbone to our societies of Winona, but to the entire state of Minnesota. Therefore, they deserve more credit than I do.

A PUZZLING QUESTION.

FOR RECITATION.

We greet you, dear friends, in the kindliest way;
We are glad you are here, for we've something to say,
Some questions to ask, for we're all puzzled, quite;
We wish you to answer, to give us more light.

You send us to Sunday school year after year;
We are taught to abhor both the wine and the beer;
We are told there is poison in every drop;
If to drink we begin, 'twill be hard then to stop.

God's word tells us, too, that sorrow and woe
Are the portion of those to the wine cup who go;
That misery and pain in this world shall be given,
And when life is ended no entrance to heaven.

We wish to inquire if this can be true;
If all that God says you believe He will do;
If rum is the fiend we are taught to believe,
Who lieth in wait all our hopes to deceive?

And if it is true, all these boys wish to know
What your license is for, with its sin and its woe?
Why you've planted a rum shop on every street,
And spread such a net for our unwary feet?

We love you, and thank you for all that you teach,
But we ask you to practice as well as to preach.

THE FIRST MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

The twins' Sabbath school lesson that afternoon had been "Paul's First Missionary Journey." They were so quiet at tea time that Aunt Clara, fearing they were ill, sent them to bed quite early.

No sooner were they left alone than Hettie exclaimed: "Nettie, let's you and me be missionaries."

"That will be fun," said Nettie. "Let's start right off tomorrow morning."

Hettie thought perhaps the fun would not be just of Nettie's sort, but she only said: "Where shall we go? Paul didn't have to go very far from home, did he."

Nettie, a little troubled at this idea, slowly said, "I don't know. But can't we be missionaries without going way off? I don't believe I want to go to Africa or Asia, Hettie," raising herself up on her elbow, "that's an awful ways off in the geography."

"That's so," replied Hettie; "but perhaps we won't have to stay away nights, anyway. We'll ask Aunt Clara."

"Yes, and if it's too far off, she won't let us go." And then they dropped to sleep.

Aunt Clara, who had returned for something, overheard what they had been saying. She smiled a queer little smile, nodded her head and tiptoed away.

Now the twins had a good many faults which Aunt Clara plainly saw. Rather willful and selfish, they did not make themselves useful very cheerfully. They were always rushing headlong into plans, and then as quickly backing out when things went wrong. But their mamma was dead, and so Aunt Clara patiently tried every way to improve them.

The next moning they told her, and she said they might be missionaries, and come home nights for awhile. Then what a busy morning! They had not thought of any place to go, but Hettie said, "We'll have to get ready first, anyway."

So they stowed away tracts, old books, toys, and garments; and Aunt Clara put in a feather duster, needle, thread, thimble, some liniment, and flowers. "Just as if we were going to work," whispered Nettie to her sister.

Afternoon came, but how it rained!

"We can't go missionarying today," cried both, dismally.

"As you are not expected anywhere today," said Aunt Clara, "you might play missionary and visit the family."

Their faces brightened; and a few minutes later two little figures bearing a basket, stood at grandma's door.

"We are missionaries," Hettie began "How is your rheumatism today, ma'am?"

"Very bad, dear," replied grandma. "Now, if I only had some liniment, it might help me."

As Hettie pulled out the bottle, she remembered that she had frowned when asked to go after it before dinner.

"Perhaps you'd like some tracts," said Nettie.

"So I would, dear; but my old eyes could not read them, and I get right lonesome here all alone, just thinking." Nettie blushed, for she always pouted when sent to read to grandma, and hastily broke in with, "Missionaries always read to people." And she read it aloud.

"Now, that has done me so much good," exclaimed grandma, while vainly trying to thread her needle. Hettie, who had been soberly watching her, and who usually called grandma's needle a bother, rose softly, took it and threaded it; while Nettie took out the flowers, which she remembered that grandma dearly loved, and placed them in a vase on the mantel

"How your bright eyes have cheered me up! Come often, dearies," she said, as they left.

"Yes, ma'am," they replied, with faces uncomfortably flushed.

Brother Bob's room was next; and what a room! Bed unmade, ashes, brooms, shoes, and garments all over, and Bob in the midst, without jacket or stockings, wearing his shabbiest pair of trousers, and mending.

"How do you do!" exclaimed Bob, looking up at them, as they entered the room. "On a missionary trip, are you? Why, of course, you can do something," he replied in answer to Hettie's questions. "Here is my coat with a rip, and all my trousers want a button, and my socks—just look at them," said Bob, as he held a very ragged pair of socks up to the light.

Hettie took the pants out of his hand; and Bob fishing out a handful of buttons, piled them, with several pairs of trousers, into Nettie's lap.

"Just excuse the looks of my room," continued he; "for my sisters have gone missionarying among the heathens, and there is no body to clean up."

The girls glanced at each other, as they remembered that they had not done their upstairs work that morning, and how often they refused to mend for Bob. Now they worked with a will, and soon straightened all things, finding Aunt Clara's contributions quite useful, and tucked the ragged garments in the basket. On leaving, Bob said, gratefully, "'Tisn't every boy that's blessed with two sisters to missionary to him."

They laughed a little outside, and then started for Aunt Clara's room. "Well, how do you like being missionaries?" she said.

"It's fun," cried Nettie; "and we did missionary some"

"Yes," broke in Hettie, "and I guess they missionaried some to us, too. Aunt Clara," added she, "I guess we ought to stay home and be real home missionaries."

And Aunt Clara smiled that same queer smile, and replied, "That is the best kind of missionaries for little girls to be."—Well Spring.

True worth is in being, not seeming,—
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by and by;
For whatever men say in their blindness,
And in spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALKS.

Dear Children:—I promised you a "merry thought" last week, but all promises are subject to the "powers that be". And when our general asks for space, far be it from me, a captain, to put in a plea for any thought, merry or sad. I do not mean to break promises however, and trust that this will explain why it was necessary. The "merry thought" I had in mind for you, had to do with the Bethesda mission, on South Clark street, which I have so often told you of. There are a dozen or more babies in the Creche or Cradle Mission, and perhaps one hundred children in the Band of Hope, Sunday school and children's church, who will be looking forward to Christmas very soon. It is very strange how soon Christmas keeps coming every year. It often seems as if the Christmas gifts were no sooner laid away than around comes old Father Time and says, "Ye weren't looking for me, but here I be."

Now it occurred to me that you might like to help celebrate Christmas this year with these new little soldiers at Bethesda, and that you would join with some other divisions of the army in preparing and then sending in to us Christmas boxes for their Christmas tree.

Have I hinted sufficiently? If it does not prove to be a real "merry thought" to you, don't do it, but if your hearts say "Yes," I am sure you will enjoy your own holidays the more for the kindly remembrance of these little ones who have so few pleasures anywhere or any time.

Now I have a conundrum for you. It was sent from a little boy in Cincinnati who made it himself about his auntie whom you all know.

"Why is Aunt Nelly Bayley like an Indian dog?" Give it up? Well, then I'll tell you next week, but I should like to get an answer from some of you.

Captain Deborah.

"THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT."

REV. F. WAGSTAFF, F. R. H. S.

"Listen here wife! Here's a bit of news for you in the paper this week," exclaimed Will Davidson, as, for a wonder, he sat by his own fireside one Saturday night, reading the newspaper. We say "for a wonder," since it was a sight not to be witnessed in that home once in a twelve month. Saturday evening usually found Will at the "Coachbuilders' Arms," where, if the whole truth must be told, he generally managed to pass most of his evenings. Not that Will was a drunkard, in the common acceptation of the term. Once in a way, he would admit, he "took more than he could carry;" but as he could "carry" more than most men, and yet pass muster as a sober man—unless the judge were a stern and uncompromising teetotaler—the fact that he spent a very large share of his wages on drink, and yet was seldom drunk, need excite no particular surprise. How it came about that he was at home so much earlier than usual on the evening in question, and that he was reading the paper there instead of at the "Coachbuilders' Arms," it would, perhaps, have been difficult to explain. Certainly his wife could not make it out: and as she sat doing her best to mend a ragged shirt for her husband's use on the morrow, she cast many a wistful glance at him, which grew into a look of perfect wonderment when he broke the long silence with the remark above quoted.

Finding no response—for Mrs. Davidson was too much astounded to reply—the husband looked up and exclaimed, "D'ye hear, Susan? Here's some news for you."

"For me, Will? Why what can there be in the paper that concerns me?"

"Why this; just listen while I read it: 'Married Women's Property Act.—By this act, which received the royal assent last Tuesday, there will come into force a new state of things in relation to married women. From and after the 1st of January next, a married woman will be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing by will or otherwise, of any property as if she were an unmarried woman, and she may enter into any contract without the participation of her husband, either in her losses or gains.'"

"There, Susan, you've often talked about what you'd do if you had money o' your own; now's your time to set up for yourself, and make a fortune independent o' me."

And as he said this Will Davidson laughed heartily, for, like so many others of his class, he was at heart as kind and pleasant a soul as one could wish to meet with, and never seemed to suspect that his free and open spending of his wages at the public house involved any special hardship or wrong upon his wife and family.

"I must get the money first, Will," was the quiet answer, accompanied by a sigh.

"Why you earn a lot already, when you go out washing, old girl."

"Yes, a few shillings a week, but it's all wanted for one thing or another for the children and ourselves."

"Well, you see, whatever you earn will be your own after next New Year's day," said the husband. "I suppose, according to law, it's mine at present; but then it'll be your own to 'dispose of by will or otherwise,' as the paper says. So, as I say, you can make your fortune independent o' me."

"I'd rather make it, such as it is, together, Will," was the wife's quiet reply; and as the baby's cry just then called the mother from the room, nothing more was said, and the husband resumed his reading, quickly becoming absorbed in the story of some robbery or other item of news.

It was half an hour or more before Mrs. Davidson resumed her work at the little table; and whatever her own thoughts may have been her husband seemed to be too much interested in the paper to invite any renewal of the conversation. Thus the rest of the evening passed away in silence, and though Will Davidson from time to time turned the paper about, he appeared to find nothing more that he deemed worth reading aloud.

Yet, to tell the truth, the man, though silent, was less selfishly so than his wife gave him credit for. Had her eyes not been so closely fixed upon her work she might have seen him, now and again, stealing a hasty glance at herself, with an occasional look of earnest thoughtfulness at the neat but scanty furniture in the room, or at the often patched dress that she wore.

The fact is Will Davidson's own words, spoken in jest, had set him thinking, the more particularly as his wife's quiet replies had fastened themselves, like arrows, in his mind. "A fortune independent o' me!" Not much chance of that, poor lass, he thought, when she wants all she can earn for the children and ourselves. "I'd rather make it together, Will!" Those words as the evening wore on, seemed to be printed all over the page, and turn the paper which way he would, they stared him in the face at every turn. When, after a little supper, which was eaten almost as quietly as the evening had been passed, the man carried the words to bed with him.

And so it came about that for many a day after, Will Davidson grew more and more thoughtful, whether at his work, or his home; and though his wife was glad to notice that he returned earlier than he had been accustomed to do, she had to make herself content for the most part with his silent company, as he sat and read some book or paper that he brought in his pocket and carried away again. But then, she thought, Will always had been a bit of a politician, and she had quite as much as she could do to mind her work. It was pleasant, as she saw him sitting there, to feel that he was not at the public-house; but then she sighed as she remembered that he had not given her much more of his wages than he used to do. A shilling or two more, perhaps; but not much.

So matters went on till Saturday night the 30th of December, 1882. The children were in bed, and Mrs. Davidson hung a few things by the scanty fire to air, while she resumed her usual weekly task of patching and darning. Her husband had been home to tea, went out for an hour, and had now come home again. She looked up as he drew his chair close to the hearth, and held his hands towards the feeble blaze.

"Well, wife, so Monday's the first day of your independence!"

"What do you mean, Will?"

"Why the new act o' parliament, you know, that I told you about. Married women can begin to have a fortune o' their own now, you remember."

"But that's not for the like o' me," she answered. "It's for people that have got plenty o' their own, or for them that can make money in business, not for a workman's wife like me."

"And couldn't you make money in a shop, Susan?"

"What's the use of asking that, Will? Where's the money to start with?"

"But haven't you often said that if you'd got a few pounds you could keep a shop like your cousin Tom's wife?"

"Yes; but she had the money left her, don't you remember? Fifty pounds it was, you know, and as Tom wasn't very strong she started the shop, and well they've done at it, too."

"Well, wife, there's nobody to leave you fifty pounds, nor me either, as I knows of, but here's half the money, or what represents it, in this book."

So saying, Will Davidson took a post office bank book from his pocket and placed it in the lap of his astonished wife. She took it up and opened it; but her bewilderment was too extreme to enable her even to see that she was holding the book the wrong way up.

"I don't understand, Will—I can't make out—"

"No, wife, I know you can't, so I must tell you what it is. You remember my joking you about making your fortune?"

"Yes, Will."

"Well, that was about the latter end of August. I never meant my words to be anything more than a joke at what I'd been reading in the paper. But when I said something about your being independent o' me, you made answer that you'd rather make our fortune together. Somehow them words stuck to me. I couldn't get 'em out o' my head night nor day; and they made me think how selfish it was o' me to spend so much o' my wages at the public-house, while you were at work so hard at home. And then I called to mind about your cousin Tom's wife, and what I'd often heard you say, and I wished I could give you fifty pounds to start a shop.

"From that I got to asking myself what I'd been spending for drink; and I reckoned up that, with one thing and another, I often spent as much as twelve or fifteen shillings a week on drink for myself and what I'd treated others to. 'I'll have no more o' this,' I said to myself, and off I went and signed the pledge. Then I thought I'd try and see what I could do against the 1st of January. I'd got just seventeen weeks to do it in; and as I'm generally on piece work, I managed easy to make up a pound a week over and above the fifteen or sixteen shillings I brought home to you. This has made £17; but I made up my mind at first to save £20, and then £25 by the end o' the year. So I went to the governor and told him what I'd done, and asked if he could put anything extra in my way that I could make up the rest. He said he was glad I was going to be a saving man, and several times he's given me special jobs to do that he's paid extra for, and I just managed tonight to go to the post office after tea, and paid in what has brought it up to five-and-twenty pounds. And more than that, Susan, I'm to be a foreman next month, in Jones's place, as he's going to another job. So here's something for you to start with, if you like to take shop somewhere, and be under the new act of parliament."

The story was so wonderful that Susan Davidson could only throw her arms round her husband's neck, and cry for joy.

"We'll make our fortune together, Will," she said, as soon as she could speak for sobbing. "Twenty pounds 'll be quite enough to begin with, in a small way; and if you'll help me Will, when you're at home o' nights, we'll soon manage to increase our stock."

And thus it is, that Mrs. Davidson has commenced shop-keeping, and, so far as we can learn, is doing a thriving business in a small way. What with her profits and her husband's higher wages as a foreman, she was able to increase her capital to fifty pounds before midsummer came round; and it need be no secret between ourselves that there is a nice little "nest egg" growing in the post office bank. Will Davidson wanted it to be all in his wife's name; but she insisted on it that "they'd make their fortune, such as it was, together;" and so it happens that each has got a small deposit account, and between the two it is a clear understanding that husband and wife are partners.

A "PARABLE FROM NATURE."

MRS. L. A. NASH.

A friend of ours had some kittens that were deserted by the mother cat, an unnatural occurrence; but we suppose she met with an untimely end. The babies must soon have had the same fate had not a neighbor's Pussy, likewise a mother, heard their infant "mews"—instinctively guessed there was starvation in the sound; and although she knew nothing of their hiding place, come across meadow land, the distance of two blocks off, to their rescue. She became their foster mother, returning at intervals to supply their wants, and then going back to her own kittens. It is hardly necessary "to point the moral," and yet I will. The same thing has been enacted by Christian women with the true mother heart, and will be enacted as long as this "wicked world" endures. She has left her own ease and comes out to rescue the waifs and strays of the streets of the big cities—the walled Babels of iniquity—and these she places out in the country home, "scatters them abroad on the face of the earth," according to the old command that was forced, "nolens volens," on those obstinate city builders of the ancient day. Notably, one noble woman I have known in the "old country," Annie Macpherson by name. She has been engaged in the "rescue work" for upwards of twenty years. Picking out of the London courts and alleys, starving ragged urchins, who had no mothers, or none worthy the name, for drink had degraded them. These she fosters with a mother's care, helped by sisters in the work and the brethren's gold and silver, in her industrial school she calls a "bee hive". When they have learned the art of being useful and have learned the love of the Savior, she brings them out to this country to help the farmer and his wife, often in the isolation of their "backwoods", and who welcome the handy little city child into their hearts and homes.

Annie Macpherson has made two trips a year across the ocean for these twenty years (for the most part her own self), bringing with her a train of fifty little rescued ones to lead useful and noble lives here where she deems it easier.

Sisters of the Canadian W. C. T. U., these little ones have been made over to you now to foster! They quickly grow up into the working man and woman. Never rest until your laws shelter them so, that the fiery germ (for they are for the most drunkards' children) may lay dormant, that the saloon may not dog their steps, putting "light to tinder," as it were, till they be body and soul destroyed.

Look for goodness, look for gladness,
You will meet them all the while;
If you bring a smiling visage
To the glass, you meet a smile.

Do you hear the wild birds calling?
Do you hear them, O my heart?
Do you see the blue air falling
From their rushing wings apart?

With young mosses they are flocking,
For they hear the laughing breeze
With dewy fingers rocking
Their little cradles in the trees.

"Rest is not quitting the busy career;
Rest is the fitting of self to its sphere;
'Tis loving and serving the Highest and Best,
'Tis onward, unswerving, and that is true Rest."

The Sunday School Lesson.

Aug. 31.] Third Quarter, No. 9. [1884.

TOPIC: GOD'S WORKS AND WORD.

LESSON TEXT.—Psalms 19:1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou hast magnified Thy word above all Thy name. Psalms 138:2.

1. Some people complain of the Bible, saying it is not easily understood by the common mind. Nature is God's primer—written in the universal language that everybody understands. If one would know God however, the primer thoroughly conned will help much to make the Bible plain.

2. Nature alone is a poor revealer of God's character. We can believe that He is a God of truth because His works have the exactness of truth, but without the Bible we should have nothing with which to personally prove His truth. His promises are indeed "yea and amen," but Nature never publishes them. We might suspect that He is a God of love from the luxurious provision He has made for all His creatures in Nature, but there is nothing we are so doubtful of as the love of another, simply because it is so precious, when really given. The Bible comes and says "God is love" and He "so loved the world," and Nature helps us to believe it.

3. Nature has little power to convert the soul. The only case known to me is that of Brother Lawrence, the mystic of the seventeenth century, who in the winter seeing a tree stripped of its leaves, and considering that within a little time the leaves would be renewed and after that the flowers and fruit would appear, he "received such a high view of the providence and power of God" that it kindled at once in him the flame of love to God. But Brother Lawrence had been a hearer of the Word ere this. Nature's revelation only supplemented the truth which he already had stored away in his soul.

4. The rewards of God are no small part of His economy. In the keeping of His law He has designed the greatest possible beneficence to the human race. It is not too much to say that God does not ask us to keep His law for any other sake than our own, i. e.: our own as related to the welfare of all. It is as if one should construct a music box to play a certain tune. The owner can get that melody only when he allows the mechanism to work exactly as the designer arranged it to work. We are God's music boxes, arranged so as to bring forth the sweetest harmonies if we keep His laws. Breaking or disregarding them, melody and harmony are both impossible.

5. Because we are this, is it so desirable that every thought of the heart and word of the mouth shall be in perfect accord with His plan for us. We do not pray for this accord because God desires it for His own glory, as is so often preached, but rather because His glory is the perfection of our own right development, the flower of our own true happiness, and so He inspires the petition for perfect adaptation to His will.

SCIENTIFIC INSTRUCTION.

The department of scientific instruction in the N. W. C. T. U., stands now at a very critical point in its history. The great heart of motherhood all over the nation throbs in unison today, and from north, south, east and west comes the "Macedonian cry" to the national superintendent of the department, our self-sacrificing, devoted Mrs. Hunt. Pennsylvania is to be the chief objective point during the coming winter, but other states will have her help in the intervals of the Pennsylvania campaign.

But the "fulfilling of the law" now in force in five states, requires the adoption of suitable text-books. The department may congratulate itself on having made "fashionable" the teaching it desires, but our faithful, skillful workers do not propose to "give away their market." It has cost too much of labor, sacrifice and prayer, and the author who would secure N. W. C. T. U. endorsement must be both sound and radical on the temperance question. Not more than one or two of the many books issued, are so wisely, accurately and carefully written as to merit the unqualified approval of this department, though some have already found it wisdom to "make a virtue of necessity," and are planning to bring up to our standard the next editions of their works.

But no writer whose book is now ready, seems to have realized the full scope of the law, and the physiologies now in the market, (including Steele's Hygienic Physiology which we have so heartily endorsed, and its abridged edition) are adapted only to high schools and the older classes in common schools. Several authors have attempted to prepare the intermediate book, but their manuscripts were rejected because not simple enough for child use; this has caused a delay, unfortunate but unavoidable. The friends of the cause will be glad to know that the last pages of the book for intermediate grades, have now gone to press, and that it is promised us early in the fall. An eminent scientist who has examined this manuscript, pronounces it "the best yet written." In her work for the past four years, Mrs. Hunt has become familiar with the popular fallacies concerning alcohol, etc., and she has made ample use of the knowledge thus gained, in her careful revision of this book, which will prove, we trust, to be the one for which our workers are waiting and praying. Its title is "Temperance Physiology for intermediate classes in graded and common schools." It presents in a simple form the most obvious facts of anatomy and physiology, but makes these subordinate to hygiene and narcotics. The appended table of contents shows that it is really a "temperance physiology."

To place in the lower grades a book designed for older pupils, would defeat the purpose of the law and ensure disastrous reaction. By no means, then, allow high school books to be selected for intermediate and grammar schools; it is much better that the pupil should have no book at all, than one above his capacity. Persuade your school boards to defer until this is ready, the selection of a book for the lower classes. This is a vital point, and one to be most carefully guarded.

Plans are already in progress, under Mrs. Hunt's direction, for the preparation of a primary book. The scheme proposes to place the laws of life, or the study of physiological truths, side by side, in every grade of schools, with those of money making, or the study of arithmetical truths; side by side, from the human, legal standpoint, infinitely higher in God's sight and in the sight of every true parent and teacher, for "Is not the life more than meat and the body more than raiment?"

CONTENTS OF THE NEW BOOK.

I. Alcohol—Properties; Definition of Narcotic; Alcoholic Appetite; Fermentation.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

The following query came to us just in time to hand it to Miss Willard for an answer, before she left for the east. As the querist desires to know if "we" mean to say this and that by the resolution at the head of our editorial columns, let it be understood that THE UNION SIGNAL did not interpret in any way the action of the national society. Miss Willard has without doubt given the correct exegesis.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Hearing a discussion on the meaning of the heading of your paper or its first column, in regard to the attitude of the N. W. C. T. U., toward political parties, it seemed to some of us weak brained people that it was not quite plain enough, and won't you please answer a few questions in your paper so that we all may know just what you mean. Did you mean that if either Republican or Democratic convention accepted the national memorial that the N. W. C. T. U. would give only to that one their influence, or did you mean to any political party? and now since the Prohibition party has accepted your memorial will the N. W. C. T. U. work for that party and that party alone? Please write very plainly so that the most ignorant woman that reads your paper will understand just where the N. W. C. T. U. stands.

Akron, Ohio,

DEAR EDITOR:—In reply to the enclosed, since you ask my opinion, I would state:

1. That the resolution referred to, adopted at Detroit at the last annual meeting of the National W. C. T. U. read as follows: "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes," and that I suppose it meant precisely what it said.

2. This being the case, it could not have meant the opposite of what it said: i. e. that we would favor the national Democratic or the national Republican party, since, while the former has done much for prohibition in the south and the latter in the north, neither has ever done anything for Prohibition nationally.

The Democratic party has this year and repeatedly declared against "sumptuary laws" in its national platform, and the famous "Raster resolution" adopted under German dictation in 1872, by the Republicans, was an equivalent declaration, to which allegiance was renewed this year in their platform.

3. Our resolution was accompanied in this year's statement of principles and work, by a memorial to the national parties asking them to declare in their platforms and by their presidential candidates for the submission to the people of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor as a drink. It was understood that this would furnish a fair test of their attitude toward the question. None of them stood this test except the Prohibition party. If any other had stood the test equally well, as to platform and candidate, our influence ought, under our resolution, to have been lent to that also, and equally. But this is not even thinkable, in view of the well known laws that govern the existence of a party. It should be noted that our resolution did not say "the party that furnishes an embodiment of prohibitory principles" but "the best embodiment."

Finally: I conclude that the National W. C. T. U. will lend its influence to the Prohibition party, according to the pledge made at Detroit.

It is well known to our white ribbon women that this pledge is an expression of our sentiment, given frankly and in good faith, but not technically obligatory upon any auxiliary or individual. The laws of the Medes and Persians are unlike those of the W. C. T. U., for the former were based on force and the latter rest on love. But my observation of ten years has taught me that no laws were ever more universally observed, or in any better spirit, than ours which have in them the mighty compulsion of our intelligent and earnest purpose to serve the cause of God and home and native land.

Yours for St. John and Daniel.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The brewers of Cedar Rapids have been manufacturing non-intoxicating beverages named, "Magnus' Good Luck," "William's Reform," and "Mum." These several beverages were placed "on tap" in the town of Marion about ten days since. Soon after, it was noticed that a number of men acted as if they had proven these temperance drinks to be intoxicating, their unsteady gait and maudlin talk betraying them. A temperance man—long be his praises sung—went into Wiechman's "place"—they are no longer saloons—and called for a glass of "Good Luck,' which was handed to him, and after drinking a little of it he passed out carrying the glass and its contents, to be used as evidence. By advice of the mayor he went before a justice and secured search warrants for two "places" where these drinks were sold. The warrants were given to the sheriff, who with his deputies, seized all they found that came within the scope of the warrants. On Saturday a week ago, "Good Luck," "Mum" and "Reform," came into court. Within the bar were ranged bottles "with beaded bubbles winking," and kegs made respectable with government stamps! There they stood ready to be tried, and never blushed! But when examination began they frothed at the mouth, and at last foamed over. During the trial physicians testified to their baneful effects, and finally chemical analysis showed them up in their true character, which proved them to be in possession of a large quantity of alcohol. They were condemned by the court, seized by the sheriff and his assistants, carried off in great disgrace, and a writ served for their destruction. Iowa people having the will to prohibit are rapidly finding the way.

An English gentleman recently on a tour of inspection in America, desired to see for himself if prohibition were a failure in Maine. After a protracted stay in Portland he says, "I wish we had such failures in England," and then gives the following list of liquors which he saw confiscated by the authorities:

Two barrels of cider, 31 gallons each; 52 barrels of ale 36 gallons each; 10 barrels of ale 10 gallons each; 11 boxes of bottled ale and porter and a large lot of bottled ale not in boxes; 6 barrels of whisky and rum, 40 gallons each; 6 barrels of whisky and rum, 20 gallons each; 39 kegs whisky and rum, 4 gallons each; 10 large demijohns whisky and rum, 10 gallons each; 25 large demijohns of whisky and rum, 2 gallons each; and a large lot of pint and quart bottles (50 or 60) of whisky, rum, gin, etc.

He next went to the jail, and out of eighty prisoners found thirty of them there for rumselling, their terms of imprisonment being from three to twelve months. The jailor gave the following list of prisoners for 1883:

|---|---|
| For selling liquors in Portland and county | 125 |
| " " " " different parts of county | 65 |
| For drunkenness | 312 |
| Total for selling and getting drunk | 502 |
| " " other offences | 77 |
| Total for all offences | 579 |

He said further that of the 77 other causes drink was at the bottom of nearly all.

"It is the already burdened women who do the work," says an observing W. C. T. U. worker, and as an instance gives this account of how one such faithful sister did her part toward getting up and carrying on a convention. After much hard work, she secured the church, engaged the clergymen for the evening services, the choirs ditto, spent a day helping with program, wrote 300 postals assigning all delegates, kept names and places in a book, got places for the members of the executive committee, met them at the train, engaged the plants, arranged the hacks, got a rich friend, who is not in active work, to arrange the plants and flowers, which she would if they were brought to her, gave address of welcome, was put on committee on finance, was asked to preside during a part of the sessions, gave her report, took charge of convention mail, had it distributed and carried down, and got up the excursion to ——, entertained five delegates, did her own housework all the while, kept a level head all through and never forgot or overlooked but one thing.

"To be true to the best
That is in us, nor falter
Nor fail in the least
Let whatever may come,—
This is measurement just
Of the sum of our life."

Mrs. Boise, of Michigan, is doing excellent work for the union party, which is also the Prohibition party of the state. At Manistee she was especially complimented for an address full of fire and enthusiasm, refined and delicate as it was logical, earnest and unanswerable.

The U. S. is a power. Read this letter and see how it can make the leopard change his spots:

Dear Union Signal:—While it does not make my hair turn gray to read "Mrs. Mamie," I think it horrid to spoil that sweetest of all names by changing it to anything else than Mary, and I never add "ie" to mine. Yet I must plead for it in one case. I have a friend with whom I became acquainted in my temperance work and have known her for years as "Nellie." Can you imagine my surprise on receiving a letter a few days since signed Penelope, saying according to Union Signal she must discard the i e. Now I believe in the "survival of the fittest" and to me she will always be Nellie. Ann.

At the Monona Lake assembly, Aug. 7, after her address Miss Willard asked the great audience, "if they would listen to a German though his name was not upon the program." They replied by a unanimous "Aye" and hearty cheers. Prof. Adolph Schmitz, of Elgin, Ill., then stepped forward and in a ten minutes' speech, aroused the interest of all present, not only for his cause but himself. He is a ready, earnest, sympathetic talker, uses our language elegantly, and is heroic in his devotion to the temperance reform among the Germans. He was so well liked that officers of local W. C. T. unions came forward to engage his help. Any who wish it can address him at Elgin, Ill.

Just to think of it! An Iowa drunkard of the old regime the other Saturday night came home with a new calico dress for his wife—the second one he has ever bought her since their marriage, fourteen years ago. I haven't seen anything so hopeful for a long while.

Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, superintendent of work among colored people of the north, says, "The W. C. T. U. holds in its hands one of the greatest opportunities to unify the true womanhood of America into a great moral and spiritual force for lifting up the nation to a higher plane of thought and action. And what better instrumentality could a people have than the united efforts of its women in such a work as ours? This work is bringing some of our women in contact with you, and I hope the coming together will be an evangel of good to each. Do we not both, as dissevered branches of the human race, need what we can give each other? You have behind you ages of dominion, civilization, freedom and culture. We have behind us ages of poverty, slavery and ignorance. But if 'He that watereth shall be watered,' will not a Christly contact with our branch of the human race be the means of helping you to one of the needed wants of American Christianity,—a tenderer, broader, deeper sympathy, a fuller recognition of the claims of our common humanity, and a greater respect for the weakest and poorest of us, as the children of the same Father and God? And may not such a recognition be to us a living vitalizing thought which may help far beyond what you may imagine, to bring self respect and a spirit of divine helpfulness."

Mrs. Leavitt takes no vacation, it would seem, on the Pacific coast, as her engagements reach right through August, something like this: Petaluma, August 8; Santa Rosa, August 9 and 10; Healdsburg, August 11; Cloverdale, August 12; Calistoga, August 13; St. Helena, August 14; Napa City, August 15; Suisun, August 16 and 17; visit to Mrs. Gen. Bidwell, Chico, August 18, 19 and 20: Grass Valley, August 21 and 22; Nevada City, August 23 and 24.

Rev. W. F. Crafts is making his vacation tell on the Chicago public by a plea for better Sunday observance and for temperance. The First Congregational church of this city is his platform, and through the press facilities, the entire northwest is his audience.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin has been working away through the heats of July, and thus far in August, in upper, if not northern Michigan. Her very itinerary makes one tired.

Mrs. T. B. Carse, while sojourning at Charlevoix, Mich., for a few weeks of sadly needed rest, made her debut as a campaign speaker at Bay View camp meeting.

Her speech was drawn out by the opposition to party prohibition made by the Rev. R. B. Pope, the author of that new version of our honored name, viz., "Woman's Cursing Temperance Union." I hope the recording angel blotted the words with a tear, as I do now.

I think the Maori chiefs will take home with them some new notions about women. Mrs. Margaret Lucas assisted Mr. Joseph Malins the other evening in inducting them into the order of Good Templars.

The British Temperance League has again complimented The Union Signal by republishing one of its articles in the excellent tract series of the League.

This time it is "Harry Lacy, the College Student." It was written by a blind temperance worker, whose pen is as graceful as though she were gifted with a sight of all earth's beauty.

The Indiana branch of the Church (Episcopal) Temperance Society at its recent meeting endorsed the work of the W. C. T. U. of the state in these words:

Resolved, That the memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, referred to this committee, praying the Church Temperance Society of Indiana to further the introduction of systematic teaching on the subject of temperance into our public school system—"The Effects of Narcotics and Stimulants upon the Human System" in connection with physiology and hygiene in particular—receives our unanimous endorsement; to which the influence of this society is already pledged by its constitution.

MICHIGAN.

TEMPERANCE DAY AT BAY VIEW.

Our temperance day under the auspices of the state W. C. T. U. was pronounced "a great success".

Mrs. Lathrap, our state president, could not be present on account of previous engagements at the east. A committee had the matter in charge of which Mrs. R. A. Campbell, Traverse City, was chairman.

The services opened at 9:30 with a prayer and experience meeting conducted by Rev. Roberts. The remainder of the forenoon was occupied by Rev. Pope, of Ann Arbor, Mrs. N. Bailey, president 3d district, and Mrs. T. B. Carse, of Chicago, each speaking with such earnestness as to quicken all who listened. Dr. Edwards was on the program, but not being present when called, made himself felt in the evening service. Edward Murphy was introduced and occupied a few moments.

Stirring music was furnished under the leadership of Mr. Faxon, of Ovid, who with his gifted daughter is so justly and widely appreciated by all lovers of music.

The morning session was held in the tabernacle which was filled to overflowing. The afternoon service was held in the open air. Devotions led by Revs. Marble and Weigle.

Dr. Fiske, of Albion, and R. S. Dwiggins, of Indiana, the prohibition candidate for governor, each occupied about fifteen minutes, speaking with force and clearness against license, and in favor of active prohibition measures.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, Portland, gave the principal address and the gentlemen pronounced it highly interesting, of sound argument and no idle words.

Mrs. S. L. Lynch, of New York, was present with her cornet and favored the audience with delightful music.

At 4 o'clock the meeting adjourned and the people hurried to the depot to take the car for Petosky, where a seventy-five foot pole was raised from which floated a streamer bearing in bold letters the names of St. John and Daniel. Three cheers greeted its rise and "Hold the Fort" rang through the crowd. From the balcony of the Pacific Hotel the large assembly was addressed by Rev. D. F. Barnes and R. S. Dwiggins. Their eloquence thrilled the people and provoked cheer after cheer. Mr. Barnes said that so far as he knew, this was the first St. John and Daniel pole in Michigan.

In the evening at 7:30, a large audience again assembled at Bay View and was addressed by Edward Murphy. Mr. Murphy speaks with force and carries his audience with him in smiles and tears.

Miss Gertie Allen, of Portland, recited "Mr. Easyman" with such perfect expression as to win the highest commendation. The Petosky Cornet Band were present in full uniform and filled the air with sweet music.

God's blessing and felt presence was the sunlight over all, to Him be the glory. And may the seed sown produce a glad and abundant harvest.

Mrs. Benjamin is again giving two weeks' service in the eleventh district, and delights her many hearers, doing very efficient work. P. J. H.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The annual convention of the ninth district W. C. T. U. for 1884, will be held in the M. E. church at Reed City, commencing Tuesday afternoon, September 2, and continuing through Wednesday and Thursday. Mrs. J. H. Kellogg, national and state superintendent of hygiene, will be in attendance and will hold a normal institute, at which the subjects: Hygiene of food and its relation to temperance; the problem of dress; rest and overwork; ventilation, household hygiene, etc., will be discussed.

J. H. Kellogg, M. D., member of state board of health, will be present and deliver two evening lectures. All lectures given by Dr. Kellogg will be illustrated with blackboard outlines and experiments, and the evening lectures by stereopticon views.

Workers will come prepared to take as many notes as possible.

Every union is entitled to three voting delegates.

The general officers, county presidents and district superintendents are voting delegates by virtue of their office.

Each auxiliary union shall pay to the treasurer of the district a sum equal to five (5) cents per capita for the purpose of meeting district expenses.

Delegates desiring entertainment will please send their names to Mrs. N. L. McNamara, Reed City.

For railroad certificates address Mrs. C. J. Hood, Big Rapids.

Yours for "God and home and native land."

Lucy F. Morehouse, Pres.,
Ann M. Hood, Cor. Sec.

NEBRASKA.

On the evening of July 27, the W. C. T. U. of Lincoln gave an entertainment in the new Masonic temple which carried an unusual "scene" not on its program in which I figured. I was going to the platform with my daughter who was to play an instrumental solo. We had to pass a side entrance, unlighted, and exposed, of which neither of us had knowledge. My first step over the threshold sent me fourteen feet to the next floor, striking on my spine, bruising me fearfully, bringing on hemorrhage of the stomach and inflicting serious spinal injuries involving lung complications. I am, after ten days, still fed with a teaspoon, unable to be raised in bed, though I can now turn my head, which could not be moved one bit for days. My wrenched hands are still swollen, but I have partially recovered the use of the right hand, not yet of the left, as this scrawl indicates. Among the many tokens of remembrance, comes one I could not anticipate, a letter from our state penitentiary, written by the prisoners, expressing their deep sympathy, saying how much I shall be missed there and closing thus: "If ever earnest prayer which brings answer goes up to God from prisoners' cells, it is ours for your speedy recovery." You remember, perhaps, that I am state superintendent of jail, prison and flower mission work, and visit the jails and penitentiaries and speak to the prisoners.

Isn't it sweet to know we have helped a fallen brother or sister? Though my work is suspended if God permits me to return to it, it will be with stronger love for the paths opened by the W. C. T. U. and the privilege of binding wounds by the wayside. My heart is so full of thankfulness that I was not instantly killed (which seems only by miracle), that I count not the present agony and realize the light affliction worketh exceeding weight of glory.

This has cost me great effort, but I wanted to say it myself. Angie F. Newman.

OHIO.

Jefferson.—This is an historic old place, the home of Ben Wade and Joshua R. Giddings, both of whom are buried here and their families still are resident of the town.

Mrs. Wade, an old lady of eighty summers, is still a bright, interesting woman, and during my short call entertained me with the most animated conversation. She has mingled with the best society of our country, and now in her elegant room is still the lady of the place and seems the sweet combination of grace and peace and contentment.

In Belleville a man came into the town a few days ago to make a few purchases. His friends took him into a saloon and treated him to drink. He took several drinks then treated his friends till his money was gone. He wandered out in the street and begged ten cents more. He got it, returned to the saloon, took another drink, then started for home. He came to the railroad, the glittering irons looked inviting to the frenzied man; he thought it was his bed at home and lay down to sleep. The five o'clock train came thundering along—too late to stop the engine when the man was seen, and onward it glided till the poor man's head was taken from his body. The politicians came and looked on that ghastly spectacle and went home and opened their papers and read: "The sheep husbandry must be protected; Mormonism must be suppressed." They could not find much in those papers about protecting the homes or the boys. "Oh no; this is presidential year. We cannot attend to those minor things this year. Let them wait."

This poor victim, unheeded by men, was the son of a clergyman and the brother of a theological student.

In the good time coming, after the boy has been carefully trained in the home, in the Sunday school, and in the church, the law and society will supplement this work and there will be no saloons to entice the young in the way of destruction. Sarah M. Perkins.

MAINE.

Each Saturday evening The Union Signal comes to us with its sheets full of interest. Then we sit down for a restful hour and carefully going over the pages, come at length to the column containing "News from the Field." Here we always seem a little nearer to our sisters abroad. We can listen to the reports from New Jersey and Washington territory and rejoice in victory or sympathize in discouragement. Here we feel that we are one, since a common cause binds us.

It has been weeks, perhaps months, since we have heard through these columns what is going on in Maine. Our good temperance people are busy, all the time, working for the amendments—perhaps that is the reason why results are not oftener reported.

We are rapidly nearing that "day of days," September 8, when the question "Shall the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors be forever prohibited?" will be decided.

This question is vitally important: it concerns us more than any other question ever brought before the people. It means a grand sweep onward of the strong temperance sentiment which has for many years swayed the state, or it means inglorious defeat and a beating back from the advanced position long maintained.

We were warned in season, to prepare to throw up entrenchments and get the ammunition ready, and if we may judge from the signs all around us and from the reports of those who are in the field, the work is being pushed on in every quarter.

The president of our state union, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, has been untiring in her efforts. She has been up and down through the state assisting established unions and organizing new ones, wherever an opportunity presented.

She is ceaselessly busy, not a moment runs to waste and her devotion to W. C. T. U. work and the various charities which have claimed her attention cannot be too highly estimated.

Mrs. McLaughlin has been with us for brief periods. In May she addressed good audiences in twelve of the largest towns, always of course, delighting the ear of the people and arousing them to thought. She came again this last month, making a trip through Washington county, the extreme eastern limit of the state. She even went over the border and spoke on British soil at St. Stephens. All the meetings held were very successful in every respect.

Then Mrs. L. H. Washington, for the love of the cause and her interest in the old Pine Tree state, came to us, giving a week's work. A part of Mrs. Washington's engagements were in towns as yet without the influence of the W. C. T. U. One of these towns, a quiet seaport, lately invaded by summer visitors, had in Mrs. W. its first experience of a "woman lecturer." Within a few days the request came to the secretary, "Send or recommend another woman to help on the interest aroused." In reply to the question, "Wouldn't one of the leading temperance men do as well?" the emphatic answer was: "No; we must have a woman."

Being situated away down east, in a remote corner of this big Union and, as it were, out of the lines of travel, having our state treasury never very full, we can not always command all the outside help which we would like. There is, however, a great treat in store for us. Miss Willard will be here this month, speaking in ten of the largest towns and we shall also have the happiness of hearing her at the annual state convention held in Gardiner, September 2, 3 and 4. The convention meets nearly a month earlier than has been the custom, in order to throw the weight of its influence for the amendment.

The Good Templars and the Alliance are prosecuting vigorous work all over the state. The generous gift of Dr. McDonald has been a great assistance in carrying out the plans for the campaign. There are to be several mass meetings this month addressed by Miss Willard and John B. Finch. The summer camping grounds at Fryeburg, Sebago, Old Orchard, Richmond and Maranocook have had their annual temperance meetings or are now arranging for them. County conventions have been held quite generally. At the meeting held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at Old Orchard a few days ago, $13.00 was devoted to subscriptions to the Union Signal.

Though the out look is so encouraging, yet we believe that no temperance worker in the state should relax one iota of his zeal. These remaining "weeks of grace" should not be allowed to pass without making every possible effort to secure an overwhelming majority for the amendment vote in September.

To those who doubt the efficacy of the statutory law and those who scoff at the idea of ingrafting a prohibitory clause in the constitution Maine must return an answer emphatic and decisive. S. C. L.

IOWA.

CEDAR COUNTY CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of Cedar county held a quarterly convention in the Presbyterian church at Mechanicsville, Augus 6, 7. A good delegation was present; four unions represented. There were several interesting and noteworthy papers presented during the session by ladies from Tipton, West Branch, Mechanicsville and Clarence. Also several very important questions discussed. Mrs. Aldrich, our state president, was with us through the entire meeting, delivering two lectures, one on "The Enforcement of the Prohibitory Law," the other "Signs of the Times." Her arguments were strong and forcible and to the point. Organized the W. C. T. U. of Mechanicsville with eighteen members and two honorary members, being the second one organized in the county within the last quarter which we feel will add much strength to our cause. Convention adjourned with the feeling in our hearts, "Still the good work goes marching on." H. B. Cottrell, County Sec'y.

WISCONSIN.

We have it on good authority that the sale of beer will be strictly prohibited on the state fair grounds this year.

The Waukesha ladies are already preparing for the state convention to be held in their city Sept. 22, 23, 24, and will do all in their power to make this the most successful W. C. T. U. meeting ever held in Wisconsin. The opening address on Monday evening will be delivered by Prof. J. Adolph Schmitz of Elgin, Ill., who is already well known in our state from the excellent work begun in Milwaukee. Miss Willard will be present and will speak on Tuesday evening. Miss Gordon will urge upon us the importance of young women's work, in which we have hardly made a beginning. Mrs. Baxter, of Michigan, will give the closing lecture.

Miss Amy C. Kellogg is still at work in the seventh and eighth congressional districts. From every place she has visited come to us cheering words in praise of her fine addresses. From Maiden Rock we have the following: "Her arguments against high license, expressed in concise, clear-cut sentences are unanswerable. Her diction is elegant, and she is a refined, highly cultured and gifted speaker." The River Falls Journal says: "The lady shows herself to be a speaker of no small merit, and those present were much pleased with her remarks." Miss Kellogg will return to the eastern part of the state in September. A few evenings remain unoccupied before our state meeting, which may be secured by writing at once to our headquarters in Madison.

The annual convention of the sixth congressional district will be held at Dartford during the last week in August. SARAH P. BRADISH, Cor. Sec.

VERMONT.

COUNTY INSTITUTE.

The Washington county W. C. T. U. Institute held its meetings in Northfield August 5, 6, under the direction of the state vice president, Mrs. B. P. Elmer, of Cabot. Our president, Mrs. Greene, was unable to be with us but sent greeting by telegraph. The meetings were well attended and the several unions in the county well represented, as also religious bodies in towns where no unions exist. The number of ladies from abroad exceeded forty. The different lines of temperance work were discussed and much interest manifested. Among the subjects discussed of most interest was the department of scientific temperance instruction in schools. Great stress was laid upon the importance of teaching children systematically and thoroughly the injurious effects of alcohol upon the human system, that they may grow up with a living knowledge of the evils that its use entails. The subject of county unions was discussed and resulted in organizing Washington county union, with Mrs. B. P. Elmer, of Cabot, for president.

A highly instructive address on the "Physiological Effects of Alcoholic Stimulants upon the Brain and Mind," was delivered on the evening of the 5th by Dr. P. D. Bradford, of Northfield, followed by an address of great interest on "Heredity," by our state secretary, Mrs. J. L. Perkins, of St. Johnsbury, who also gave, the following day, a plain, profitable address on "Hygiene."

Wednesday evening was devoted mainly to the address of Mrs. J. K. Barney, national superintendent prison and jail work, who spoke in her usual telling manner, holding in close attention the large audience for more than an hour.

I must not omit to mention in this report the finely written and forcible address of our highly esteemed vice president, Mrs. Elmer; nor the pleasant fact that grand music was furnished both evenings of the institute by the several church choirs of Northfield, under the direction of Mr. John W. Jones.

Altogether the institute passed very pleasantly and we hope will result in much good. M. P. M.

DAKOTA.

KINGSBRUY COUNTY CONVENTION.

The adjourned third annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held in the Congregational church. The morning session, consisting mainly of devotional exercises, was conducted by Mrs. W. A. Fisk, of Lake Preston. Her remarks upon the passage read were very interesting and enjoyable.

The afternoon session opened with a much larger attendance, delegations having arrived from different parts of the country. Mrs. Rev. J. T. Otis, of Lake Preston, in a most able manner conducted the half hour prayer meeting. Miss Dr. Emily Hammond, superintendent of the department of heredity, gave an interesting paper. The little band of temperance boys and girls sang "Temperance Bells."

Reports were given from six unions, all showing encouraging progress. At Lake Henry and Lake Preston special and untiring work was done before and on election day, the ladies braving the fierce storms of last spring in their long rides over the prairies in the interest of "no license."

Mrs. Gray, superintendent of department on influencing the press, reported that her plan for placing a W. C. T. U. book in the office of each newspaper in the county, upon which should be hung THE UNION SIGNAL and cuttings suitable for a temperance column, from which the editor could make selections, had been acceeded to by the editors of the De Smet Leader and Lake Preston Times, and that she was assured other papers would readily grant this favor.

The following resolution, handed in by Dr. Davies, was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that no physician of Kingsbury county has a right to write a prescription of courtesy for one or two pints, more or less, of alcohol or whisky or other intoxicating liquors for parties whom he or she at the time is not attending professionally, but that such writing is a criminal evasion of the law and that such offense be punished by law.

Mrs. Dr. Spooner, superintendent of hygiene, read an article on that subject.

Mrs. Clinton Douglas' very interesting report on "securing the use of unfermented juice of the grape at the Lord's table," was read by the president. All churches of Kingsbury county so far as known used unfermented wine.

Among those in attendance was one whose memory runs back beyond the organization of the first temperance society in America, and who has embarked in the cause from the first—Mrs. Fannie Warner, now eighty-seven years old. Mrs. Warner was made an honorary vice president.

The officers elected for the coming year are, president, Mrs. M. W. Owen; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Edward Brown, DeSmet; recording secretary, Mrs. M. L. Clark, Drakola; treasurer, Mrs. T. H. Ruth, DeSmet. Superintendents were appointed for eleven of our leading departments, including one against the tobacco habit. The convention adjourned with "Tremble King Alcohol," by the children. M. L. CLARK, Rec. Sec.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE.—The Tuesday meetings of the Baltimore W. C. T. U. are fountains of refreshing to those who have the privilege of attending them and have been wonderfully blessed to many. There our workers find spiritual sympathy and encouragement, there they are led to the true source of all real life, there they learn how they can be made "meet for the Master's use, prepared unto every good work," there many have obtained their first true conception of what is meant by "casting all your care upon Him."

At the last meeting previous to a discontinuance during the summer months, Mrs. Thomas, our beloved president, directed attention to a most interesting work, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," by Henry Drummond, F. R. S. E., published by James Pott & Co., New York, and drew much of her lesson from it

The spiritual kingdom, she said, is under law as is the natural kingdom. Men study the laws of the natural kingdom in order to put themselves in harmony with them and in like manner should they study the laws of the spiritual kingdom. "Ye must be born again," there is no other way of getting into the spiritual kingdom. No organic change, no mental energy, no moral effort, no evolution of character, nothing can endow any single human soul with the attribute of spiritual life. The spiritual world is guarded from the world next in order beneath it by a law, "except a man be born again....he cannot enter the kingdom of God." In Christ alone are given to us all things that pertain to life and godliness. The gift of God is eternal life. Eternal here referring rather to quality than duration, the death of the carnal mind, not of the body.

Not one of us has begun to fathom the possibilities of the spiritual life, though some of us have faint glimmerings of what it is. We should be overflowing with life, should reign in life, it is God's provision for us. But we must study such things as will help us in this life. Let our readings be to this end. Some can read novels, seemingly without hurt, but with others, to myself, she said, they are obnoxious to spiritual growth.

Cherish the spiritual life as you would the natural. Give it food as you would the natural body. Neglect despoils the soul of its capacity for salvation, as neglect of the body despoils it of its highest powers. Study Christ during our separation, as always. Of what use the glorious light of the sun if men shut themselves away from it, so likewise if we shut ourselves away from the glorious Sun of Righteousness. "He that hath the Son hath life." "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." We must not say these glorious promises are not for us, but "with meekness receive the engrafted word," believing that grand and glorious things are possible to each one of us who will but believe—but accept. M. A. L.

PENNSYLVANIA.

To Local Unions in Pennsylvania:

Mrs Geo. S. Hunt, national superintendent department of unfermented wine, wishes my report by Sept. 10.

Will local unions seeing this notice please answer the following questions at once so that I may be able to report?

How many churches in your town or county? How many use unfermented wine for communion? How long has this been the custom? What arguments do you find most effective in securing its use? What objections do you meet with?

By answering these questions you will much oblige, Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, superintendent department unfermented wine, Sharon, Pa.

CONNECTICUT.

HARTFORD.—Expect soon to hear good reports from Connecticut. We have engaged a worker for the coming year, Miss E. A. Landfear of Meriden, who will devote her time to organizing W. C. T. U's. and Bands of Hope in the state. For several years Miss Landfear has had charge of a Band of Hope in her own town, which at last annual report numbered 114 members, and has been pursuaded to give up her occupation as a public school teacher for the temperance work. I am very happy to be able to say that we pay her eight hundred dollars a year, and though the salary is too small for the work, it is encouraging, as showing that the people begin to think "the workman is worthy of his hire" even in the temperance cause.

Miss Landfear begins her work September next. Before then we hope to have her lecture for us here in Hartford. Need enough of such work here. One hundred and ninety arrested in July, and more drunken people, in comparison with the population, on the streets day and night, than I ever saw in any other place.

MASSACHUSETTS.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. MEETING AT COTTAGE CITY.

Cottage City is laid out in a circle, the Tabernacle being in the centre. This building is of iron, and seats several thousands and is one of the finest auditoriums I have seen at any of the camp grounds.

A few years since, a plan for a summer school was inaugurated and through the kindness of friends encugh money raised to put up a building which was named "Agassiz Hall." Of this institute I cannot write at length, but must mention a new feature. Besides the various courses which may here be pursued in music, botany, the languages, etc., etc., this year a course was added in scientific temperance or the study of the nature and effect of alcohol upon the human system. This is under the direction of Prof. Palmer, of the Medical College of Ann Arbor, Mich.

Sunday morning August 3, dawned bright and clear and at half past nine the ring of the bell announced the hour for the first devotional meeting to be led by Miss Frances E. Willard. At half past ten a large audience nearly filling the auditorium, assembled to hear Mrs. Pearson of England, who took for her text the sixteenth verse of the third of John, "For God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son," etc. It would be impossible to give any idea of this most eloquent and earnest sermon.

At half past two a children's meeting was held and a large number of adults as well as children assembled. Miss Anna Gordon was the leader. She read several passages of scripture, and at the last asked the children to repeat them with her.

Miss Elizabeth Tobey of Boston, was the first speaker, and held the attention of the children for nearly twenty minutes by a neat little speech. Miss Ida Buxton of Rhode Island, followed. These two speeches were among the best we have ever heard inasmuch as they were full of truth and not above the comprehension of the smaller children. Mrs. Buell was the next speaker, but the time was far spent, a fact of which she, evidently, was conscious, judging by her rapid delivery and hurried manner.

At 3:30 Mrs. Mary H. Hunt delivered an address upon temperance instruction among the children.

The evening was a little cool, but at the hour of opening an immense audience had gathered. Mrs. Buell, in a graceful speech, introduced Miss Willard.

This was the first time we had been favored with the presence of Miss Willard in Cottage City and the time of her coming has been looked for with great interest. I might be tempted to try to give you some idea of the address did I not fear it would be like painted lightning in a third-rate picture, so I refrain.

Monday morning's devotional meeting was led by Miss Coffin, of New York, and was well attended, as was that of the afternoon led by Miss Tobey.

Miss Ida Buxton and Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, were the speakers of the morning, and both were listened to with deepest interest. Miss Buxton is quite young, has a good voice, easy manner, clear enunciation and better than all, good matter. Mrs. Stevens told of the work in California among the grape growers, and closed by an enthusiastic appeal in behalf of the Prohibition party.

At 3:30 the regular afternoon service began. The address of the afternoon was by Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, who was introduced by Mrs. Buell in her most happy manner. Mrs. Chapin said:

Soldiers are brave. The people who are fighting now are not those who fought twenty years ago. Those who fight now, fight with their tongues. At the south they have a problem to solve. The chapels of the old plantations are turned into shops used by foreigners. Liquor is sold, and such liquor. The Germans, not long ago, led the colored men to the ballot box in Louisiana, and on the way sang out, "Trot out your Jesus" There is no Sabbath there. Is it not a duty to see that slavery is not transferred from one master to another? There is more necessity for prohibition in the south than here even, because of the horrible liquor sold the colored people. Not only among the men is this necessary, but among the women also. A great work is being done among the children.

She wanted to plead with those who have power at the ballot box to give the homes and the fathers to the children. She expected to have temperance text books put into the schools of South Carolina at the next legislation. One year unions were formed in four towns and the next year these towns voted no license.

At the evening service Mrs. Buell prefaced the introduction of Mrs. Pearson with a brief statement as to the comparative advance of temperance work in America and England, and said that observation and reading forced her to admit that Joseph Cook was right when he said that England was in advance of America except in one particular and that was in legislative work.

Mrs. Pearson began her address by saying that we are sometimes told home is woman's kingdom. She said:

It is so, and though she may go on errands of mercy, or hold offices of public trust, there is no place to her like home. It is a woman's question because she will take more harm from using liquor, in four months than a man in four years, on account of her nervous system. She is harder to reclaim. One reason, because there is one standard of morality for men and another for women. God has but one standard of morality. Another reason that it is a woman's question is because children are committed to her. Some have great dread of strong minded mothers who know how to command obedience. Woman is man's equivalent. If he is a five pound note, she is five pounds in gold. It is a woman's question because what she sets her mind against is not the fashion. If she sets her foot against it, it dies out. Some say women should have nothing to do with politics. The speaker said that she understood politics to be a national expression of her conviction. If politics mean taxes which women have to take from their dinner and supper table, then they have to do with politics. The political aspect of the temperance question belongs to woman's side of politics. Ladies have all votes in England except the parliamentary vote.

The time is coming when we shall not have this anomaly in British government, a queen on the throne and women taxed to pay for government without representation. When she votes then the temperance question will take a different outlook.

No question is of more importance in America or England, than temperance. It is of no account whether what we say is popular or not if it be only true. Slavery was a dreadful curse, terrible enough, but only an institution; but the curse of intemperance is a constitutional slavery. You boast of liberty, of freedom, but take care you do not perish from this internal curse of your country.

There was a bill before the House of Lords prohibiting the use of liquor in public houses. It was called a piece of grandmotherly interference. If the men cannot take care of themselves, it is well to use a little grandmotherly influence. Some ask what shall be done with the working men if the saloons are closed on Sunday. Let them stay at home and help their wives. She was tired of this twaddle about the working man. Why not think of the working man's wife? The English government with Mr. Gladstone at its head, was blind in one eye when it granted the grocer's license. What we are seeking is local option about these licenses. In England we have a law to protect our fish and our game, and soon we shall have a law to protect our homes It is the highest government which makes it easy to do right and hard to do wrong. The true greatness of a country consists not in its riches but in its men. The speaker urged the men to be true in their votes. She had been asked what were her politics. She had told them she was a radical conservative. She wanted to conserve the good and eradicate the evil.

There is no speech like action. It is grand to preach but grander to act the gospel. If you will sign the pledge it will be the grandest speech you ever made.

Tuesday the rain came down in torrents, but when the bell rang for the morning meeting a goodly number had gathered in the chapel. A prayer was offered and Mrs. Pearson read the twenty-third Psalm. The comments upon the chapter were intensely interesting and when the call to the auditorium came, and the meeting closed, all felt it had been good to be there.

Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, of Providence, delivered the address of the morning, a carefully prepared, clear and earnest setting forth of the subject.

The closing devotional meeting was perhaps the best of the series. Mrs. Livesey, president of the local union, led and after a scripture reading asked that it might be a meeting of experiences. Mrs. Buell was the first to speak, and in a touching, tender manner alluded to those who had been present the year before who would never meet here again.

At the close of the meeting it was announced that the afternoon meeting would be held in the chapel, and immediately every seat was taken by those who had come out to hear Prof. Palmer, of Michigan. I will not attempt to give a report of this lecture since I have heard it whispered that it might be published. It was one of the best of its kind, since the argument was ingeniously put. Taking the "Opium Habit" as his subject the professor showed how it affected the human system, and then spoke of the remedies and of the difficulties encountered in trying to effect a cure; of the degradation it wrought, and then of the manner of dealing with it, showing that government had the right to protect itself, and administering a scathing rebuke to those who in this connection talk of "sumptuary laws." A better argument for prohibiting the liquor traffic we have not heard in many a day, and all the more powerful since, as the presiding officer said, "It is not the argument of a temperance fanatic."

Mrs. Chapin spoke first in the evening followed by Mrs. Pearson.

It is the verdict of the people, heard on all sides, that these meetings conducted by the N. W. C. T. U. are the most interesting of the whole season and productive of the most good. Every one seems to be impressed by the systematic arrangement from first to last. There are no jars, no moments when the audience is afraid lest something will fall through and the effect of the whole be destroyed. All the speakers have something to say and say it.

The influence of these meetings is not only felt in this island but it extends over the whole Union, since interested listeners are here from all points of the compass.

One of the best features of the meetings has always been the "Question Box." Those of Monday and Tuesday were of especial interest and the information thus gained will be longer retained than the words of the most elequent speaker, because brought out in response to a direct question. C. H. N.

NEW JERSEY.

IN MEMORIAM.

Many friends of Mrs. Ann E. Woodruff gathered at her memorial service held Friday afternoon, July 18, at the rooms of the W. C. T. U. in the opera house building, Rahway, N. J. Addresses were made by Miss Julia Colman and Mrs. Dr. Kidder, of the W. C. T. U. of New York, Mrs. M. J. Clark, of the W. C. T. U. of Jersey City, Mrs. Anna Hammer, of the W. C. T. U. of Newark, N. J., and Miss Julia A. Barker, of the W. C. T. U. of Rahway. Our sister was widely known as a "Christian worker and dispenser of charities." The women of Rahway, for years have been associated with her in the great temperance reform, also in the "Union Aid Society," of which she was a very active and efficient member, ever at her post through storm and sunshine, endeavoring to do her duty to elevate and Christianize her fellow beings. Even on her death bed the cause was uppermost in her mind, and when informed that she could not recover, her earnest desire was to be spared a few months longer to finish the work she had planned for her Lord and Master. A few hours previous to her passing away she requested some friends to sing these verses:

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide,
The darkness deepens, Lord with me abide;
When other helpers fail and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me.

Hold Thou Thy cross before my closing eyes,
Shine through the gloom and point me to the skies;
Heaven's morning break, and earth's vain shadows flee,
In life, in death, O Lord abide with me.

May her example be ours, and it be said of us as of her, ever faithful and true to our trust that an abundant entrance may be given us through our Lord Jesus Christ into His everlasting kingdom.

Mrs. J. U. Underhill,
Rec. Sec. Rahway W. C. T. U.

MICHIGAN.

FROM THE UPPER PENINSULA.

Pursuant to call those interested in temperance work in Ispheming met in the M. E. church Tuesday evening, July 3, for the purpose of organizing a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The meeting was opened with singing, after which Rev. Mr. Van Every led in prayer. Miss Hattie Ashley was then elected secretary pro tem. Mr. Downing gave a very interesting address. At the close of his remarks he read the constitution of the W. C. T. U., and it was decided to organize a W. C. T. U. auxiliary to the W. C. T. U. of Michigan. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Chas. Sheldon, president; Mrs. E. Hill, corresponding secretary; Miss Hattie Ashley, recording secretary; Miss Emma Downing, treasurer. The constitution which had been read was unanimously adopted by the union.

The meeting adjourned to meet at Mrs. Sheldon's July 15. Hattie Ashley, Sec.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—One hundred and thirty-nine thousand tracts have been published this year at headquarters.

—Seven camp meetings under the auspices of our W. C. T. U. will be held during the month of August.

—The attention of district presidents, superintendents, and local unions, is called to circular letter, No. 2, sent out from headquarters this week.

—Miss West was present at Franklin Grove camp meeting, and is to be present at Eureka, Lake Bluff, Lena, Oak Hill, and New Lenox.

—The new Peoria House and the National Hotel will give reduced rates to visitors attending Peoria state meeting. Rates at the former will $1.50, at the latter $2 per day.

—A new union has been organized at Oakdale by Mrs. Morrison, and at Warrensville, DuPage Co., by Mrs. M. S. Stratton. Officers of last named union are: President, Miss Florence Williams; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lovica Stecks, Wheaton; treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Burnett.

—There will be a union temperance mass meeting and literary entertainment given by the North Side W. C. T. U., Chicago, at Lincoln Park church, corner Garfield av. and Larrabee st., Tuesday evening, August 26, with five and ten minute speeches, reading, music and recitations, by those who are well known to the public. Complimentary tickets obtainable at The Union Signal office.

—The treasurer of the Illinois W. C. T. U. gives the sixth congressional district a long credit mark full of commendation, as it is the first to redeem its pledge for $300 for the general state work, besides the usual membership dues. The efficient financial secretary of this district, Mrs. Southgate, deserves much credit for her promptness. Illinois is favored with some excellent district treasurers and financial secretaries, and it gives us pleasure to record the well earned merit of these workers. What district will be the next to cancel obligations to the state union?

EVANGELISTIC WORK.

To Women of "Gifts, Graces, and Usefulness" in Evangelistic Work:

Dear Sisters:—The highest authority of that church which, with the exception of the Quakers, has been supposed to be the most liberal toward women, has just declined once more its authorization to them as "exhorters and preachers." But there is a growing ability and desire on the part of educated Christian women, in obedience to the inward Divine voice, to enter the evangelistic field. They believe "The Master has come and calleth" for them, and they dare not do other than be "obedient to the Heavenly Vision." But they naturally desire to have constituted advisers and helpers in their work, to go out under the auspices of those more experienced, and to enjoy the sympathy and inspiration, so helpful in spiritual and intellectual development, of that esprit du corps, which ministers, who are men, appreciate so highly. We therefore deem the moment opportune to state that the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, mindful of this need, has carefully provided to meet the same by its "Department of Evangelistic Work," which opens a field for women of whatever Christian denomination, who manifest "gifts, graces, and usefulness" as evangelists.

This society, with its thirty-eight auxiliary state, and nine territorial unions, including the District of Columbia, is the largest society ever composed exclusively of women and conducted entirely by them. It is the lineal descendant of the great woman's crusade of 1873-4, and is an unsectarian union of Christian women for the purpose of educating the young, forming a better public sentiment, reforming the drinking classes, transforming by the power of Divine grace those who are enslaved by alcohol, and removing the dram shops from our streets by law.

The evangelistic department of this society aims "to increase the interest of our unions in Bible study, especially with reference to the exposition of temperance principles, by regularly furnishing them with lesson leaflets for use in local meetings, of which thousands are held each week; and carries the 'Gospel Cure' to the drinking classes by holding evangelistic services in reading rooms, railroad depots, theatres, etc., enlisting the people to build temperance tabernacles for the masses, and holding gospel temperance institutes for the training of women in methods of conducting evangelistic services."

Among the large number of those who have been leaders in this department are Mrs. J. T. Willing, of Illinois, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, of Illinois, Mrs. A. M. Palmer, of Iowa, and Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, of Massachusetts.

Let earnest women everywhere, including graduates of Smith, Wellesley and other "Schools of the Prophetesses," correspond with Mrs. H. W. Smith, 4653 Main street, Germantown, Penn., superintendent of the evangelistic department of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with reference to active participation in the great and growing work of that association. This department will be glad to welcome to its ranks any competent woman who desires to be a minister, and who believes that the "glad tidings" can be carried successfully to the perishing world by that half of humanity which has most reason for gratitude to Him who declared that "there is neither male nor female in Christ Jesus."

FLOWER MISSION

PRISON DAY AT RICHMOND.

The ladies met at our headquarters, the Y. M. C. A. rooms, some of them remaining all day. About twelve hundred bouquets and tracts were distributed. Some of the florists contributed pots of growing plants, to which text cards were attached and taken to the hospital at the almshouse. They were gratefully accepted. The roses were all gone and there was a scarcity of flowers at that time but the people responded better than could have been expected. A committee visited the almshouse and penitentiary, leaving the jail to be visited when the superintendent of jail work should return as she was absent on account of sickness.

The committee who went to the penitentiary were very kindly received, General Terry and his officers being very attentive. The convicts were assembled in the yard, having their own choir and organ. They opened the exercises by singing, "Rock of Ages" splendidly. Then I told them something of Miss Casseday and her efforts to have this day observed, and the result was that all over the Union ladies of the W. C. T. U. were visiting the prisons and praying for the souls of the prisoners. After this brief talk as the choir sang, "I hear thy gentle voice," many were seen wiping the tears away. One of our ladies offered a prayer, another read the card of selected texts prepared by our beloved national superintendent; then another hymn was sung after which the flowers were distributed. While the ladies were passing them around the choir sang, "Where is my wandering boy, tonight?" and as so many of them were very young, a few words were spoken reminding them of their mothers and how they must have grieved over their boys, which seemed to touch them.

The women were visited in their quarters, and supplied with flowers and texts as also the inmates of the prison hospital, with good results we hope, as all asked us to come again. The committee visiting the almshouse reported favorably also.

MRS. W. H. PLEASANTS.

Richmond, Va. July 8, 1884.

Words of encouragement from Illinois state superintendent of flower missions:

"I think the work of the flower mission is a blessed one. It is an educator. It is teaching us to fill our lives with kind and beautiful deeds. It is making us more thoughtful and it will make us do more for the living. How much better to show our sympathy and love for the living than to wait until death has claimed them, and then drop our tears and weave our garlands of flowers for their caskets."

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

In a letter from Minneapolis Minn., to Miss Casseday this account of prison day is given:

It was a day long to be remembered by all who participated. We gathered at our rooms to arrange our flowers in pretty baskets. After an hour spent in prayer we went forth and visited four hospitals, the prison, and the kitchen garden girls, making one hundred and ten bouquets distributed, each with a scripture text, and one hundred papers; some could not read. I visited the prison, one poor family, and the Catholic hospital, as they were regarded the most difficult places, and our members are young and inexperienced in the work.

It was my third visit to the hospital. I was received kindly and had a word of prayer and singing in the large ward. Two of our union were with me. At the prison twenty-seven of the criminals (young men) were behind the bars. At first they were very noisy, but before the close of the first gospel hymn they had become quiet and remained so throughout the service. Two or three even joined in the singing, and when I asked them to sing something they sang "Sweet Bye-and-Bye" In a large cell were the drunkards, fourteen in number, men of middle age, and all except two hard drinkers and wife beaters. Those two signed the pledge, have been released and are struggling hard against the power of old habits.

Those behind the bars many of them were melted to tears. May we not hope many of them were led to Jesus that day.

The jailer has sent to us asking when we will come again This is a blessed work and all who do it in the Master's name will have a blessed reward in this life and life everlasting.

LOCAL unions in many places have done good temperance work, "circulated literature" in the most effective way, by taking THE UNION SIGNAL for the pastors, physicians, editors, teachers, leading politicians, members of town and school board and most prominent objectors to their work. This is worth thinking about, ladies. Your money tells in this way at both ends of the line, financially for your own paper, and educated public sentiment in your own town.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as

which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

Signal Notes.

Local option carried in Owen, Hardin, Hopkins, and Breckinridge counties, Kentucky, by handsome majorities. They are all strong Democratic counties.

Hancock, Breckinridge. Owen, Hopkins and Hardin counties, Kentucky, are being canvassed for local option. It is likely that the temperances advocates will carry all of them.

The Prohibitionists of Tennessee held a convention in Nashville, at which were nearly four hundred delegates, representing fifty-seven counties. Many of the ablest men in the state were present.

The consuls of the United States in England some time ago reported that the productive power of England had diminished one-sixth in comparison to other countries in consequence of drunkenness.

From Aurora, the strong hold of the brewers in Indiana, comes this cause of thanksgiving: "We will not have liquors sold on our Fair ground this year, nor any gambling. 'Praise ye Him, all ye hosts.' Our saloons are about to be closed on Sunday. Our ministers are at work."

One proof that temperance is increasing is the thousands of glasses of fresh milk that are being sold weekly to the visitors at the International Health Exhibition, in London, Eng., by Messrs. Welfords & Sons at their model farmyard and dairy, where the cows are milked and the butter is churned on the spot. The Model Warwick Farm Dairy is far more crowded with customers than the spirit-drinking bars.

Now and then a criminal gets into Clarkenwell Prison, London, who is not a drunkard. The occurrence would seem to be somewhat rare, however; for the prison chaplain, who is presumably acquainted with the facts, declares that three-quarters of the twenty thousand persons who have been incarcerated in the prison during the year, were confined for crimes directly or indirectly attributable to drink.—S. S. Times.

The Temperance Alliance Company of Louisana is a recently organized corporation, having for its object the establishment of a hotel, restaurant and refreshment saloon, at New Orleans, whereat no intoxicating liquors shall be sold or used, and to provide a general place of reception for all members of temperance associations and others, who may visit the city. Its charter and object are submitted to the consideration of all advocates of temperance, and to the capitalist, as an investment that will pay handsome and rapid dividends in view of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

That the popularity of strictly temperance drinks is rapidly increasing would seem evident from the fact that at one favorite resort where no less than 700 drinks were sold in one day last summer, the proprietor has this year provided one of the largest fountains for aerated drinks in the world, with a list of nearly fifty refreshing drinks. More than 700 eggs have been used in one day in the preparation of these beverages, such as egg phosphate, egg milk, egg cream, egg lemonade; and no better proof of the popularity of these is needed than the fact, that at many of the drug stores where soda waters are sold, egg drinks are being introduced.

The eighth annual temperance meeting at Thousand Isles, opened August 5, continuing over the following Sabbath. The presence of such well known and able workers as Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge, Dr. D. D. Smith of Philadelphia, J. B. Finch, George W. Bain and Bishop Mallalien are abundant proof of its having been a grand success.

The national temperance society will hold three temperance meetings on the well known camp grounds at Chautauqua, August 20, under charge of J. N. Stearns, corresponding secretary. Addresses will be delivered in the forenoon by John B. Finch, Esq., of Nebraska; in the afternoon by George W. Bain, Esq., of Kentucky, and in the evening by Rev. William Searls, of Auburn, N. Y.

Miscellaneous Selections.

THIS HARD LUMP.

"Hallo, Jack! Hallo! Won't you have a drink this cold morning," cried a bloated looking tavern keeper to a jolly Jack Tar who was smartly stepping along the street.

Jack had formerly been a hard drinker, and had spent many a dollar in the tavern he was now passing, but about a year ago he had signed the temperance pledge.

No, landlord, no; I can't drink; I've got a hard lump at my side." As the witty sailor said these words he pressed his hand against his side, adding, "Oh this hard lump!"

"It is all through leaving off drink," replied the tavern keeper; "some good drink will take your lump away. If you are fool enough to keep from taking a little good liquor, your lump will get bigger, and very likely you'll be having a hard lump at your other side."

"True! true! old boy," with a hearty laugh, responded the merry tar, as he briskly drew out a well filled pocket book from his pocket, and held it up to the tavern keeper's gaze. "This is my hard lump. You are right in saying that if I drink my lump will go away, and if I stick to temperance I shall have a bigger lump. Good by to you, landlord. By God's help I'll keep out of your net, and try to get a lump at both sides."

TO KILL THE TASTE FOR ALCOHOL.

There are many drinkers who can break up the habit for a time, and who would gladly refrain from ever touching it again but an uncontrolable thirst for the beverage attacks them and never lets up until they give way. A prominent gentleman in Richmond, Va., tells how he broke this up. "I was one of those unfortunates given to strong drink. When I left off I felt a horrid want of something I must have or go distracted. I could neither eat, work nor sleep. Explaining my affliction to a man of much education and experience, he advised me to take a decoction of ground quassia, a half ounce steeped in a pint of vinegar, and to put about a small teaspoonful of it in a little water, and to drink it down every time the liquor thirst came on me violently. I found it satisfied the cravings, and it gave a feeling of stimulus and strength. I continued this cure and persvered until the thirst was conquered. For two years I have not tasted liquor, and I have no desire for it. Lately, to try my strength, I have handled and smelt whisky, but I have no temptation to take it. I give this for the consideration of the unfortunate, several of whom I know have recovered by means which I no longer require."

A Samaritan.—A certain man journeyed from the cradle to the grave; he fell among saloon keepers, who took his money, ruined his name, destroyed his reason, and then turned him into the street. A moderate drinker passed by, looked on him and said, "Served him right; he is a fool to get drunk." A politician voter also passing, looking on him said, "The brute! He is not fit to live, he is a disgrace to his family." But a fanatic, so-called, seeing him, had compassion, raised him up, assisted him to his home, administered to the wants of himself and family, got him to sign the pledge, pointed him to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," and left him in comfort and happiness. Who, think you, was the greater friend of humanity, the saloon keeper, the moderate drinker, the politician, or the fanatic?—Broadaxe.

J DORMAN STEELE, PH. D.

EDITED AND ENDORSED by the W. C. T. U. under direction of Mrs. MARY H. HUNT.

Public Library Boylston st 20 85

This work contains all the popular features that have given D. Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Physiology its great circulation; with carefully-prepared sections upon the Physiological Action of Alcohol, Tobacco, Opium, etc. These are scattered through the book as each organ is treated. This subject is examined from a purely scientific standpoint, and represents the latest teachings at home and abroad. While there is no attempt to incorporate a temperance lecture in a school book, yet the terrible effects of these "Stimulants and Narcotics," especially upon the young, are set forth all the more impressively, since the lesson is taught merely by the presentation of facts that lean toward no one's prejudices, and admit of no answer or escape. In this edition unusual space is given to the subject of Ventilation, which is now attracting so much attention throughout the country. 300 pages, 12mo., half bound, illustrated. Specimen Copy, postage prepaid, $1.00.

NONE BETTER.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 33. CHICAGO, AUGUST 28, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Independent is again "fancy free," or as much so as is possible after its declarations against both Blaine and Cleveland. Would that St. John might woo and win "the great hebdomadal."

THE political campaign is rapidly verging toward a Ten-Commandment basis. The close scrutiny of personal morals reaches even the candidate who smokes, especially if he be a Prohibitionist. It is a wholesome symptom.

THE Hon. Wm. Daniel will spend the month of September in the northeast, Gov. St. John will speak September 1 and 2, at Cleveland and Toledo Ohio; on the 3rd at Lake Bluff; on the 6th at his home in Olathe, Kansas, and on the 17th at Madison, Wisconsin.

DURING the prevalence of cholera in India two bodies of troops were stationed close together. One, of a hundred men, practiced total abstinence and the other, of three hundred men, drank as usual. Of the former group only one was attacked and recovered, of the latter thirty died.

WE publish in this week's issue a letter to the W. C. T. U. from a Belleville brewer. It is very much for the same reason that one would apply spurs to a horse on an errand for medical relief to a sick friend. It will urge on temperance endeavor to see once in a while, the enemy in his true colors.

THE Lake Bluff temperance convocation began on Sunday last. The moral suasion wing under command of Francis Murphy occupies the first three days, afterward comes legal suasion with Col. Bain, the Hon. William Daniel, and Gov. St. John as the attractions. People and politics of all sorts will get their "portion in due season."

IN Munich where the average amount of beer consumed is greater than anywhere else in the world, being, in 1882, 432 litres to the individual, it is found that the average weight of the heart is greater than elsewhere. The London Lancet, which makes this statement, says that it is agreed that the habitual consumption of large quantities of beer tends to this effect.

ANOTHER Chautauqua is promised and one of no ordinary attraction. It is located in Florida, on Lake de Funiak, midway between Jacksonville and New Orleans, and it is proposed to hold the assembly there in the latter part of February, when the tourists are "flitting" from the exposition and the carnival to the everglades. At least one day will be given to the National W. C. T. U. and the most cordial invitation is given by the managers to all of us who may be southern tourists at that time.

THE Boston W. C. T. U. will have a prominent section in the New England Institute Fair, holding from September 1st till November. Supplies of literature and photographs of honored and representative temperance men and women, for gift and sale; W. C. T. U. mottoes, ditto, ice water and temperance drinks; pledge cards and albums, Band of Hope material, (THE UNION SIGNAL'S quarterlies doubtless) St. John and Daniel lithographs, all these and more will figure in the display. The Boston women come behind in no gift.

"DEATH to all who will enforce the law," was the war cry of saloonists and their friends in the Iowa City riots last week. Stones with this legend placarded upon them were hurled through windows at women and children, and the murderous spirit of the liquor traffic gleamed out of ferocious eyes at the men who had dared aid the efficiency of the prohibitory statute. The immediate causes of the riot are these: A brewer of Iowa City has openly defied the law since July 4, placing a tombstome at the door of his brewery on which is inscribed "To the memory of the first informer." A revolver and a rope on his counter were designed to further intimidate prosecution. But Iowa prohibitionists are made of stuff that does not flinch at revolvers and tombstones, and several suits were brought against the brewer. A traitorous mayor aided the mob by his inaction, and the attorney of the prosecution was dragged, torn and tarred by a mob led by the brewer's bar tender. Witnesses were beaten and nearly killed and the mayor would give no authority for the arrest of the rioters. The next day the county board of supervisors met and gave six saloon licenses to men who had been engaged in the rebellion, a double insult to law abiding people. The day after, the Republican state convention met in DesMoines, and renominated Judge Rothroc, one of the judges who denied the validity of the constitutional amendment.

THE address of our National officers, to which editorial space is given, would have appeared earlier but for the fact that so many of them have been "on the wing" ever since the Pittsburgh convention, consequently the consultation necessary to a work of this kind was inevitably slow. As it now comes before the society and the public, it appears to us the legitimate outcome of ten years' work along W. C. T. U. lines. It is the logical sequence of the total abstinence and no-license position of these years. If the alcoholic drink habit is destructive of the individual, the home and the nation, and if the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drink ministers to this habit, and very few will deny that it does, then public safety demands the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drink. If this prohibition is opposed by the political parties in both state and nation, as it is with but two or three state exceptions, then a party is needed which shall embody this principle, and which in time, by unswerving loyalty and voting in strict accordance with conviction, shall enshrine it in both state and national government.

SOME well wishing friends of prohibition and some critics not so well wishing, are moved to say that the effort to secure prohibition by way of an amendment to the national constitution, and especially the effort to secure it by way of a national political movement is both absurd and unwise.

The Toledo Blade, for instance, says that it would require half a century to bring about the ratification of three-fourths of the states of a prohibition amendment, and bids all the simple minded folk who are working upon this line to go home to their firesides and work out the problem by states, in which it asserts there will be little or no difficulty. This sage observation follows:

When enough states have incorporated prohibition into their constitutions there will be no trouble in making prohibition the law of the land.

Now will the redoubtable Blade tell these good but misguided people how long it will be before enough states have incorporated prohibition in their constitutions, and how under the sun, if it will take fifty years to get a national amendment ratified by these states, it will not take fifty years to get these states to enact prohibition for themselves. The same effort that it suggests as so presently practicable, viz., electing legislatures which will submit prohibition to the people, will if applied in that direction, elect legislatures which will ratify national prohibition.

But the real kernel of antagonism to national effort is that it takes place in a presidential year, and that it has this year taken the form of independent party organization and action.

THOU KNOWEST NOT WHAT A DAY MAY BRING FORTH.

MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

'Tis a beautiful morning,
Serene and blue;
The heaven bends over
The earth like a lover
Tender and true.
The day is new;
Unknown, untried
She comes to me,
A mystery
To be revealed,
A volume sealed,
I wait the eventide.

O day unknown!
Just from the throne
Of Him who blest thee, and did send thee forth,
What bringest thou?
Thy radiant brow
Speaks of good will and love from heaven to earth.
Good will, and yet
Can we forget
Days that have broken just as bright and fair,
Yet seemed to bring,
Upon swift wing,
But sin, and sorrow, weeping and despair!

The cyclone's breath,
The scourge of death,
Terrors, that made the bravest heart to quail,
Temptations spell,
The powers of hell,
The demon's laugh, the victim's bitter wail!

What bringest thou?
Unmask thy brow
And tell us, O thou fair and sunny day.
Silent? Ah well!
Thou needst not tell,
For faith hath taught us yet a better way.

Thou canst not bring
The smallest thing
That hast not passed the hand of Him I love.
My Father knows
The joys and woes
Thou bringest, and I wait His care to prove.

I charge thee bring
The very thing
My Father sendest me, if black or white.
If ease or pain,
If loss or gain,
His choice for me shall be my sole delight.

One only need
Of God I plead,
That I may find the balance of my life
In Him: and then
Come what or when,
I shall not be surprised by sin or strife.

Held firm and still,
By His good will,
I shall be kept in peace, however tried.
So—speechless day,
Pass on thy way,
I trust my God, from morn to eventide.

PRISCILLA'S QUEER STREAK.

IN TWO PARTS.

MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

PART II.

Next summer we returned again to find Miss Prissy outwardly the same, but a great change had come over the spirit of her home. The house was wide open to everybody. Her brother, who it seemed had not been eaten after all by the cannibals, had returned and was to pass the summer with her whenever he could escape from the engagements that crowded upon him to preach before churches and missionary societies, summer institutes and camp meetings, at all of which his wide experience and observation and eloquence made him a valued help. He was a scholarly man with a fine, strong face, and eyes like Prissy's own, full of earnestness and fire. Language, that in Prissy had been called her "gift of gab," in this man was a weapon of wonderful power. And Prissy's pride and delight in him knew no bounds. She had a smart bonnet and went with him everywhere. Especially wherever he was to speak on temperance, a theme that seemed to take great hold on both his heart and hers, and one upon which he seemed to have marvellous power to rouse and help the people, she was sure to be there and as near to the platform as she could get. People congratulated him on the change his coming had wrought in her, and his eyes filled with tears of tenderness as he said, "Oh Prissy; Prissy queer? God bless her! Be very sure that, whatever Prissy did she knew what she was about, and she did it for the best."

And certainly Prissy did seem to round out wonderfully under her brother's watchful care. Not only did her sunken cheeks take on a matronly rosiness, like a glow on a winter apple, but her thin, wiry form grew round and plump, and her heart seemed to overflow toward everybody in loving hospitality and cheer.

To the cottage the society of a cultivated Christian man like Robert Price was a delight, and to Kate we sometimes fancied a pleasure that she could ill spare, while it was plain that she was the attraction in the house to the grave divine. There was no more talking across the fence; we went freely from door to door without any restraint.

One night at dusk chancing to enter the dining room with Kate we noticed Dr. Price standing outside on the ground as if hesitating to come in. His face was troubled and burdened as we had often seen Prissy's when she thought no one was looking. Suddenly, as he stood there, before he saw us and before we could speak, the servant passed through the room bearing a lighted lamp. Its glare fell full on his face, on his bare forehead as he stood hat in hand and lost in some painful thought. It was only a moment, but it was enough. Kate knew him; knew why she had always fancied she had seen him; knew now when and where that face had stamped itself upon her mind. Trembling in every limb she grasped the table and it moved under her weight. A moment later he was in at the open door and standing beside her.

"Pardon me; I thought you staggered and were about to fall," he said. Are you ill? Miss Humphrey, Kate, speak to me. Are you ill?"

"No, no; you frightened me as I saw you outside there. It gave me a fright," and she gasped and moved away from his hand.

"Let me help you Kate: come into the garden, into the fresh air. It is too warm and close for you here. Do come, for I have so much to say to you, and tomorrow I am going away."

Hardly knowing how she got there, while I ran for the camphor bottle she allowed herself to be led to the old seat under the maple at the end of the old red house. The night was very still, and his voice was broken and troubled as he began: "I am going away tomorrrow, Kate, and I must talk to you before I go; not about my love, for you have known that all the summer long, but about my own shameful unworthiness of any love, even of the love of this noble sister of mine. I left this house a young man just ready for the ministry, and entered, as you know, a foreign missionary field. Of my own growth in knowledge and power to serve the church and the world, of my years of service, you know and the world knows; but there is something in my life that none but Prissy knows, Kate; a black, horrible time, the stain of which nothing can wipe away. It is hard for me to tell you, and yet," he faltered, "I cannot deceive you longer. I want you to know."

"But, but, you need not tell me. I know it is hard. You need not try to tell it, for," she paused and stammered, "I think, indeed I am sure I know it all."

"You! you, Kate; then did Prissy tell?"

"No, indeed; never. She guarded her sorrow and your shame as I would have supposed only a mother could have done. You can never forget what she did and endured for you. You have no right to put any other woman before her in your life."

"I know it, my friend. My life belongs to her, and if I were worthy, I would never grieve her by any step she was unwilling I should take. She has hidden my sin and shame, and so indeed have you, if it is true that you have known it all the time."

"I did not know until tonight. Tonight, when I saw you again in the same attitude, on the same spot where you stood that night last year."

"You saw me! You saw me then, that shameful night?"

"Yes, I saw you and I pitied you."

"And I had watched you from my prison window many an hour, and loved you and struggled to be a man again for you, to be worthy of you, though I knew I could never win you. Let me tell you about it, Kate. The habit began after long prostration from the climate and it ate into my life like fire. I had the good sense to quit my work and come away before it was suspected, and for two or three years before I came to this country I had been striving and failing, striving and failing to free myself from the curse of drink. I could not do it. I could only keep myself in lands where no one knew me, where I could hide my name. I could not bear to drag my father's name and the cause so dear to him in the mire. At last I heard of my father's failing health. The letter had been long in tracing me. I began to long for a sight of him and the old home, and for the sister I had left a child. I came to this country, but I did not arrive until my father was gone. I could not come to my sister to disgrace and shadow her life with a habit that I could not control. I could not come back a drunkard to the place where my mother and father lived and died, and from which they sent me forth with pride. I would not come, but I came as near as I dared, and Prissy came to meet me, and I told her all my life and that I could never get my manhood back so long as liquor could be had. She came home; the old house was transformed as far as need be by her own hands into an asylum and a prison. I was ill and feeble. She nursed me back to health with never a murmur or a reproach. She braved censure, gossip and even slander, for more than once we were observed in our night rambles, taken that I might not suffer for lack of exercise and air. I assure you I did my best, but when no praying or soothing, or food or care could exorcise the demon, and I was mad with thirst and felt that I must drink or die, she would coax me to that room above and whose shutters she had nailed with her own hands, and there with the door locked, in danger of my killing her in order to escape, she yet comforted and controlled and helped me through. More than once I thought I should kill her and myself in the fierceness of the fight, and she only answered calmly, 'Well, Robert, then we will die. It is better for us to die than to yield.' After the paroxysms passed I begged her never to yield, and she promised to let me die but never to give me drink. Once, once only, I succeeded in deceiving her. I had seen you all go out in the evening, and had seen her go too, and the madness of the desire was something that without my sister I could not bear. You know what I did for you saw me. I crept home and was in my room, more a madman than a man when Prissy came back to me; and yet in constant danger of her life, that woman would not tell." Of course it was all to do over again after that.

"Oh, if only there had not been a drop in the house," said Kate earnestly, "how much time might have been saved. Well, that was the last. Were you never tempted to try it again?"

"Yes, but Prissy told me you said you would never have it there any more, and I had come to watch you with such interest that I feared lest you should find out, and that, even then, was a restraint."

"Thank God for that. If I could only feel I helped poor Prissy, instead of hindered."

"You helped always, every time I saw you, and Prissy knew that."

"Indeed I did," broke in Prissy's voice from the open window behind the maple tree. "You were always a help. The very sight of you was a help and comfort to me too, and I want you to go on helping, Kate Humphrey. I have had trouble enough with that brother of mine, and I want you to take him off my hands." She spoke hurriedly, as if she feared to break down if she did not go on to the end; and her hand grasped Kate's across the window sill.

"Don't think I have been hearing all your talk, but I came in to sit by the window in the quiet and coolness, and I heard my brother say he would not do anything to grieve me. He is right; his life belongs to me. He is saved; the total abstinence has quenched the horrible desire. God will keep him for a great and good work. He has kept him from shaming the church and his father's name and He will keep him from shaming his wife. He is mine; next to God he does belong to me, and I shall do what I will with my own, and I give him to you, Kate; I give him freely and gladly to you."

The old red farm house is the parsonage now, and Kate Humphrey is the parson's wife, and Robert Price is settled over the First church in Herndon, where Prissy sat last Sunday in her corner of the departed deacon's pew. There I saw her only three days ago, and there I trust she will be found for many and many a Sabbath morn to come. Everybody trusts and loves her, and only toothless old Mrs. Purdy seems to remember that for a year or two "arter her father died Prissy wasn't like other folks, and showed an accountably queer streak." Mrs. Purdy says "them that's been a leetle grain out once is apt to be so again." But, out of her head or in it we have no fears for our neighbor, Prissy Price.

AN OPEN LETTER

To the One Hundred Thousand Women of the W. C. T. U.

My Dear Sisters:—The first decade of our work in the temperance cause has ended with rejoicings; rejoicings that so many earnest Christian workers have enlisted in the cause; rejoicings that even a few of our United States have favored and adopted prohibition.

At the beginning of our crusade noble women courageously knelt in the streets to invoke the aid of Almighty God. We fearlessly announced that "the weapons of our warfare were not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." We professed to be disciples of Him who has promised, saying: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

For a little time a spirit of awe seemed to rest upon the heart of the rumseller.

Did he think that Elijah's God who "answered by fire," had come to lead us to certain victory? Let us not be surprised if by this time, he is beginning to taunt us as did Elijah the prophets of Baal: "Cry aloud for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth and must be awaked"

During these ten years, six hundred thousand have gone from among us to fill drunkards' graves. Had they been missionaries of the cross, or had they died in the performance of any Christian duty, we might bless Him who gave and who took away. But when we reflect that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, let us begin to question our own hearts and see if we are ready to adopt any measures which God may require of us for the salvation of those who are yet within our reach.

Our lamented President Lincoln, though very modest in his pretensions to piety, yet had the sagacity to recognize our God as the God of battles. Before even three years of unsuccessful war had passed, he began to suspect that for some reason, God was not working with him. As the plagues of Egypt were to Pharaoh, so were the successive defeats of our army to him but the voice of God saying in terms not to be misunderstood, Let my people go; I have heard their cry by reason of their task masters and am come down to deliver them.

Dare we say that the millions of Africans in the United States are not just as much God's people as ourselves? Are they not included in the Christian's commission to go and disciple all nations?

It is said that in India caste is the great impediment to Christian progress. Whatever hinders the coming of Christ's kingdom on earth is sin.

Need we go out of our own land to find the sin of caste?

Many of the women whom I address are also enthusiastic workers in the missionary cause. The real missionary spirit is that which prompted Christ to leave his heavenly home and come to earth to save the lost. His greatest works were wrought among the lowly and the degraded. If we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of His.

It was the association of Mr. and Mrs. Little with the Modocs, as well as their work for them, that saved the tribe.

There are local unions which try in vain to sustain temperance prayer meetings. Within a stone's throw of their prayer rooms are living colored women, members in good standing of evangelical churches, who because of race prejudice are excluded from all participation in the work of the union. Many of these women are quite as gifted in prayer and exhortation as are their white sisters. While the prayer room is closed to these women, to their husbands and sons the saloon is always open. There is no caste in the heart of a rumseller. With him there is "neither Greek nor Jew, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free." Truly "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." We would that the Christian women who compose this temperance army might become more deeply imbued with the spirit of Christ, might have their hearts so filled with Him that there would be no room for caste. Then might we find in this despised people a powerful ally not only in the temperance cause, but in every good work. Then would the rumseller begin to suspect that we were finding the hiding of God's power. No amount of petitioning or praying would so convict him of our earnestness and of the certainty of our success. If the spirit of caste is ever broken it must be done by Christians. We do not expect it of the world's people. As Christ bore the cross, despising the shame, so should we.

As George Eliot has said: "The true cross of the Redeemer was the sin and sorrow of this world. That was what lay heavy on his heart and that is the cross we shall share with Him. That is the cup we must drink of with Him if we would have any part in that Divine love which is one with His sorrow."

Are these people degraded, dishonest, untruthful? This is the greatest argument in favor of laboring with them. Christ came to save just such. Shall we fear to stoop that we may raise them up? No Christian nation ever did or ever can throw away such an opportunity with impunity. We are now in debt to them for two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil.

As others have said: "We can not pay them in kind but we can admit their right to citizenship; to the privileges of trade and to equality. As a nation we are now involved in a slavery more degrading, more fearful in its consequences than was theirs. Their bodies and intellects alone could be in bondage. Rum enslaves the soul as well. Is it not just possible that we are drinking of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation?

"The mills of God grind slowly,
But they grind exceedingly small,
Though with patience He stands waiting,
With exactness grinds He all."

Would to God that our leaders in this great reform might lead us a little faster. If the Rev. Jotham Horton, with whose record we are familiar, and whom Mrs. J. Ellen Foster rightly calls her grand old father, were alive, no work for humanity in which his daughter could engage would be more pleasing to him.

If we are for God as well as for home and native land, we shall hasten to enlist the co-operation of all without regard to race. What examples of true Christianity we might be to those who compose the Young Men's Christian Association.

Murphy says that the rum power can only be broken by fasting and prayer. In Isaiah 58:6, 7,it is written: "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thine house?"

In one sense only have the oppressed gone free. Every yoke is not yet broken. We do not yet consent to bring the poor that are cast out to our own house. "Let them keep their place," is the universal cry. "Let them have a union by themselves" is the verdict of the most influential. When we consent to the fast which God has chosen for us, then may we claim the promise which follows: "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily, and thy righteousness shall go before thee. The glory of the Lord shall be thy reward."

"Then shalt thou call and the Lord shall answer, thou shalt cry and He shall say: Here I am, If thou take away from the midst of thee, the yoke, the putting forth of the finger and speaking vanity, and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry and satisfy the afflicted soul: then shall thy light rise in obscurity and thy darkness be as the noonday. And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought and make fat thy bones, and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not, and they that be of thee shall build the old waste places. Thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations, and thou shalt be called the repairer of the breach, the restorer of paths to dwell in."

Thank offerings and sacrifices have been made, but as Samuel said to Saul: "Behold! to obey is better than sacrifice!" If as a people we fail to obey the voice of God in this matter, the time may come when it will be said to us as it was to Saul: "The Lord hath rent the kingdom from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine that is better than thou."

In God's word we are told that whatsoever we ask we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in His sight. If we fail to work on God's plan we shall be defeated as were the Israelites in the presence of our enemies.

We may canvass the states from Maine to California; we may sacrifice until the last silver cup is laid upon the altar; we may pray on and on until another six hundred thousand of our husbands and sons have fallen, but if we regard iniquity in our hearts the Lord will not hear us.

SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS.

Miss C. S. Burnett.

No 13—Juvenile work in the Sunday school.

In a previous article we said that home was the best place for temperance instruction. But we well know that neither temperance nor moral instruction will be given in many of our homes since they are but the hotbeds of impurity and vice. There are 3,000,000 children in our land in homes where vice prevails. The Sunday school was designed to meet this very want. This, today, is the open door of promise. There are currents of of influence going forth from the Sunday schools that in some way reach every home, touch every heart. If these currents of influence can be permeated through and through with gospel temperance truth the masses of our people will be reached and blessed. If the church will put into the Sunday schools more of her time, more of her money, more of Christian love and sympathy she will find her work for temperance and all other reforms more prosperous and in the end successful. It will scarcely be denied that temperance is a legitimate part of Sunday school work. Indeed, that school that takes no steps in this direction cannot say it is doing its whole duty by the children. On to the front in all reforms, should be the battle cry of every school. Out of the old ruts and make an aggressive attack upon the enemy.

Long enough have our Sunday schools looked quietly on while this enemy, strong drink, has entered their midst and borne off the most promising of their number. Every respectable drinker you meet will tell you he was once a member of the Sunday school, while seven-tenths of the inmates of the Ohio penitentiary there received more or less instruction. This ought not so to be. There is too much routine work in our schools and not enough life and vitality. Our teachers and officers are either careless or afraid to speak out boldly against this monster evil of our times. We plead for temperance teaching in our Sunday schools, because intemperance more than any other vice is keeping our children out of the church. Special instruction is needed where special temptation is iable to be met. Baptise the 6,000,000 Sabbath school pupils of our land in the faith that rejects the intoxicating cup and attempts the rescue of the imperiled and you have moved on to the final, the speedy overthrow of this evil. In every community if the Sunday school is not a leader in this work it should be a powerful ally.

You ask how this work can be done. First, interest the officers and teachers. The pastor and superintendent must lead. See that one Saubath each quarter is set apart for this work. See that temperance papers adapted to their years are in the hands of every child. Make a free use of the beautiful tracts and cards now printed so cheap. Have a temperance pledge roll in every school headed by the teachers and officers, for in these days a teacher who is not a total abstainer is unfit to have the charge of children. Of course all will not sign the pledge, but many will do so. Provide for frequent temperance concerts and entertainments. The children are always delighted with these and will in this way hear the subject presented in every possible form; in this way you also reach the parents more successfully than in any other way.

I know that all these methods are practicable and easy. Will you not try them yourself? Sisters, are we not neglecting this work that lies so near our doors? How many of us mention the subject to the classes we teach? Nearly every lesson gives an opportunity to say a word. In many instances this work must be done by us right here if it is done at all. Are all our unions looking after this department of work? I know how it is; there is so much to be done and so few to do it that this is allowed to pass uncared for, yet it is the easiest and most fruitful of all our means.

The door is open, sister, brother, enter it, but go in the fear of God and asking His blessing upon the work.

Correspondence.

A BREWER'S LETTER.

To the Ladies of the Christian Temperance Union.

Although you will reproach me with writing this letter in the interest of my business, yet I shall not be thereby deterred from giving you my opinion about the temperance movement, expecting you will read and reflect without prejudice upon what I shall say.

I wish to remark in the first place that I am from a zealous Protestant family and have therefore received a careful Christian education, but I do not now belong to any particular religious sect.

I will also readily acknowledge that there is, in general, too much drinking, and that especially the excessive use of whisky is productive of many evil consequences; but I believe that in the way which you have taken to fight this evil, you will not only be unsuccessful in your attempts to destroy, but you will aggravate it.

You call yourselves the Temperance Society of Christian Women. If your purpose is to make people really temperate in eating and drinking, in dress, in the exercise of all the impulses natural to a human being, and in all their pleasures, I would advise every woman to join your beneficent society. But what you propose is nothing less than the oppression of all your fellow beings whose ideas of are different from yours. It will be my principal task to prove to you that your intolerant opinions and actions are not founded upon Biblical doctrine and have no support in the scriptures, to which you always, but with no right, appeal. You will confess that of all the apostles of Christ, Matthew was the most gifted. Be so good as to take your Bible and read Matthew 15 8-21:

8. This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me.

9. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

10. And he called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear, and understand:

11. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.

12. Then came his disciples, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended, after they heard this saying?

13. But he answered and said, Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

14. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

15. Then answered Peter and said unto him, Declare unto us this parable.

16. And Jesus said, Are ye also without understanding?

17. Do not ye yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught?

18. But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man.

19. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies:

20. These are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.

21. Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.

The 8th and 9th verses will at once set you to thinking. Yet you hate all men who differ from you in belief, who do not follow the precepts and rules which you prescribe and wish to enforce, and who do not understand the Bible as you wish them to understand it. The eleventh verse shows you that Christ's idea of temperance was very different from yours else God in man had not said what He did.

This passage does not need explanation and is not susceptible of theological misconstructions, the words stand there plain and unchangeable, and are hard blows to your Pharisaic intolerance of others' ideas. Beware, lest you become of the number of whom Christ says: "Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." Furthermore, important as is the 17th verse, far more important are the 18th and 19th verses, which are direct condemnations of your prohibition of certain things which men drink or eat. Who of you can venture without bringing upon herself blasphemy, to alter the meaning of Christ's words, who came to release the world from the bonds imposed upon it b a hard and unfeeling interpretation of Moses' teachings, and whose name you have always on your lips as that of your leader? The omnipotent Savior said: "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies." He has in no place charged these sins to drunkenness as you and your preachers do. If the thirst for drink has become overpowering it has certainly its natural cause; and just as the physician who studies the disease of his patient, seeks the cause of the disorder, so ought we to investigate the source of this vice and find its remedy. Troubles of various kinds at home, incurable sickness, loss of self-respect, want of employment, hopeless poverty, and the sudden acquisition of unaccustomed riches, are, in the case of fickle and ill-educated men, causes of intemperance which are very hard to remove. Habitual drunkards are a blight on society that will remain as long as there are incorrigible criminals. The former belong partly to the hospital; the latter should be punished with the utmost rigor of the law, and be deprived of all civil rights, and be placed under guardianship.

But how do the habitual drunkards originate? The principal cause is the want of proper treatment and education in youth. It cannot be proved by the Bible that the temperate use of fermented beverages is forbidden. But you tell your children, and especially your boys that drinking is a sin and is forbidden by God.

Your children go to Sunday school, and it is there preached to them that the saloon keeper is a monster in league with the devil, and has taken the agency for populating hell, and that all his patrons are hopeless victims. That kind of teaching will do until your child begins to think for himself; then he will begin to doubt many things that have been told him. The boy goes by a respectable saloon, whose owner is, as he observes, a straight-forward, irreproachable men. In the saloon he sees well-known citizens who cannot be victims of the devil for they are generally acknowledged to be good men. And when the boy grows to be a young man you may be sure he will try to become more intimately acquainted with the hells which have been pictured by you to him. It is the forbidden fruit that tempts the taste. He soon finds friends "who are in the same fix." "Where are you going?" "Say, if you will hold your tongue I will tell you; there is going to be fun in ——'s saloon. I am going there." "But your parents?" "Bah! the whole business is a humbug; my old man drinks on the sly. I saw him myself. At home he pretends to be pious. Come on!" And so the first step is taken.

Your child, instead of visiting with his father a reputable saloon and listening to the instructive discourse of sensible men, will, if left to himself, fall into the evil ways of his bad companions and thus become a victim of his wrong education. If you then put the Bible into his hands to save his soul, he will find out that neither Christ nor his disciples condemned drinking as a sin, and so will even your child come to reproach you with hypocrisy and falsehood in holiest things. The germ of passion is inborn in the child and can only be kept within proper bounds by proper treatment.

Play with your child social games and let the prize be nuts or other worthless trifles. If you have a child who has a passion for winning by games of chance you can by wise precaution, guard against his becoming a gambler.

If he cheats in play you may easily reform him, and it will not be necessary for him later to end his days in a penitentiary. Observe your children at play with harmless domestic animals and insects, and if one of the boys is cruel and takes pleasure in seeing an animal squirm with pain, you will then have an opportunity to suppress such a reprehensible inclination in the bud, and save your child perhaps from a murderer's gallows. Introduce into your family the temperate use of light wines and good beer and allow your children to accustom themselves to the moderate and proper enjoyment of these beverages and you will not be saddened by seeing them become drunkards when they are grown and left to their own judgment. The Germans usually send their children at an early age out into the world to take care of themselves. You can find in all parts of the world young men of German birth, who are left entirely to their own guidance and whose souls are afflicted with but one distemper and that is home-sickness. Would not these young men be ruined if they had received a wrong education in respect to the passions which rule the world? Undoubtedly all Germans have a hearty appetite and thirst, but it is seldom that you find a habitual drunkard among them, and this fact is due to their correct training in youth.

To return to the Bible, Christ drank wine, and His finest parables are about the vineyards. See Matthew 9:17, 18, the 20th and 21st chapters and many other chapters in the New Testament. The wine made in Palestine was excellent, of a fiery and exhilarating nature, and Jesus made some of the best of it at the wedding in Cana and thereby left us proof of his appreciation of a good drink. His last supper with His disciples was graced by wine. How sorrowfully after, yet consolingly, He says, Matthew 26:29: "But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it anew with you in my Father's kingdom. In this passage Christ teaches that He not only favors the use of wine here, but also in heaven, and you may have an opportunity to start a temperance society there also.

But not only did Christ drink wine, but His apostles drank also. Peter says in Acts 2:14, 15 on the occasion of the outpouring of the Holy Ghost: "Ye men of Judea and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you and hearken to my words—for these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day."

Peter does not say that the disciples might not under other circumstances have been intoxicated, but that in the present instance they were not so, and that their strange behavior was due to the outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon them.

Christ was the friend of the poor and the oppressed. When the Pharisees complained to him that his disciples were breaking the Sabbath, he answered them that the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath. The disciples were ordinary laborers. Now, you ladies who appeal in all things to Christ, would deny the laborer, who has to toil and care the whole week for the support of his family, the right of being lord of his Sabbath as you are of yours and spending the day as Christ himself allowed him. You cannot judge what a laborer needs to enjoy life: you have no right to prescribe to him how he shall celebrate his Sunday. Your pleasures begin on Monday and on Sunday you rest from them. Led by the temperance apostle, Matthew, the first temperance movement in Germany began about the year 1840. The best men and women took part in it; their object was to produce real temperance not to establish prohibition. Unfortunately the clergy animated by an immoderate zeal got the leadership and control of the movement, which took the direction of a reform in dress, and in the social intercourse of young people of the two sexes as well as in the matter of drinking. The maiden's long braids of hair were cut off by the temperance apostles in person, and the girls then wore their hair short like men, only parted in the middle. Young men and women were forbidden to enjoy together all amusements, even the most innocent. The temperance societies were not productive of the good which people were at first justified in expecting from them and soon outlived their usefulness.

As you also aim at the extreme and impossible, your movement will be without good results. In striving for the prohibition of all spirituous drinks, you neglect and ignore true temperance in the exercise of all our passions.

You may accept this as a certainty that as long as the earth exists and produces vegetation of any kind there will be alcoholic drinks, whose wise use for man's enjoyment and health can be secured only by a proper education.

In conclusion allow me to remark that man must be able to overcome every passion, otherwise he is a weakling. How a woman can love a man who forfeits his personal freedom and lets others dictate what he shall eat or drink is a mystery to me; such a man is an imbecile and unworthy of a true woman.

Respectfully, B. Hartmann.

THE ST. JOHN CIRCUIT.

Dear Union Signal:—The St. John's circuit of temperance camps in New York state never burned brighter than they do this year.

Thirty-five camp fires lighted and kept ablaze by such men as John P. St. John, Geo. W. Bain, John B. Finch, John Sobieska, Rev. Boole of Brooklyn and a dozen more, helped by such women as Mary Lathrap, Emily Mc Laughlin, Mrs. St. John of Colorado, Mrs. Yeomans of Canada, who everywhere win hearts for themselves and votes for the cause. Every phase of the temperance question is being discussed by these no-license preachers, of the St. John's gospel of prohibition.

Since the convention at Pittsburgh, the temperance people have a standard bearer around whom they may rally and men who have voted with the "dear old party" before are going to vote for principle this year.

When Mr. St. John spoke in Fairport, the business men closed their places of business at 2 p. m. and joined the procession, and in that beautiful city they have but two political flags hung, and both are for St. John and Daniel. In Canada I met an old man from Michigan, who was going to vote for St. John if it took him 1000 miles travel to do it. And what are the sisters doing? heytell me New York women are conservative but I neverin any state, found women getting mixed up in politicsas these do here.

Where the St. John and Daniel clubs are started, the women join in, furnish the flag, attend the meetings, and do considerable talking for their candidate. A few days ago, when St. John, with a few friends passed over the road, a passenger asked another in their hearing if he was going to vote for St. John. But the man answered, "No, I am not going to vote for any sorehead Republican." His companion, who was none other than George W. Bain, now said: "Oh, let me introduce you to the the Hon. John P. St. John," and as they both turned around they met the genial face of the Kansas hero. You can imagine how the man felt. Every drop of blood seemed to be in his face, and hurriedly he sought another car where there was more room. Last night, at a union meeting in the Baptist church at Lockport, one of the good preachers whispered to me before going into the pulpit; "Don't be afraid to talk politics, we believe there is much of it in the Bible." Yes, the preachers are being converted to the Prohibition party, and were not afraid to tell of it in their pulpits.

In Elmira I held a union service in the Presbyterian church. The pastor, a young man, had been converted to national prohibition only two days before, and the next Sunday, for the first time, he had a woman in his pulpit to talk to his people on that question. At the close he said:

"I have changed my mind lately. Within the past year I have become a father; and as I hold the babe—my boy—in my arms and look into his innocent eyes, I ask myself, What is my government doing to help me to bring up my child right?" Oh that more fathers might reason this way.

At Bradford, Pa., on a Sunday morning I was invited in the Presbyterian pulpit, the first woman who had ever been there. In speaking to the people of the all absorbing question, the staid Presbyterians actually forgot themselves so far that they cheered right in the midst of it. Oh yes the world is moving on.

The camps are well attended, and from 2,000 to 5,000 people and more listen with open ears and eager hearts to the pleadings for God and home and native land.

It is not the sorehead Republicans and Democrats who are joining our ranks. Sore heads are caused by whisky and I think the soreheads may be found in the old parties but men with clear heads but sore and tender hearts are joining the Prohibition party, hearts made sore by the awful doings of rum. These are men—manly men who dare to fight evil with all their might, men who dare after they have done all—to stand.

Laura G. Fixen.

A CALIFORNIA CONGRATULATION.

Dear Union Signal:—The two weeks that my paper failed to come I felt as if I had lost something out of my life, essential to its happiness. I know that you and your corps of helpers were taking your needed vacation, and so I tried to possess myself in patience until the next issue came. Yesterday, as I took my mail from the box, I recognized its familiar face, and just couldn't help but give it a dear, little squeeze, in token of my appreciation of its return.

But, do you know, I went from the office to our union meeting, (we always meet every Friday afternoon here in Los Angeles), and came very near giving my paper away, without meaning to do so. I had carried in with me some back numbers for distribution, and somehow my new copy got mixed with them, but fortunately for my peace of mind, I discovered it in its fresh, clean dress, snuggling up close to its companions, before it was too late.

I had my hour of enjoyment in reading its columns last evening, save the editorial letters of the proceedings of the Prohibition Convention, I reserved that for to-day. I have just finished reading it, and it has so filled me with excitement that I can scarcely refrain from a Hip, hip, hurrah, and a "tiger" too. My heart is bubbling over with enthusiasm, and figuratively, it is just going over the same performance that the convention enacted, waving canes and fans and hats, and crying out in lusty tones "Hurrah for John St. John and Daniel too." Oh! wasn't it all jolly and glorious, and wasn't Miss Willard grand, and weren't you all just as proud of her as proud could be? Oh! I am so glad to-day that I am a woman, and I thank God that woman's citizenship and the triumph of the temperance cause are going to come, hand in hand, and that we have not many more years to wait. Will it not be eminently fitting that woman shall be crowned, when we have secured constitutional prohibition?

Now this is what troubles me, and why I trouble you today. So many of the very best and most womanly members of our union think it unwise for us to identify ourselves with any party, and that ours is a non-partisan organization, and should be, because we are so unfortunate as to be classed with paupers, criminals and idiots, and have no vote. Some of these dear women even think that it is eminently proper that we should be so classed. I, for my part, feel pretty sensitive about this heterogeneous classification, especially just now when "it would do me proud" to drop my clean, white ballot into the ballot box for noble St. John and the noble cause. And then too has not the N. W. C. T. U. set us the example and identified itself most decidedly with a party and should we not do so? Please make it all plain in your columns, will you not, and relieve my mind of its doubts and perplexities? A Would-be Voter.

ANOTHER PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE.

Dear Union Signal:—I like very much that candidate for the presidency nominated by Father Cleary in the Catholic convention at Chicago. It is the best nomination yet. The Republican convention made a colored man its chairman, but this Catholic convention nominates a slave to be not only a chairman but a president. It is the first time a slave was so honored. Slaves have indeed made themselves kings. But a king comes to a throne usually through blood and by power of a sword, or else by mere inheritance. But it is far grander than a king to come to power, not by might nor by mere birth, but by force of merit, and as a recognition of merit by fellow men. This candidate only lacks one vote of being elected, and that one needful vote he holds in his own hand.

A slave may thus become master of himself, and so be the equal of the mightiest. His own vote holds the deciding power, and it is for us as an organization to influence him to cast it in his own favor.

It thus becomes a very singular campaign. Persuading a slave to be a candidate for a presidency with a certainty of his election if he will only vote for himself. For a slave to be president of himself is to elevate him to authority over a large and important constituency, with honor exceeding that of the greatest general, though the captor of many cities. By all means give us many such presidents, a long line of them in glorious succession.

All hail to Father Cleary's candidate, and may he be triumphantly elected to triple terms thrice over. Even before St. John he is the coming man, the man who can elect himself to power, and then, from his high vantage ground, help many another to break his bonds, to be more than king, and eventually dethrone King Alcohol.

A FOREIGNER'S SUGGESTION.

Dear Union Signal:—Many foreigners would be glad of an opportunity for instruction in the English language. Others of us, who work for a living, feel the lack of education. We do not meet with much success in the work of self-instruction and discipline. The ordinary night schools require more time and money than we can spare.

Would it be worth the while to a temperance organization, for the sake of teaching us from the temperance text books, to provide evening schools, where once a week, for a small fee, we could receive instruction in such branches as we might choose, as well as in such principles as we ought to be grounded upon.

Could not a temperance organization secure the services of competent teachers so as to be able to offer instruction in any branch of study included in either a high school or a business college course, at very reasonable terms.

Could not the efficiency of the work be assured by taking only such pupils as would sign an agreement giving as much power as can be given to school authorities to enforce rules requiring faithful study, regular attendance, etc.

Would not an agreement giving the same authority in regard to the use of alcohol, be a good substitute for the pledge for such as would sign it?

Does the above plea answer the question "How shall we reach the foreigners?"

Is it a good way to be ready to teach the people what they wish to learn, in order to get them to learn what you wish to teach? Journeyman.

An English saloonist or "publican" as these people are called across the water, was charged with selling intoxicating drink to a drunken person and had defended himself by saying that neither nor his servants noticed the person was drunk, as he was perfectly quiet; but the magistrate, finding that as a fact, the person was drunk, convicted the publican. The publican appealed, but the court of the Queen's Bench, London, upheld the magistrate's decision, on the ground that the licensed person must take the risk of the person being drunk.

Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone;
Save thou a soul and it shall save thy own!

THE GIANT.

A giant goes hunting without hound or pack,
Before you, behind you. Ah! woe and alack
For the boy that is found in this wicked one's track.

When you're out with the boys at recess to play
He follows and tempts you the first oath to say;
Then stop, and resolve you are not going that way.

When you're offered the fine-cut to smoke or to chew,
And told you should do as the other boys do,
Stand, like a brave man, to your pledge and be true.

Again, he will come with the dazzling wine,
And press you, though often you bow and decline,
To taste "only once," it is so charmingly fine.

Now these are the things that I bid you beware,
For you are the bird for the hunter to snare,
And "Once" is the giant; so, my boy, have a care.

REUBEN PLANT'S FAULT.

CHAPTER I.—TEMPTATION.

"Robert, come here."

"Yes, father."

The speakers were Reuben Plant, a hale stalwart man with a cheery voice and a genial eye; and his son, a bright-faced lad of about twelve years old.

"So you refuse to fetch me a pint of beer?"

"Yes, father," says the boy timidly.

"You know I could thrash you for this!"

"Yes father," again replies the boy, with the tears starting to his eyes.

"But I won't thrash you," said Reuben Plant. "I never have thrashed you yet, and I don't want to begin. Tell me this, why won't you fetch the beer?"

"I don't like the dram shop," said Robert; "and Mr. Miles, our teacher at the Sunday school, says that it is a wicked place to enter, and that we should always strive to avoid temptation."

"Now, look here, my lad," said Reuben; "Mr. Miles may be a very good man in his way, but I have never been in the habit of consulting any person's opinion but my own, and I decline to swallow all the stuff that he seems anxious to pour down your throat. If you want to be a teetotaler, by all means be a teetotaler. If you never taste beer, you'll never want to taste it; and you'll save money, that's one comfort."

"That's just what Mr. Miles says," replied the boy, eagerly; "if you never touch a drop you never want to touch it, and you are better in health without it."

"Stop!" said Reuben," not quite so much about Mr. Miles, if you please; I want you to listen to me, I don't want to be preached at by you. You recollect your grandfather?"

"Yes, father."

"Was he a drunkard?"

"No, father."

"Am I a drunkard?"

"No, father."

"Well, my boy, I fetched your grandfather's beer regularly every day from the 'Sly Fox,' and was never a pin the worse for it. Your grandfather, God bless him! is in heaven, I hope; a cup of beer would never keep him away from it! As for me, the wheelwright's shop is more flourishing than ever. I never did, I never shall, see the slightest harm in an honest drop of beer. If you dislike going to the 'Sly Fox,' I'll go myself. At the same time, recollect this: you are told to obey your parents—you appear to prefer obeying Mr. Miles to obeying your father."

"Father," said the son, the tears coursing down his face, "I never saw it in that light before; I never wanted to disobey you, I never will if I can help it. Let me fetch your beer; you must be right, and teacher must be wrong."

"Spoken like a man, Bob; here's a penny for yourself; bring the beer into the garden, I'm going to smoke a quiet pipe."

And so the beer was fetched.

"I'm almost sorry," remarked Reuben Plant to his wife that night, "I am almost sorry that I sent Bob to the 'Sly Fox.' But there! the boy must learn to withstand temptation. If we tie him to your apron-spring, Mary, he will not be worth a button when he has to face the world. Mr. Miles is a decent fellow, no doubt, and means well; but all his new-fangled ideas of temperance and so forth have not made him particularly strong. I wonder how he'd feel with my sledge-hammer in his hand. I am afraid, Mary, that teetotalers are too weak to be of much use to man or woman in this world."

Too weak! Reuben Plant professed to be a God-fearing man; but he had forgotton the words uttered by that glorious servant of God, Paul, who wrote to the Corinthians: "To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some."

There is nothing more refreshing in this toil of life than man's communion with man. No matter how hard the day's work may have been, no matter how hot, or how cold the weather may have been, when one man meets another, a friend to whom he can confide his joys or his sorrows, the result is comfort and rest. At any rate comfort and solace to a great extent; and it is a signal mark of our Heavenly Father's wondrous love to His creatures that He permits us to derive such strength and consolation from each other. We little appreciate the blessings that God has given us, until, in His wisdom He deprives us of them. Husband! you never conceived how much wealth you had in your wife until you stood beside her grave. Wife! you never knew how dearly you loved your husband until you kissed his placid forehead as he lay in his coffin. Parents, those little human flowers called children, are rarely loved so much until they are lost to us.

How great, how good, how wonderful, how loving is God! How weak, how thankless, how thoughtless are we. But there is, in spite of all our failings, something stranger than our weaknesses—a power that drags us out of hell into heaven; it is the power of Christ, and that power we can grasp by faith.

"Mr. Plant," said Mr. Miles, as his pale, thoughtful face peered into the wheelwright's shop, "may I speak to you?"

"Certainly, sir," replied Reuben his honest countenance smiling through the dust and heat of labor; "certainly, sir."

It was some months after Robert had fetched the beer, and he had fetched it regularly since.

"I am sorry, Mr Plant, rejoined Mr. Miles, "that your son does not attend Sunday school. I have no desire to bias your inclination. You are his parent, and must act as you please."

"My boy not attend Sunday school?" returned Reuben, "why, it's the very place I want him to go to. I have great respect for you, Mr. Miles, but what on earth do you mean?"

"I mean," said Mr. Miles quietly, "that Robert very rarely visits us now. I met him with Jem Tarrant last Sunday, and that is my only reason for speaking."

Reuben Plant stood like a man dazed for a minute, then passing his hand hastily across his brow, he huskily answered, "I'm much obliged to you, sir, I'll see to this."

"Do not be harsh, Mr. Plant," said Mr. Miles. "Keep Robert away from Tarrant. The poor boy's father is beyond redemption in this world, I am afraid, but his son can only contaminate yours."

"My boy a liar!" muttered the wheelwright, as he watched the retreating form of the clergyman; "my boy a liar, and with Jem Tarrant. I must thrash him for it!"

"Well, father, home again you see:" said Robert as he tossed his bag on the nearest chair, "only a few months more, and I give up schooling forever and you will make me your apprentice. I always wanted to be a sailor father, but I'm sure I could work for you in this dear old shop, and I am getting tired of school."

"You're rather late, Bob!" drily remarked Reuben.

"Oh! yes, old Jinks makes us stick to our stuff," said Robert.

"Old Jinks makes you stick to your stuff, does he? well, I was wondering, Bob, if you stuck to yours?"

"Why, father, of course I do; look at my school work."

"I mean your stuff of truth-telling, honesty and so on?"

"Yes, father."

"You attend Sunday school?"

"Yes, father."

"Regularly?"

"No, father."

"Where were you last Sunday?"

"Out, father."

"Doing what?"

"Playing with Jem Tarrant."

"And the Sunday before, and the Sunday before, and the Sunday before that, where were you?"

"With Jem Tarrant."

"And yet when I asked you last Sunday where you had been, you said at Sunday-school—you told me a lie, Robert, you told me a lie."

"I didn't expect to be asked all these questions, or I'd have told you the truth long ago," said Robert.

"I shall thrash you," said the father: "I shall thrash you anyhow, for telling me a lie, so now, if you like, you can make a clean breast of it. You know that Tarrant is an idle, drunken dog; you know that I have forbidden you to have anything to do with the loafing boys in the village, and yet you dare to associate with the blackguard son of a blackguard sot—how was it?"

"I met him at the 'Sly Fox;' his father is often there. Jem is not at all a bad fellow—if he was turned out in the world he'd make a better living than I could. There isn't a pheasant's nest he don't know, father; and for that matter Jem makes his own living now. I never spoke to Jem until I began to fetch your beer, and I can't help saying it, father, I like Jem considerable better than I do Mr. Miles and his Sunday-school."

Robert Plant had his first and last flogging from his father that night.

"God forgive me," said Reuben, as he went moodily to bed, "I have thrashed him for my own fault."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—One of our little soldiers is having a great fight, all on his own account. It is with the giant tobacco. He has an inherited taste for it, and he says that the first time he put a bit in his mouth it seemed to him better than candy, better than oranges, in fact the best thing he had ever tasted. He does not intend to be a tobacco slave, has never used it much, only when "the other boys" are smoking, he says "its pretty hard." And so he and his mother are fighting as if for life against this evil. His mother helps him all she can. She has promised him a gold watch on his twenty-first birthday, if up to that time he has not used "the filthy weed." She reminds him of it very often, as mothers will, and questions him pretty closely sometimes. But he always answers "Mother, I told you I wouldn't, and I won't." That's the kind of an "I won't" that a mother never objects to. I want to help all these boys who are saying "No" to tobacco. Perhaps it may help to know of some of the dreadful troubles tobacco brings. For instance, a tobacco dealer in New York city has been led by a sad case right in his own neighborhood to sell no more cigarettes to boys. He says that the boy, who was a friend of his own son, after smoking cigarettes for a time, had an ulcer form in his nose. It grew till the surgeon had to cut it away. The poison in the wound spread to his left cheek, which became so swollen that another operation became necessary. It communicated with the nerve of his left eye, which in turn became affected so seriously that he gradually lost the sight of it. Whether it will affect the sight of the other is not known yet, but the lad's face is simply terrible to witness. It is scarred and puffed up so as to be almost unrecognizable. The boy is still in the doctor's hands, and is shortly to undergo a third operation.

O, boys, join the manly little fellows I have told you about, and say with "little Robert Reed:"

"I'll never use tobacco, no,
It is a filthy weed,
I'll never put it in my mouth,"
Said little Robert Reed.

Captain Deborah.

THE WAIL OF A MORMON WIFE.

Let every happy wife and mother who reads these lines give her sympathy, prayers and efforts to free her sisters from this degrading bondage. Let all the womanhood of the country stand united for them. There is a power in combined enlightened sentiment and sympathy, before which every form of injustice and cruelty must finally go down.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

There's a waefu' blank at our fireside,
Since Jamie gae'd awa';
Lang in this world I canna' bide
My heart will break in twa.

Jamie, the faither o' my bairns
The lover o' my youth!
Has ta'en another to his arms,
And left his ain puir Ruth!

Forgotten a' his love and troth
Made solemnly to me;
That death alone would part us both,
And set ilk other free.

Sleep, oh sleep, my baby dear!
An' dinna wake to weep,
'Twas only mother's burning tear
That fell upon thy cheek.

Oh dinna let thy mother's grief,
Disturb my baby's rest,
My aching heart aye finds relief,
When thou art on my breast.

Oh, what can quell this inward strife
That rages like the sea;
When Jamie calls that woman wife,
There's nane his wife but me!

Elders, an' priests may counsel gie,
And bid me "bear my cross"
I think it naught but blasphemy!
To bid me bear my loss.

I canna, an' I wunna yield
To this Satanic creed,
I'll take my baby on my back,
And beg around for bread.

Had I ha'en wit to keep the gear
My faither left to me;
Oh weel I ken I'd no' been here,
Sae far ayont the sea.

But the wily saints came to my door,
Without e'er scrip or purse,
Got a' they asked frae me, an' more,
And noo I get their curse.

Which canna do me muckle ill,
Tho' I hae seen the day,
The murderous crew my blood would spill,
And put me "out o' the way."

Surely the time is close at hand,
God grant it were this hour,
When o'er this dark benighted land,
The law would show its power.

To exterminate polygamy,
Degrading to our lives;
And we, the broken hearted,
Would be loving, happy wives.

Salt Lake City, June, 1880 JESSIE COWAN.

"Ask God to give thee skill
In comfort's art;
That thou mayest consecrated be
And set apart
Unto a life of sympathy.
For heavy is the weight of ill
In every heart,
And comforters are needed much
Of Christ-like touch.

STELLA M. WOOD.

Ralph Waldo Emerson says: "A true woman educates all that is delicate, poetic and self-sacrificing, breeds courtesy and learning, conversation and wit, in her rough mate;" and also, "I have thought a sufficient measure of civilization is the influence of good women."

We all agree with Emerson that woman has had an ennobling influence upon the world. Certainly a woman does educate the courteous, the poetic, and the self-sacrificing. There can be no doubt whatever that as an educator in the conversational line, she is far superior to the other sex. Man in infancy is strongly under the influence of women. The child looks up to the father with awe and reverence, but it is the mother's "line upon line, and precept upon precept," which forms the foundation of his future character.

When he attains an age when he can be considered as not "too young to leave his mamma yet," he is placed in school, under the rule and influence of another woman namely, the school mistress. At this stage the woman, has the stronger influence over the child. The influence of the father is seen in the boy's imitation of the man's external characteristics. It is to the woman that the the child's inner life is shown; it is the woman who, as "the child is father of the man," makes or mars the future character. Most of our noble men owe their grand characters to their mothers' training. President Garfield's tender tribute to his mother upon the day of his inauguration is a monument of the wonderful influence of a good mother.

In the hands of a good school mistress the boy does well. It must be admitted that there is a period in a boy's life, where he apparently regards the softer sex with horror and contempt. They can't play ball, they can't play marbles, they're afraid of cows and mice, and nice little spiders, and June bugs, and such things. "These are the times that try boys' souls." It may truly be said that for a few years when the boy is "between hay and grass," so to speak, almost his only female friend is his mother. He torments his sisters, and will walk a block out of his way to avoid meeting a girl to whom he may have to bow. He is painfully conscious of the fact that he has about a foot and a half more of limb than he knows how to manage, and altogether he has a pretty hard time of it. But his mother stands by him and he soon begins to find out that girls are not so bad after all; he spends his time very profitably in their company, and consequently, much more time upon his shoes, hair, and necktie. Now we have him fairly under the influence of the young woman, and if his friends are young ladies he is in a fair way to become a gentleman in spite of himself.

There can be no doubt that girls have great influence over their masculine friends. If they appreciated more how far "little things" go to make up this life, they would use the influence they possess, and "let their light shine" upon some of the great questions of the day.

If a young man, a real nice young man, knew that the young lady whom he liked the best, would have nothing to do with him if he drank anything that would intoxicate, do you think he would do it? If he knew that every nice young lady would shun him if he drank "only a glass of beer now and then," do you not think he would stand true on the temperance question?

We must admit that women can be exasperating beyond endurance. Sometimes their influence then is alarming. Many a man has been driven from home by the little faults of a wife. The provocation often is not our glaring misdeeds, but a great many small ones. It is the little provoking things that are hard to bear. Solomon knew all about it when he said "A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman are alike." "It is better to dwell in the wilderness, than with a contentious and angry woman." "It is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top, than with a brawling woman in a wide house." But Solomon is acquainted with the other kind of woman too, for he also says "Her children arise up and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praiseth her."

Truly noble women will use all their influence against everything which degrades. The temperance women of our day are using all their influence to banish that which degrades and ruins so many millions of our young and old. Men are inclined to speak contemptuously of "woman's arguments." A woman's brain is smaller than a man's, but as Miss Frances Willard says: "Man was created first, and given a large brain; when woman was made she was given a smaller and much better article."

There are certain characteristics of woman which eminently fit her for the temperance work. Mrs. Mary B. Willard says: "How better could the grace of persistence, which is the key-note of our endeavor, have been secured, than by the routine which began for our own country-women that famous Monday on Cape Cod, when our fore-mothers waded out from the Mayflower to the low-lying strip of land, and there inaugurated the first washing day? Ever since women have been washing on Monday, ironing on Tuesday, baking on Wednesday, cleaning on Thursday, sweeping on Friday, baking again on Saturday, and so on fifty-two weeks every year, and forty years to a life time. No wonder our legislators and politicians say, aghast: "What, those women again? Why, they never know when they're whipped!"

Women may be provokingly persistent sometimes, but her persistency accomplishes wonders. "Persistency, thou art a jewel!"

A woman does exert a wonderful influence. If she could only realize it, and use it for the good of all, how much better the world would be. We do not, can not know how much influence we have, but we all know we have some, so let us use it for the good, the noble, and the true, and with God's help make at least a little of the world better and purer for our having lived in it!

FRANCES E. WILLARD ON HIGH LIVING.

"I have formed a settled conviction that the world is fed too much. Pastries, cakes, hot bread, rich gravies, pickles and pepper sauces are all discarded from my 'bill of fare' and I firmly believe they will be from the recipes of the twentieth century. Entire wheat flour bread, vegetables, fruit, fish with a little meat, and milk as the chief drink, will distil in the alembic of the digestive organs, into pure, rich, feverless blood, electric but steady nerves, and brains that can 'think God's thoughts after Him,' as they have never yet been thought. This is my recipe: 'Plain living and high thinking,' and this my warning: With high living you will get exceedingly plain thinking. Yours for stomachic rights."

TOPIC: CONFIDENCE IN GOD.

LESSON TEXT.—Psalms 27: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? Psalm 27: 1.

1. It is not known certainly that this psalm was written when the last battle with Absalom's army was to be fought, but the indications point naturally to this time. It was in the shadow of a great darkness that David could say, "The Lord is my light," in the near approach of danger and possible disaster that he could aver with such confidence, "He is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" Confidence in God is a good thing at all times, but it is no virtue when not specially needed. There is an old song which sings of real confidence:

Oh watch you well by daylight
By daylight you may fear,
But keep no watch in darkness,
The angels then are near.

The fact is, however, that our God is a savior by daylight as well as darkness. His promise is good every morning and every evening.

2. David next proceeds to indulge in a little spiritual boasting. He makes the statement, which seems hardly according to the facts, that his life has been characterized by one desire, to be with God, and then proceeds to build some of his confidence on this fact, and to sing a song of triumph in anticipation of all God is to do for him in consequence. But how soon is he brought low. Conscience now lifts her voice, and the poor human psalmist, comes down to a sinner's cry, "Have mercy upon me, when I cry with my voice. Hide not thy face from me. Put not thy servant away in anger. Leave me not neither forsake me, O God of my salvation." Confidence returns; the mercies of the Lord which have been "ever of old," come back in memory, and David thinks of the love that is more than that of the most forgiving parent, and stands again upon the solid ground of promise, saying, "Though my father and mother should forsake me through my sin, yet repentant, the Lord will adopt and own me."

3. We are taught through David's prayer for a plain path, because of his enemies, that it is right to pray for an open, straightforward, honest, unequivocal Christian character and life, because people are watching us, "mine enemies" being rendered in the margin as "those that observe me." The gainsaying world which neither reads nor hears Christ's gospel save through the lives of His disciples must needs be thought of by every Christian.

4. "If I can be saved, you can" is the argument of him who calls himself the chief of sinners whom Jesus Christ came into the world to save. Something of this cheer enters into David's "Wait upon the Lord, be of good courage and he shall strengthen thine heart. Wait, I say, on the Lord, I, who have sinned against His holy anointing, I, who have defiled the sacred offices of 'prophet, priest and king,' if I can be encouraged, strengthened and made new in Him, I say to you who shall believe on Him through all the ages, wait on the Lord."

God's word disguises nothing, not even the sins of His chosen ones. These things are written for our encouragement, that we who are weak, through sin, may be made strong in the life of Him who came to destroy the works of the devil, whether they be in the lives of Christians or in the world lying in wickedness.

Attitude of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union toward political parties. Resolution passed at the tenth annual meeting, Detroit, Mich.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION--WHY?

"Nothing can be effected by agitating prohibition at this time," say the plausible objectors to prohibition politics, "for the simple reason that the result of the election of president and members of congress can have no immediate bearing upon the subject."

The statement is "simple," but is not true. The "reason" is not a reason because the election of a prohibition president and congress would have great and wide bearing upon the subject.

Let us see if this be not true. If enough voters ally themselves with the Prohibition party to elect a president, the same voters can easily elect a congress. Now what this congress can do for prohibition will be done, and the president will execute the will of congress.

What can congress do for prohibition? First and nearest, it can shut up the two thousand saloons which Mr. Daniel told the Prohibition convention were keeping open doors day and night right under the shadow of the capitol building at Washington. This a Republican congress has been importuned to do by the people of the District of Columbia, but has refused. It has also denied these same people the right to vote upon the licensing of these saloons by congress, although strongly petitioned by them to grant the privilege.

Second, it can prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the territories, which are under the immediate government of congress. This would cover nearly one-third of the area of the United States with prohibition at once, and shut up over 8,000 saloons which now flourish in these territories, as well as one hundred and fifty breweries. The prohibition enacted against selling liquor to the Indians in these territories, might also be enforced, by military patrol if necessary, as in the British possessions close by.

Third, it can prohibit the importation of all foreign liquors, and the sale of liquors in foreign lands by Americans. The other day at Council Bluffs, Iowa, a number of half barrels of beer were carried from the railway station to a saloon in that city. Inquiry disclosed the fact that the beer was shipped from Germany, and no state law, no matter how prohibitory, could step in and stop it in transitu. No railroad could be prosecuted for carrying it, while the general government protects it. Not long ago the government of Siam aroused to a sense of injury to its citizens from the sale of drink by American traders, besought the American consul to withdraw his protection from these men, and to his honor be it noted, the request was granted. Congress can withdraw its protection from such traffic by Americans in all lands, but has not done so save in this instance. On the contrary in its treaties it has stipulated expressly that dram selling by Americans shall not be interfered with.

Fourth and most important, it can submit to the legislatures of the states an amendment to the United States' constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages. And it can remove the greatest obstacle to prohibition in the government and in a large portion of the sentiment of the country, viz., the vast system of internal revenue from the manufacture and sale of these beverages. When one thinks of what congress can do, and what the Republican congress of the United States has not done; when one thinks moreover of the partnership entered into by congress, and which has existed for the past twenty years between our government and the liquor traffic, the wonder is that temperance men and women have not long ago organized to set aside the instrumentality by which so much sin of "omission and commission" has been made possible and actual.

IS THERE ROOM FOR A NEW DEPARTMENT?

Although immigration will not probably this year add so largely to our population as in 1883, there will hardly be less than half a million prospective citizens brought to our shores during the twelvemonth so rapidly passing. Of these, one-fifth will be legal voters in five years, probably more than this, as many of the immigrant boys of today will in five years be men. From Castle Garden to Minnesota, Dakota and the farther western states and territories these strange people surge over our continent, meeting only with agents who often prey upon their innocence or credulity, and seeing little of a Christian civilization. There certainly ought to be a W. C. T. U. missionary in each of the great cities along this line of march, whose duty it should be to visit the railway stations where these people "most do congregate," with supplies of temperance literature in the native tongue of the immigrant, showing the dangers peculiarly incident to foreigners in America, and especially that of importing the drink customs of old countries into the electric atmosphere and nervous conditions of the new.

Opposite nearly every railway station is a long line of dram shops, where the immigrant is systematically plundered. These he should be emphatically warned to shun, and a motherly hand-grasp with a kind word of welcome and note of admonition printed in his own language, would go far to win him at the outset, to temperance and Christian thought. At the Jersey City station of the Pennsylvania railway, an old colored woman has been stewardess for thirty-five years. Her work of sympathy and love in that position will never be forgotten by those who have been "ministered unto" by her faithful hands. It would be quite within the possibilities to secure for such positions, women who would do W. C. T. U. work, or to make use of such as are already in position for this purpose. The matter deserves a hearing and consideration by an organization working upon the "do everything" policy.

A teacher in the Cold Water Army of a Michigan City, one day asked each boy and girl to do something for temperance during the week to come. At the next regular meeting just as the exercises were about to close, a sweet little girl five or six years of age raised her hand and said to the teacher: "I did temperance this week."

Teacher—What did you do my dear?

Little girl—Me and another girl went into the saloons.

Teacher—(With great astonishment) What did you say?

Little girl—We tried to get them to stop selling their liquor.

Teacher—What did they say?

Little girl—One man said, 'You get out of here?' Another man said 'You find me a job of work and I will stop selling liquors," and another man said, 'Yes I will close,' but he only closed for one night. The next day his saloon was open just the same."

If every voter in the United States could have watched the face of this little girl as she told the story of her disappointment, if every voter could have seen the bright childish face clouded, as this first blow at childish faith was struck, there would be many a vote for St. John and Prohibition that may now go carelessly into an old party ballot box.

Said one of these careless ones to a prohibition worker the other day, "Oh you people have sprung this prohibition question too soon. The ground isn't pulverized enough yet."

"Well, hearts are pulverized sufficiently. I only know that," was her sad reply.

A heart question has come into the domain of politics, and heart questions are stubborn things.

The Band of Hope Quarterly for which the demand has been so great that the Woman's Temperance Publication Association has undertaken the supply, will be forthcoming in September. It will contain two sets of lessons, or one lesson adapted to two grades of scholars; the intermediate and primary. The primary lessons are written by Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, and will make infant teaching and learning an easy task. These lessons will have passed the scrutiny of several scientific students, and we believe will meet the want which has been described to us.

The first quarter will be devoted to the physiological effects of Alcohol and Tobacco; Second quarter: Effects upon Mind and Morals; Third quarter; Effects upon the Pocket Book; Fourth quarter; Effects upon the Nation.

ADDRESS OF THE NATIONAL OFFICERS.

Office of the National W. C. T. U.,
16 East 14th Street, New York,
July 30, 1884.

To the Officers and Members of our State and Local W. C. T. Unions:

Beloved Sisters:—You are doubtless aware that the following was reported by the committee on resolutions and unanimously adopted at our last annual meeting (Detroit, Mich., Oct. 31 to Nov. 3) by delegates from twenty-eight states, two territories, and District of Columbia.

Resolved, That we will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes. (See page 31, Sec. 5, Minutes of 10th Annual Convention National W. C. T. U.)

In harmony with this action, a memorial was ordered, which was duly prepared, signed by the general officers of all the states and territories and presented by your representatives to the four leading political parties when they met to nominate candidates for the presidency of the United States. This was called the "Memorial of the American Home against the American Saloon," and asked that the party platforms should declare for national constitutional prohibition and that the conventions should select candidates committed by character and public pledge to this great movement.

The Greenback party adopted the following:

We are in favor of submitting to vote of the people an amendment to the constitution in favor of suffrage regardless of sex, and also on the subject of the liquor traffic.

The Democratic party says:

We oppose sumptuary laws which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty.

The Republican party platform ignores the memorial of the American home but "renews allegiance to the principles on which the party has triumphed in three successive presidential elections." This includes the Raster resolution of 1872. As to candidates, Mr. Blaine, in his celebrated letter of last November, made the following statement:

The proposition which I have suggested gives the revenue from a specific tax wholly to the states and does not depend upon a chance surplus or an accidental remainder in the national treasury. It maks the tax on spirituous and malt liquors a permanent resource to all the states enabling them thereby definitely to readjust and reduce their own taxation. I believe the measure would prove a great beneficence to the people in all parts of the republic.

Gen. Logan is the author of a proposition to to support the public schools from the revenue of the liquor traffic.

The Prohibition Home Protection Party (thirty-one states represented,) by rising vote, pledged itself to all that our memorial contemplated, and subsequently placed in nomination as its candidates, Hon. John P. St. John, of Kansas, and Hon. William Daniel, of Maryland, Christian gentleman of undoubted character, chief champions of the temperance cause, representatives of once dissevered sections of our country, and devoted allies of the W. C. T. U. The Republican and Democratic candidates for president have not given the weight of influence or example to the wineless dinner table, but stand committed to such social usages and legislative methods as we are organized specifically to work against.

The Prohibition party has welcomed our leaders to all its councils, given them honorable recognition always, and committed itself to the principle of woman's ballot as a home protection measure.

Dear sisters; you remember our call to prayer only four months ago. We prayed for a platform committed to prohibition and for candidates whose characters and habits mothers could commend to the imitation of their sons. Such a platform and such candidates have now been given to the nation. The first state to put John P. St. John in nomination was Alabama, and for the first time since the war a native of the south has been placed upon the ticket of a party that is sure to poll a vote entitling it to the "respectful consideration" of those who respect nothing but numbers.

The "solid north" of republicanism and "solid south" of democracy can only be abolished by a new party, no longer on the lines of latitude, in which the people of both sections can rally around a common standard for the destruction of a common foe.

Let us accept with untold gratitude this answered prayer; be "willing in the day of God's power," and remember "the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

In view of the foregoing facts we, your general officers, deem it our duty to carry out the provisions of the Detroit resolution by suggesting to you some of the methods by which we may all "lend our influence."

First. By thoroughly informing ourselves on this question, that we may render a reason for the hope that is within us. Knowledge is power. We meet specious arguments and keen objections on every hand. Let us be determined to know whereof we affirm. The "Hand-book of Prohibition" excels all other books in clear and concise statements about this party, its origin, aims, history, and above all its argument. Send twenty-five cents (to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, 16 East 14th St. New York) and get a copy to be read and commented upon at the local meetings. You could not do better than to invest money enough to buy a dozen copies and keep them circulating among the voting population. Men will read now, when the national issue is squarely made as they would not when it existed only in theory.

Carefully read and widely circulate The Union Signal (161 LaSalle street, Chicago.) It will be an arsenal of weapons and a perpetual supply of ammunition. Get up campaign clubs for The Issue of Today, published by the same house (20cts for the campaign, and $10.00 per hundred.)

Second. Write the voter's pledge in small books, suited to pocket or reticule and be instant in season and out of season to pledge the individual voter. You can often induce a Republican to "pair off" with a Democrat and vice versa, since that would not influence the aggregate vote of either of the old parties.

Pledge of the Voters of the Home.

We, the undersigned, realizing that the homes of this nation are unrepresented save through us, do hereby pledge ourselves to God, to our honored countrywomen, and to each other, that for the protection of the home, from the curse of the saloon we will henceforth vote only for those candidates for office, local, State and national, who stand upon a platform demanding the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and who are committed by character and public pledge, to the adoption and enforcement of prohibitory law.

Third. Watch the papers carefully, and when you see an incorrect statement or misleading argument, reply to it, briefly and pointedly, thus mortgaging the immense circulation of the great dailies and weeklies in the interest of our movement. Permit no such statement to go unanswered. By this means you will reach the largest possible number of readers.

Fourth. Pass resolutions in favor of the movement in all your conventions, telegraph them to the candidates and the associated press, and give them to the newspapers. Help the Prohibition party rallies; aid in the organization of Prohibition clubs in putting up campaign staffs, flinging a banner to the breeze inscribed: "Prohibition party—the Home versus the Saloon — St. John and Daniel."

But first, last, always, let us pray much for the party that, in its first resolution, recognizes God, and in its last invokes His blessing.

Finally. In every word of the foregoing address, and in these brief suggestions, be it remembered that no individual member — local, auxiliary, or state union — is in any way bound to receive what we have said in the way of sisterly counsel. There is nothing intended beyond the expression of what we understand to be the general opinion of our National union on the great and sacred subjects now before the American people. Falter who must, follow who dare, and may God defend the right

Your earnest sister workers,

Frances E. Willard, President,
Caroline B. Buell, Sec'y.
Mary A. Woodbridge, Rec. Sec.
Esther Pugh, Treas.

Miss Willard and Miss Gordon spent a few hours the other day with Miss F. Jennie Duty, near Rochester. Miss D. is rapidly regaining her usual health. She will probably accompany Miss Willard to several of the western state conventions of the W. C. T. U., and will attend the national convention at St. Louis, October 23.

Hon. J. T. Tanner, ex-mayor of Athens, Ala., was a delegate to the Pittsburgh convention, and the first one who nominated Gov. St. John. There is an omen of buried sectionalism in this that every right minded person must enjoy. Mr. Tanner is a liberal by nature. Though born and reared in a gulf state he requested the committee on permanent organization to make his wife, rather than himself, vice president for Alabama. He "thought it would encourage her."

At Chautauqua during the W. C. T. U. anniversaries a question meeting was held. Forty-two questions were asked by the audience and answered from the platform, nearly half of them relating to "third party" work. "Vox populi" is hard to stifle.

But this reminds me of somewhat I am sorry to see, namely, at certain camp meetings held by the W. C. T. U. on Methodist camp grounds, a vigilance worthy of a better cause is exercised by some well meaning ministers regarding politics, and if a good brother in an experience meeting chances to speak of his political conviction or conversion he is told to "Sit down. Politics are out of order here."

It makes me hope that the God of Israel will show Himself to these people, He who inspired the "politics" of a chosen people and made their prophets "politicians" in the truest and best sense.

* * *

If this country is ever to be God's country, the priests and the people and every sacred assembly must be devoted to "politics".

News from the Field.

ANNIVERSARY DAY AT CHAUTAUQUA.

The decennial anniversary of the organization was celebrated at Chautauqua on Friday, August 15. Dr. Vincent presided at the opening of the session. The speakers were Miss Willard and Mrs. McLaughlin.

In the afternoon Miss Willard took the chair, and addresses were made by Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. McLaughlin, and Mrs. Lathrap. The address of the evening was given by Mrs. Lathrap. The facts elicted and the outgrowing and far-reaching results took in the nation and posterity in its sweep, and so cogently were these things presented by the different speakers that it was impossible for any to escape their measure of responsibility. The following synopses of the speeches made will indicate the general drift of the discussions:

ADDRESS OF MISS WILLARD.

"Dear Friends,—It seems to me that a human being is a good deal like this grand organ back of us, with many pipes and stops, and banks of keys; and the kind of music you get depends a good deal on the sort of player you are. The instrument has possibilities of discord, but the skilled mind brings out that which touches every heart and arouses every soul by touching the key-note of brotherhood. I am glad to believe that in this is the purpose and intent of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which Chautauqua gives so gracious and brotherly a welcome today. It is a society which demands harmony—it does not strive for discord. It seeks to build; it is constructive. And I am glad this day, on this, the tenth anniversary of this blessed instrumentality of the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ, to pay all honor to those who, in its early infancy, gave it warm welcome at Chautauqua and recognized it as among the Chautauqua ideas, which have gone out and blessed so widely our nation.

"Ten years ago, good women and true came together, some of whom are present, and called a meeting, with the benediction and good will of the father of Chautauqua, and in a prayer meeting there was the thought, prayed over first, and then the thought written out, and the society organized with Mrs. Willing as president, and Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller as secretary. Then they issued a call for a national convention of Christian temperance women. I am told that Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown was the first to intimate that the result of the women's crusade should be crystalized into a permanent organization, the wonderful proofs of the favor of the Lord in that whirlwind called the "Crusade" that swept across the land, routing the liquor traffic, horse, foot and dragoons. It called the women out of their homes to band themselves together to make a change, for the land was full of crimes and the country full of evil. Everybody has heard of that crusade; not every one is familiar with the fact that its sober second thought was the W. C. T. U. The women who went out on that movement had no skilled leaders, no methods, no plans, but in the slow march of a decade we have learned so many things. The logic of events has led us into a differentiation of our work—into gospel work, educational work, legal work, social work. Under these general heads are thirty-three departments, each of which has its superintendents.

"I believe there are circles of power which this work has penetrated, beginning with the smallest circle of the human heart. A man had strayed away from God and home. He could not speak his own words, and he was ofttimes cruelest to those whom he loved the best. Down in the mud and slime our society came to him, trying to lift him up and help him, came speaking kindly and friendly words, speaking the words that Christ uttered: "If the Son shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." And so we brought the gospel and lifted up the cross to those who supposed they were forgotten, that they were not cared for, and least of all that they were remembered by the women of the nation. The union ceme first to the individual. We said to them we want to get the bottle out of your pocket and get a testament in its place. We do not want to deck you with a ribbon, and label you with a badge, and set you up in a museum to be gazed at, but if you will take the pledge we will take it, too, and make it as easy as we can for you to make a splendid right about-face toward God. And so we came to seek gently, to invade the smallest of all circles, that is the circle of a sinful, tempted heart.

"But you know the next circle: that in, when two hearts united their destinies and laid the foundations of a human home. And the time came for gospel temperance to go out into this larger circle.

"I think that home, if it is to be the shield we love to call it, demands not only a priestess but a priest to keep its altar pure and bright. I turn to the young ladies here and ask them to remember that honor for honor, truth for truth, purity for purity, total abstinence for total abstinence, is the only safe basis for the home. Why is it that brothers and sisters, so dear to each other, sharing the same advantages, go out to make paths so widely different?

"We are hedged about, while our brothers are thrust out to take their chances and to see life in its most tempting aspects. So the W. C. T. U. is forming Bands of Hope, and is working in the Sunday schools, bringing about greater safeguards and guarantees to surround the steps of boys who go out into life's treacherous highways, and whose mothers can not follow them.

"But outside of that there is a third circle, and that is society, made up of all hearts and homes. Society ought to be a larger home I thank God for Mrs. Hayes, who has lifted up the standard so high that none could help but see it; who would not put out any alcoholic drinks before the guests she would honor.

"Our work is not only in America but in Canada and across the sea, where a cathedral doors have been thrown open, and bishops and canons have taken hold of the work. But there is a wider outlook, and we call it government, and we read that 'the government shall be upon His shoulder.' We women believe that moral wrong can never be legal right, and so we believe in prohibition, and speak it everywhere from a gospel point of view. Government is organized in such a way that there is a contract in it. It is a game two can play at Every member entering it becomes a partner and brings some safeguard, some capital to add to the firm.

"I bring forward the saloon keeper and let him speak. You ask me a hard question, he says. He is to take the comforts out of our homes to keep up our business. He is to take the boys and lead them to ruin.

"Because of what the saloon does against the interest of the home, we are here to stay till the liquor traffic shall be put under the ban of law. [Applause.] We do not expect to win entirely. When the physician can put up his medicine and say you do not need his assistance; when the teachers can fling their text books out of the windows because there is no need of education; then we expect temperance to be a success, and not till then. If there is a gentleman present engaged in manufacturing liquor; if he knew that the deep, great swell of the people's wrath was rising against his business, he would think that that was not a good place for his capital. We come to you, asking that every gentleman shall give a vote on our side, to remember that you represent the home, and that if you do not act for it your wives and and children will be without representation. I ask you in the voice of those whom you love to take this stand.

ADDRESS OF MRS. EMILY M'LAUGHLIN, OF BOSTON, MASS.

"Dear Friends,—I would at once quiet your fears by assuring you that one of the blessed achievements of the W. C. T. U. has been that we are learning to make short speeches. I shall not detain you this morning.

"I am glad that I live in this age when the moral sentiment of my country is, to such a goodly extent, arrayed against this great sentiment of evil, which the demand for and supply of intoxicating liquors has made possible among us. I am glad that I live in a time when the mother-heart of this great nation is being deeply stirred with a sense of the impending danger for those they love; when all over our country, from north to south, from east to west, earnest men and women are banding themselves together for the defense of their homes and of their children. I am glad that I live in a practical age of temperance reform.

"It is said that Dr. Channing once, sitting in an audience of temperance people, heard a speaker who was depicting, with some considerable relish, the horrors of delirium tremens. The doctor endured it as long as he could, and finally spoke up, 'Friend, we have heard enough about the evil. For God's sake, tell us if there is anything we can do about it.' I rejoice that so many earnest men and women are asking what can we do about it, and trying to answer that question.

"We read a great deal about the public sentiment not being ready for prohibition. Our good men in Boston, some of the best men under the sun, who bid us God speed, and contribute money, often say to us, 'You are too fast; you are expecting to do impossible things. Don't you see that the public sentiment is not ready for you?" And then they sit back very comfortably, as if, somehow or other, if we waited long enough, we will be evolved into the condition where public sentiment will clamor for prohibition.

"Friends, is it coming that way? Has it come that way in the past? I am here to say this morning that I believe in the prohibition of the liquor traffic by law, whether public sentiment is quite ready for it, or not. [Applause.] Perhaps it is because I am a woman, perhaps it is because I do not hold in my hand a ballot, or have any political axe to grind, but this morning there is not a cloud in my mind regarding the righteousness of the prohibition of the liquor traffic by law in this country. I took up this great work as a department of Christian enterprise in my Master's name, with the open Bible before me. It is my God who pronounces the 'Woe to him that puts the bottle to his neighbor's lips;' who says, 'Touch not the wine when it is red;' who says, 'Come out, have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.' I listen, and remember that nineteen hundred years ago the lowly Nazarene flung down before the Jews a problem of profit and loss: 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' It is in the light of this question that I would have the men in this country decide this important matter.

"But I think we are not so narrow that we do not feel the importance and the value of a high public sentiment behind the law, or public conviction, which is a better word. There is any quantity of loose sentiment about the country, but the need of the hour is clearly defined, outspoken, aggressive effort, which shall be the outgrowth of deep conviction. How are we to get this behind the law? Is it coming down upon us like an avalanche, some time? Are we to be baptized with public sentiment in answer to prayer? God can do a great deal for His people in answer to prayer. During the ten years of our organization, every success that has come to our cause, has come in answer to prayer. But I believe that God will not do anything for us that we can do for ourselves. The hour of our extremity will be the hour of His opportunity. When the men and women of this country who deplore the results of the liquor traffic, when they wake up to the work, when they have done the best they can, and have come to difficulties, as surely they will, then God will appear to their relief. Public sentiment will come as the outgrowth of honest and legitimate effort.

"The law is but a magnificent piece of machinery to do something with.

"It is because we believe this that we are prosecuting this work. We know that we shall fail if we do not take legal measures, or if we fail to take hold of these lines of educational work which reach into the homes and schools of the country. I want to say to you that we have come into this work to stay. (Applause.) We did not come into it at the bidding of any party organization; we did not come into it for any whim, but at the mandate of stern conviction, in response to the cry of sore necessity, under the pressure of personal responsibility; and God helping, we are going to stay in this work until this question is righteously settled.

"I just give you notice that you are not going to have any peace for the rest of your life; you might just as well vote prohibition first as last. We were silent so long, we are ashamed. We are ashamed because our hearts' dearest treasures were at stake all the time; but but we are going to talk now, and you are not going to hear the last of it until you shut up the saloons, and make the streets of this blessed country safe for children to walk in them.

ADDRESS OF MRS. SALLIE F. CHAPIN.

"The work in the south is different from the work you have here in the north. The first woman to whom I ever listened was Miss Willard, and she little knows my anxiety when she wrote she was coming. It was like the man with the white elephant. No woman had ever spoken in our state. I did not know how I should get the ministers to endorse her, but our people are chivalrous. I wrote Bishop Stevens that he must introduce her. He might have the first pulpit in his church, but he has given himself to the colored people. I have known him to sleep on the floor of a cabin to meet the colored people and prepare them to preach the gospel. I am superintendent of the work in fifteen states, and wherever we have a union of the white people we have one of the colored people. You know if we have prohibition at all, it must be brought about by the votes of the white and colored people alike. Our rules and regulations are different from the ones our more progressive sisters see fit to use. In Georgia we have ninety-eight prohibition counties. In South Carolina we have prohibition almost through the entire state, except in the cities. One said: Why don't you tackle your cities? I replied that there was more than one way of tackling, that we were going to bring the mountains down upon them. In six towns the saloon keepers were relieved of their trade. It is a wonderful work God is doing; we cannot take the glory, we see Him so manifest in it. Some of the ministers think we have no business here. The Revised Version reads: "The number of women who proclaimed the glad tidings was a great host." They will have to get another version or let us talk. The fact of the business is, we are going to talk anyway.

"A man said the other day that he did not know what the foolishness of preaching was till he heard that the women were preaching. You know that man, by wisdom, knew not God; and if the foolishness of women's preaching brings them to God, and man's wisdom does not, it is a good thing we have started. This work of women is done in a way so peculiar—it is woman's way; man cannot do it. While the war lasted you were on the one side, we on the other; but this is a war in which we are all engaged. It comes to every home—to every hearth stone. The saloons are there, and we are fighting for home and native land. When I was north a few weeks ago I was at Castle Garden, and I looked and saw the multitude of foreigners there. And as I looked at them I thought that in a few years these will be the men who will make our laws for us. And then I remembered that when I was in Louisiana they wanted to have license abolished, and we had a day of prayer.

"The plantations have passed out of the hands of the men who owned them, and are in the hands of German Jews who have no respect for the Sabbath. They employ the colored people. They marched a body of them past where we were sitting, and they had on their banner a barrel, and they said: 'Where is your Jesus? Throw him out.' When we think of the vast increase of this class of the population, we will see the necessity of laying the right kind of foundations. At a meeting in Louisiana young men from Ohio came to me, drunken young men, with flasks in their pockets, and asked me if I knew their mothers, and if I knew Mother Stewart? You cannot keep your boys at home, and you can not follow them, and so you must work for prohibition.

ADDRESS OF MRS. MARTHA L. WELLS, PRESIDENT OF THE INDIANA W. C. T. U.

"Ten years is a very little while to one at rest. It is a very little time to the mother who clasps her first born child in her arms and lives along the first ten years. It is just a little time, just the morning of life, with all beautiful things written upon it. But it is a sad thing the next ten years, when the boy begins to go astray in the saloons, and the mother spends sleepless nights while she wonders where her boy is that she loved and trusted so. So our W. C. T. U. have learned in the last ten years, as never before, to go to God. They have asked Him to save American homes from the great home destroyer. Why is it the home destroyer? Because it is hedged about with law, because the laws of this land have said it might be so, because the laws of our nation have made it possible for the boy to go astray under the dictation of law.

"Men and women have been afraid, and cowed before this great home destroyer. The women of the W. C. T. U. have learned in these last ten years that there is more to be done than pray, although we believe in prayer as we did, yet we have a broader vision, and we see that this great evil is endangering everything in this government, church, society, law and everything.

The American saloon is a disgrace to our civilization. We have come to believe that the Christian manhood of this country must take hold of this matter. God must be king in this Christian nation, and we must have a high priest as well as king. This government is just loaned to you, it is just in your hands as stewards, you only have the management of it for a little while. By and by God will come to you and ask you for this government, and it will come upon you to render an account for these souls for whom the funeral knell is pealing all over the land. May God help you to do His will this fall at the polls. May every Christian man in America vote as he prays. May God help you to vote as you shall wish that you had voted when your boy takes his way from home and is lost on account of this liquor traffic.

"We stand today on holy ground. We stand where we never stood before. We stand as Luther stood in the old time when he said, 'Here I stand, I can do no other. God help me.' You may tell me that we shall ruin some party. God is king. There are great issues like the tariff. There is only one issue, one kind of tariff, and that is the tariff levied on the souls of our boys. [Applause.]

"May the time come when American manhood will stand to its convictions and be as true as they were twenty years ago in the day of the nation's need. We are reading the Bible with a new meaning. We have seen as never before that the nation is the Lord's and He is king. We have seen as never before that there is a great danger threatening us because we have gone away from God. We intend coming to you as Christ told us, more than nineteen hundred years ago on the first Easter morning, we are "going to tell the brethren." We are going to tell you because we have not the ballot. Some of us do not care if we have not, provided that you will do the work. We are coming to tell this country that there is a great foe in the land, a foe worse than the cholera, that this government of ours needs to be cleaned out, and Uncle Sam needs a housekeeper as he never needed it before in all the history of our country. (Applause.)

"We go out from Chautauqua to-day with its blessed administrations, we go out with the memory of the seven or eight women who kneeled down at Jerusalem and prayed, we go out with a memory of the ten blessed years, with all our courage and conviction, and we go out to set up over this country the blessed cross and the flag below it.

"A little time ago I overheard a conversation in the cars between some gentlemen concerning the election in Ohio. One of them said: "The trouble is with the women. If they would stop their clatter, we could satisfy the men with high license." And gentlemen, until you vote for prohibition, you will never stop our clatter. (Applause.)

ADDRESS OF MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP, FRIDAY EVENING.

"No one can look thoughtfully over the country, at the present time, without being conscious that a great moral question is up for settlement, the second one with which this generation has had to deal. Unlike the other, it does not divide the country with warring sections, but spreads all over the land, a universal curse and misery. It sinks its roots down into the soil of avarice and lawless ambition. It goes out in every line of our political life, destroys statesmen to procure politicians, kills off patriots to make office-seekers, and, laying its hands on a free ballot-box, endangers the foundation of a free government. But we are approaching the hour of decision in regard to this great problem of temperance in this country, and soon we shall face the question of the life of the saloon system or the life of the republic, and I have confidence enough in the intelligence of the people of this republic and in the patriotism of the men of this nation to believe that we shall live to see this great evil swept down into a grave from whence it will never have a resurrection.

We are here tonight to consider the final settlement of this great question. I believe the child is already born that shall see the closed door of the last legalized rum shop in the United States. I do not say he will see the last drunkard, because as long as appetite gnaws, like an undying worm, in men, they will find some way to gratify it; nor do I say the last illicit manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, because as long as avarice leads men to sell their own souls, and that of their brethren, for money, somebody will be found who is avaricious enough to make this liquid fire for the sake of the money it will bring; what I do say is, that I believe the child is now born that will see the door of the last legalized dram shop closed.

"We are not here by the will of fanatics, but by the will of God. It is not Neal Dow in the east, nor Gov. St. John in the west, that has brought this question to this place, but it is God Almighty's will; the march of progress is only another name for the march of God. This question has been lifted to the level of the eyes of this people, and it will not go down again till it is settled in righteousness. When I speak of the final settlement of this question, I mean the settlement of the attitude of the government toward this traffic that is demoralizing our civilization, destroying our homes, and standing athwart the progress of the church of God. We find there are three classes in our population that stand related to the final settlement of the question: First, the drunkard; second, the dealer; third, the sordid citizen. Before proceeding to discuss the drunkard as he may stand related to this question, I will say that the salvation of Jesus, the sanctification of the Holy Spirit and cleansing blood of Christ, will lift any man from the lowest depths and bring him to happiness and salvation in heaven. I believe if it is necessary for Jesus Christ to work a miracle in order to save a drunkard, he will do it; and that we, as Christians, ought to go out in the world and tell them that there is a possibility for the one that seems furthest away. We have been after him for ten years, have chased him from the street to the saloon, from the saloon to the home; and there is not one of us but what would leave this platform and kneel all night by the side of any broken soul that wanted to find God. But we have been in the habit of regarding the drunkard as one offended against, rather than as a criminal, looking upon him as a person that ought to be picked up and cleaned off every time that he falls into the gutter, and have talked about the evil as if it were a wild beast that sought to overcome him.

"If you will go into the saloons and sit down and listen, they will say that ministers are too white-handed now-a-days, Christians too proud, and the churches too aristocratic to do what Jesus told them to do in the parable of the prodigal son. Let me give you another view of this parable. You will remember that it was not the prodigal son that the father forgave, but the repenting son who returned to his father, and I want to say for the honor of the church of God that we are waiting for them to come. We will take them by scores, by hundreds, or by regiments, but we can not be persuaded that it is our duty to take the robe and go out across the country and insist upon putting it upon him while he stays there. We say he ought to come.

"I will put into this army of drinkers whoever belongs there. I put into it the woman who presents the wine-glass to her guest or lifts it to her own lips, because she stands, as related to the final settlement of the question, just as guilty as anybody else; I put into it the minister of the Gospel who uses wine; I want to put in it the dignified and aristocratic drinker; I want you to put in the great, happy crowd of jolly drinkers in this country, who consider the drinking habits of this country as a huge joke gotten up for their amusement, and who look upon the temperance workers as fanatics, and to whom to treat and be treated is a daily sport; I want you to put in the company of men and women that have stumbled down this pathway to where they stand, on the ragged edge of life, shaking, and with whom drinking is no longer a joke—put them all in, men and women, high and low, rich and poor, young and old, cultured and unlettered, and you have a mighty army whose tread shakes this republic.

"Let us divide, for a moment, this community of drinkers into two classes—the foreign born and the American born. If the foreign born drinker stood where I stand, he would probably say something like this: 'I want you to understand that I have no sympathy with what you fanatics call total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state. My father drank before me, and my grandfather before him, and the best people in the land drink. I came to this country because I know it is a free country, and every man has a right to regulate his life according to his own ideas, and I want you to understand that if my personal liberty is to be interfered with by you temperance fanatics and I prevented from doing what I please, I intend to use my influence in caucus and with the ballot to procure the right to drink whenever, and wherever, and whatever I wish.' Now, if there was only one of him we might laugh, but they are coming a thousand a day, a city in a week, and an empire in a year, and before they get their sea-legs off of them they are at the ballot-box making laws for this republic. We ought to pause and ask, "How is that to effect the destiny of this country?" Now, what is the matter with this foreign-born drinker? Is he a sinner above all the dwellers in Galilee? No, the man is honest when he thinks he has the right to drink. That is his education, and he drinks with less shock to his conscience than the American. He has not yet come to comprehend the style and make-up of this government; he has come from a land where he has had nothing to do with law.

"To him all government has been a set of rules, made on the throne and handed down to the common people. He has come to a land that is governed by principles, not by rules. He knows that dissolute kings make a very bad and oppressive government, but he has not yet come to understand that a dissolute citizenship and a degraded ballot box in a republic is infinitely worse in a land where there is no throne but the hearts of the people. He is also ignorant and careless of the style and make up of our population. He has come from a land that is solid in blood, solid in language, solid in nationality, and solid in destiny. He comes to a civilization that is made up of everything. Europe, Asia, Africa and the islands of the sea have poured their thousands upon us until we have in our veins blood black and white, blood fast and slow, blood hot and cold, and he does not understand that this many-blooded civilization is only to be controlled by two things; first, the education of conscience and heart; second, the capture of the intellect that shall make us comprehend the relation of the citizen to the republic. The foreign born drinker says in return for the chances given him, 'I shall use my voice at the caucus, and my vote at the ballot box, to secure the right to drink whenever, wherever, and whatever I please.'

"Now we turn to the American born drinker, and he is a great deal meaner man than the other. It takes a very mean American born man to get drunk. He knows all about the genius of our civilization. The ideal American is not a drinker. It is not the ideal American who sits at the White House table with six kinds of wine at dinner every day; it is not the ideal American that organizes an Irish wake on a railroad train, when going to bury a dead president; that organizes a Yorktown spree instead of a jubilee in order to celebrate the victories of a hundred years ago, and then coolly present their bill for drinks to congress; it is not an ideal American that organizes a great national convention and puts into the palace train that carries them a car that contains only liquors, cigars and tobacco; it is not the ideal American that gathers in Chicago to nominate a president for either party, and drinks $4,000 worth of liquors over the bar of one palace hotel. The American born drinker drinks against the protest of the highest patriotism.

"We have had a great deal of talk in this country about personal liberty, and it all centers around the breweries. In the next place, the American-born drinker drinks against the protest of the American church. Our Sunday schools contain nearly seven millions of children, and yet one-half of the criminals that are sent to prison are sent under twenty-one years of age. There seems to be a wonderfully short cut from the door of the Sunday school to the saloon, and then to the prison. I long for the day when right down in the hearts and consciences of the children in the school and church shall be put the dangers that will come to them by and by. It is not enough that the boys and girls go out well-educated, but they must know what they will meet on the streets. It seems to me that the hearts and consciences of our people need to be educated more. The American born drinker drinks against the genius of our reforms.

"These two classes, the foreign and American born drinkers, drift together in the saloons; there they clasp hands, the one not knowing about our civilization, and the other, who ought to know, yet they stand right shoulder to shoulder, and they say 'We intend to use our influence in caucus and our votes at the polls in order to secure to ourselves the right to drink whenever, wherever, and whatever we please.' These drinkers say to the distiller and the brewer: 'You make whisky and beer and we will drink it.' They say to the keepers of palace hotels: 'Stock your bars and we will not stop at a temperance house.' They say to rum sellers: 'Keep your saloons open late at night and Sundays and we will make it pay for you to take the risk to break the law.' And while these things are being done, these people know that nearly one hundred thousand of the citizens of this republic go down yearly into drunkards' graves because of these things, but they don't care; they know that the best and brightest names have been shadowed forever in this land, but they don't care; they know that this country trembles now from center to circumference under the financial, commercial and social problems that this great evil brings upon it, but they don't care; they know that the air of every midnight is heavy with women's sobs and wet with children's tears, but they don't care.

"Is it any wonder that the members of the W. C. T. U. at last stretch out their hands to such people as gather in this place and say, 'Won't you help us to settle this mighty question?'

"Now, we turn to the second class the dealer. If the rum seller, as we sometimes call him, could stand here, there are two or three things he might say for himself. He might say: 'I want you good people to understand that I do not think it right for me and my family to be socially ostracised because of my business, which is not regarded by all in the light in which you fanatical people regard it. There is a large number of people who thank me for manufacturing and selling liquors.' And we cannot say that it is not so. What is the reason that you have saloons in the state of New York? Because you want them: a certain portion of our civilization wants them. He would say: 'I want you to understand that my business is perfectly legal. Every state has grappled with the settlement of the question of this business of mine, and with the exception of two or three states that have recently fallen into the hands of temperance fanatics, all the legislatures have declared that my business is legal.' Now, we can not say that it is not so. God writes down the name of the dealer and the name of the man who rents his building for that kind of traffic. Then puts in several thousand Christian farmers.

"In Milwaukee, last March, after the two great parties had nominated candidates for local offices, the liquor dealers held a meeting on Sunday afternoon, and resolved that they would support no man, no matter to what party he belonged, that was not pledged to their interest; and they resolved that they would support any man, no matter to what party he belonged, if he was pledged to the trade. Now all these men clasp hands and stand together, and say: 'We want you to understand that we stand together in this thing, and we intend to use our influence in caucus and party; we intend to use our votes at the free ballot box in order to secure to ourselves the right to manufacture and drink whatever, whenever and wherever we please.'

"Now because of this unity between the drinker and the seller in the use of their influence, I want you to see that the great system that holds in its grasp the drinker on one side and the dealer on the other, holds in its hands the pivot on which swing more of our political destinies than any other thing. The caucus is in the saloon, or the saloon is in the caucus, and on election day the good citizen goes to the polls and votes the ticket that is made for him; and, dear friends, you cannot elect a man today, from constable to president, without going to the saloon door, and in all meekness, and saying: "Please, gentlemen, who will you vote for if we nominate him?" And the party success depends on the saloon majorities.

"Now, dear friends, this is the size of the problem that is to be met by the honest, sober citizen whose life is free from these habits and whose hands are clean."

HYGIENE AND HEREDITY.

STATE NORMAL INSTITUTE AT LAKE BLUFF.

The Normal Institutes of Hygiene and Heredity which are being carried on under the auspices of these two departments, present rare opportunities to our women for studying these important branches of our great work, and the one just held at Lake Bluff, Ill., was among the very best of these occasions.

HYGIENE.

As previously announced the first two days were devoted to hygiene. In the absence of the state superintendent, Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, professor in the Woman's Medical College of Chicago, and superintendent of the department of hygiene for that city, presided at these meetings, and with her ready knowledge and felicitous manner gave such zest to the topics under consideration at each session that the discussions which followed the addresses were very animated and full of interest throughout.

Owing to an unavoidable delay which prevented some of the speakers from reaching the grounds at the time appointed some changes were necessitated in the program. The first session was devoted to a general discussion of matters pertaining to health, led by Drs. Mary Weeks Burnett and Florence Hunt, of Chicago. A lively interest was awakened and assured for succeeding sessions.

In the afternoon Dr. J. H. Kellogg, member of the state board of health of Michigan, presented the scientific facts relating to "Food and Digestion" in a simple and comprehensible manner taking care to impress the more practical points by reiteration so as to fix them in the minds of his hearers. These facts were made the basis for numerous practical deductions concerning erroneous dietetic practices, particularly the use of badly coooked foods, highly seasoned viands, condiments, excessive use of sugar, fats, etc., as well as too frequent meals, late suppers, ices and other common errors.

Mrs. Kellogg, the National Superintendent af the Department of Hygiene, in her address, "Hygiene vs. Intemperance," presented a general view of the relation of hygiene to our temperance work, giving special prominence to the influence of an unwholesome dietary in inducing intemperance; showing how every violation of Nature's laws becomes an obstacle to temperance in so far as it lessons natural strength, thus creating a demand for artificial strength; and how undoubtedly the great augmentation of the drink habit among women is largely due to the fact that so large a proprotion of the women of today are feeble, nervous or wholly invalid.

This condition they seek to alleviate by the use of tonics, cordials, bitters, etc., in which alcohol is an essential part, thus laying the foundation for intemperance, both for themselves and their posterity. The address called out a lively discussion of the numerous points made during which most instructive remarks were made by Drs. Stevenson, Burnett, Parker, Mrs. Dr. Danforth and others.

"The Development of the Human Body" was the topic of an address by Dr. Florence Hunt, of Chicago, who succeeded in making interesting and instructive this very abstruse subject by her happy manner of presenting it.

Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, professor in Chicago Medical College, presented at the fifth session an able and interesting paper entitled "Some of the Causes of Ill Health among Women." The speaker held that one of the chief causes of the marked increase of nervous disorders in women is the unnatural excitement characteristic of American business and social life. Young girls are broken down by the attempt to meet the demands of the cramming system of education so prevalent now-a-days and at the same time attend evening parties, theaters and entertainments involving late hours and undue excitement of the nervous system, at just the age when they ought to be developing into a strong and useful womanhood.

The concluding session of the meeting devoted to the department of hygiene was occupied by Dr. Kellogg in a consideration of the subject of "Household Hygiene." The lecture was an eminently practical one, teaching almost every department of domestic hygiene, and the numerous questions asked by the audience evinced a deep interest in the subject.

HEREDITY.

The Institute of Heredity held last week at Lake Bluff, under the auspices of our state union and the central W. C. T. U. of Cnicago, marks an important epoch in our work. This is the first meeting of the kind ever held, so far as we know, and thus becomes an historic event. Its conception and accomplishment are due to Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett. She chose the topics to be presented, and the persons to present them with the greatest care, sifting a list of three hundred physicians to secure the half dozen best fitted to present the phases of this new study in their true light.

The topics discussed were "The Study of Heredity," opening address by Dr. Burnett; "Heredity," by Dr. Julia Holmes Smith; "The Pathology and Psychology of Heredity," by Dr. T. D. Crothers, of Hartford, Conn.; "The Heredity of Alcoholism," by the same; "The Abdominal Brain," by Dr. Leila Bedell, and "Nicotine Heredity," by Dr. Anna Parker.

Dr. Burnett's address was a wonderful opening up of the subject, showing undreamed of possibilities for good in this branch of study. She defines life as God's plan for each individual, that it comes from God and returns to Him. Heredity is the sum of all the ancestral traits, plus life. It culminates in the individual at his birth.

Her first proposition, which she considered self evident is Wherever and in whatever form we find life, we find heredity.

2nd, Whatever affects life, whether in its individual or species, or cosmic relation, affects heredity. This she proved by convincing argument.

From his cosmic relations, through the revolutions of nature, her convulsions and her regularly recurring conditions, we find the cause of the faculties of fear and veneration in man.

Studied from a national standpoint, we find a certain inheritance following a certain national development. To study history is to study heredity. National biography is but the history of bequeathment from parents to children of their virtues and their vices, their wisdom and their folly, their successes and their failures. The life of nations which have attained a fair degree of civilzation, is characterized by four stages: first, the heroic, its conflict for existence, either with other nations or with nature; second, the philosophic age, when it has sufficiently conquered these forces to dwell securely; third, its age of maturity; fourth, its decline. Each stage is the inheritance of its predecessor. In America, the stern discipline, the rigid simplicity of the pioneers, bequeathed to their children the self control, the self denial, the courage and patriotism of the men and women of the Revolution.

Civil and political safety secured, the phi isophical age naturally followed. Parents tired of war, not only turn gratefully to the arts of peace, but they give to their children a peace loving inheritance, and those children turn naturally to study and peaceful ways. We are in this stage now, the resultant of the civil war. Our sons and daughters, by this heredity, will naturally choose peaceful arbitration to the arbitrament of the sword.

The hereditary effect of religious persecutions was strongly marked in European countries through many generations, while the dark ages, owed much of their darkness to the fact that for preceding generations the brightest and best minds were shut up to celibacy in monastery and cloister, so that the parents of the nation were of a low grade intellectually and morally.

Dr. Burnett's address was followed by a very interesting Bible reading by Mrs. Jennie F. Willing on "Heredity in the Bible." Mrs. Willing showed by well selected texts, first that God recognizes the law of inheritance and orders that spiritual opportunities be transmitted with temporal estates.

Second, that he anticipated the injustice of primogeniture and often set it aside, giving the younger sons the dignity and blessings which their older brothers would naturally have inherited.

Third, good traits are transmitted.

Fourth, bad traits are transmitted.

Fifth, sin may cancel the inheritance of good traits.

Sixth, grace may cancel the inheritance of bad traits.

Dr. Smith's paper on "Heredity" was in her absence, read by Dr. Chapin. It noted four kinds of heredity.

First, where the child inherited equally from each parent. Second, where he inherits more from one than from the other. Third, where father transmits to son, mother to daughter. Fourth, where father transmits to daughter, mother to son. This is much the most common kind. Often both sons and daughters inherit physical form, passions and appetites from the father, and intellectual qualities from the mother. This is so common that it is said few men or women have displayed great intellectual powers that were not prefigured in the mother. Here is a strong argument for the intellectual development of our women, and for self control over all appetites and passions by our men.

Dr. Crothers, editor of the Journal of Inebriety, and superintendent of an inebriate asylum in Hartford, is fitted both by research and experience to speak with authority on the themes he discussed. In his address upon the "Physiological and Pathological Phases of Heredity," the docter described the order of heredity, which is usually from one sex to the opposite, and often skips one or two generations to reappear again in the third or fourth. The Adams family of Massachusetts, and the Van Buren family, of Pennsylvania, were remarkable examples of intellectual heredity. The preaching faculty was transmitted from father to son in the Beechers. Every thought, he declared, was a liberation of force which was bound to reappear again. The long, jealous strife of Rome and Carthage, and the crusades were instances of heredity in the masses. He closed by pointing out the ominous danger to our country from unlimited emigration. If it was given loose rein as at present, before long every man and woman in the United States would be defective.

The second lecture was upon "Alcoholic Heredity." The action of alcohol was defined and the heredity was shown to be direct as from parents to child, drinking father drinking child, or indirect as drinking parents and consumptive and insane children. Alcoholic parents were shown to have defective children always, down to the third and fourth generation. Criminality, pauperism, idiocy, insanity, and many other defects were shown to come from this source. The heredity from this cause was illustrated by many instances, due to various causes, of which bad health, bad education, and surroundings were prominent. The mortality of the race would be diminished when the heredity of alcohol was known and guarded against. He concluded by urging his hearers to study his subject from a physical standpoint.

Dr. Bedell's paper on "The Abdominal Brain," showed careful research and was of intense interest. It distinguished sharply between the cerebro-spinal nervous system, which controls voluntary motions and intellection, and the sympathetic system which presides over all the vital organs and gives expression to the emotions. It is impossible by any extracts our space will allow, to give any idea of the scope of this paper, it must be presented entire to be appreciated.

Tobacco heredity was ably treated by Dr. Anna Parker. Although few families are free from their hereditary taint, it has been studied much less than the alcohclic. Still the array of facts gathered and presented by Dr. Parker is sufficient to startle us out of our fancied security and set us to work to devise means to avert the curse which hangs over us from this source.

This and the other papers were followed by animated discussion, and all must inspire deep thought. We wish they could be published and read by every father and mother present or prospective, in our land.

Mary Allen West.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Miss West will visit the conventions at Pittsfield, Bloomington, Ottawa, Pocahontas and Rockford during September.

—Secretaries of local unions will please pay careful attention to the circular letter just sent them from headquarters and bring them to the notice of the unions.

—Mrs. Rounds is already engaged to speak at the conventions to be held at Pittsfield and Rockford during September. Send to 161 LaSalle street for terms and dates.

—Delegates and members of the executive committee who are to attend the state convention, will please report to Mrs. E. G. Hibben, of Peoria, before the first of of October.

—Mrs. S. M. I. Henry will be ready for engagements between the 1st and 14th of September, and during the month of October. Send for dates and terms to 161 LaSalle street.

—Unions have been organized at Dudleyville, Mt. Gilead, and St. Jacobs, by Mrs. Morrison, at Hagarstown by Mrs. Slade, at St. Elmo by Mrs. Collins, at Oneida by Mrs. C. H. Smith.

—A full supply of Leaflets are kept at headquarters, sent out to our unions for 10 cents per hundred, cost of postage. Let large orders come in for conventions and public meetings. We call especial attention to the tracts written by Mrs. M. B. Willard and Miss West. These are designed to be distributed in public meetings.

—The attention of presidents and secretaries of the W. C. T. Unions of the state of Illinois is called to a prompt return and report of all the papers which have during the past year inserted a temperance column, as the annual report must be given in at the state convention soon to meet in Peoria. Address M. Anna Smith, State Superintendent Press Work, 3634 Ellis Park, Chicago, Ill.

—The superintendent of Young Woman's Work for Illinois wants a letter from each Y. W. C. T. U. in the state telling her of lines of work carried on this year, success achieved and plans growing. She wants you to respond to this call promptly so that material can be had for the coming state convention. If you and your work are not recognized it will only be because you do not make yourselves known to her. Any temperance work done through the W. C. T. U. organizations or by committees appointed by them should also be reported at once to Mrs. Fannie S. Best, 102 N. 9th street, Quincy, Ill., Supt. Young Woman's Work for Illinois.

VERMONT.

Have just returned from a trip through Orleans county. By the way, that county held an institute which deserved to be reported in your columns, but busy workers found no time.

At Derby I spoke to a full house. A large percentage were young people, and judging from their bright, earnest faces would make grand workers for the cause we love. We left them the next morning, hoping that a Band of Hope might be the outgrowth of a little chat an hour before. Arriving at Newport, on the shore of the beautiful lake Memphremagog, we found the union doing some work through the Sunday school, and quietly moulding public sentiment. Did you ever notice how the mere existence of a temperance society sometimes sets people to thinking and converts them into temperance workers?

At Westfield we heard of work done in the schools, Bible readings and lectures, and then a full house of quiet, earnest listeners, who testified their interest in the cause by the largest contribution they had raised for any purpose.

The next morning we rode six miles by stage, and were met by Mrs. King, the vice-president of the county, with the statement, "I am glad to see you, but there is no way for you to get to Albany your next appointment. You cannot reach it by returning on the stage and running down on the train, and every team is in use."

Seven miles looked like a long walk, but we remembered the feats of former days, and mentally resolved to fill the appointment or perish in the attempt.

A good house in spite of a skating rink.

Farming people must take considerable interest in the subject to come in to hear about it after a long day's work at haying.

Rev. Mr. King bestirred himself persistently to find a horse to take us over Albany mountain. Success crowned his efforts, and the afternoon found us climbing the heights from which we obtained a magnificent view, and then descending into the valley of the Black River, where we found the pleasant village of Albany. Here again, we encountered difficulties. In order to fill the next appointment we must go out on the 9:30 p.m. stage, and ride nine miles, unless some one could be found to carry us, which was not very probable in the busy season. We were happily disappointed after our hour's talk to a good audience, again in spite of the rink, to learn that the pastor would carry us over to Barton Landing in the morning. We think they have a good physician in Albany, because we heard that he endorsed our lecture very heartily, and wished the cause might receive the added weight of physicians' testimony everywhere.

At Barton Landing the people attested their interest by giving a very good attendance, after listening to two temperance lectures in as many weeks.

We returned home more than ever convinced that our Vermont people are awaking to the importance of this subject, and that a better day is dawning.

MISSOURI.

OPENING THE PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN IN MISSOURI.

The convention of the Missouri Prohibition Alliance was held in Sedalia, August 19, and was characterized by the utmost wisdom in counsel, perfect unanimity in the choice of candidates, and in planning the campaign. Rev. John A. Brooks, the candidate for governor, commands the confidence and esteem of his own denomination (the Christian), and of all Prohibitionists in the state. Henry Eshbaugh, candidate for lieutenant governor is the leader of the Greenback party, master of the state grange and a known Prohibitionist.

Charles P. Johnson and Martin V. B. Bennett gave each a grand speech on the night of the 21st, to an immense audience at Smith's Hall.

The W. C. T. U. of Sedalia engaged the opera house for Mrs. Hoffman, on the night of the 20th. A large audience gathered. Mrs. John G. Allen, president of the union, presided. Mrs. Hardcastle took charge of the music. Mrs. Hoffman delivered an address, which for information, beauty and power excelled any of her previous efforts. God grant that all our speakers may be able to set the question before the people as fairly as our beloved state president. Yours, Mary M. Clardy.

COLORADO.

CONVENTION ANNOUNCEMENT.

The sixth annual convention of the Colorado W. C. T. U. will be held in Pueblo, September 17, 18 and 19. Although we cannot count our new unions by the hundred, as can some of our older states, yet if we count by the rule of proportion we can show as great a ratio of increase as any. Last year we numbered fourteen unions; this year we have twenty-two. When we consider the vastness of our territory, and the long distances to be travelled between towns, this is doing well. A distance of eight-hundred and fifty miles was travelled to organize two unions. We labor under various disadvantages in being so far distant from the heart of our great organization, for although the pulsations are regular, they are sometimes feeble. I think the middle western states should arrange our conventions in a circuit so we could have some of our best speakers that could attend the whole of them in turn. Say that the district should be composed of Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Arizona. Let a week be given to each state with time to rest a little between, and in this way the expense could be divided and no one society feel it seriously. We are making progress all along the lines and are adding superintendents of departments as fast as our work develops.

I heard of one of our women who performed a good work physically as well as morally. Last year there was a great "mining boom" gotten up without any foundation. (They do say it was started by saloon-keepers to help business.) This lady owned a ranche at the forks of the creek, where two roads came together, and which every one going to the camp must pass. A man (?) informed her one day that he should "squat" on the only available place and erect a shanty for a saloon the following day. On being informed that she had entered the land his reply was, "Well, you have not yet received your patent from the United States, and it will take you a month at least to get me off by legal proceedings, and by that time I shall have 'made my pile' and be ready to leave." You have no idea of a "mining boom" if you have never seen one. Hundreds and thousands in every kind of a vehicle, on horseback and on foot crowd to the objective point. This old lady, sixty-three years old and stiff with rheumatism, took her grandson, twelve years old, went to work after night, got logs, dug holes for the uprights and put up enough of a house to hold the ground against the whisky man, who was thus baffled. "Where there's a will, there's a way."

DELAWARE.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTITUTE IN LITTLE DELAWARE.

I have been busy sending a bit of good news to some of our own state workers, but before I lay my pen aside I want to tell you too, so that others may rejoice with us.

The following quotation from a letter received from the secretary of our state board of education will explain: "In reply to yours, I beg to state that the state board at its last meeting adopted for exclusive use in the schools of this state, J. Dorman Steele's Hygienic Physiology, published by A. T. Barnes & Co., of New York." It is not a constitutional amendment, but is just about as strong and as much as our small state can carry. We are particularly glad of that word "exclusive," because that provides that wherever physiology is taught in the schools under state control, our book shall be used. And we are still more particularly glad because this is largely the result of work done in a quiet way by our W. C. T. U. Our State Teacher's Association will hold its annual meeting by the seaside, the 25th, 26th and 27th of this month, and we are arranging to introduce some scientific temperance instruction doctrine, as a place on the program is already offered.

Our hearts are full of thankfulness for this victory, which we accept as from our Captain.

Margaret S. Hilles,
State Supt. Sci. Inst.

ALABAMA.

Alabama is growing fast in the cause of temperance. We now have twenty unions in good order and still the work goes on, with no prospect of a retreat or surrender, but the banner widely unfurled, we are marching onward, firm and resolute on prohibition. We are pleased with the nomination of Gov. St. John, for our president and it has excited much interest. The Democrats say it will weaken their party and elect the Republican, while the Republicans say its will ruin our party. Let it ruin all parties who regard not the people's highest interest and welfare. Temperance is making headway in our country in politics as well as everything else. In our recent county election, we achieved one grand and glorious victory, in the election of a temperance men for sheriff of our county, and he has chosen a deputy of the same material, we have two officers of the temperance army at least, and with another year no other aspirants will presume. Mrs. L. C. Woodliff, Pres.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A card from Capt. J. F. Linscott states that he has been spending two weeks at the sea shore, and is now fully recovered from an attack of malaria.

The Bethany (Mo.) Reform Club numbers over fifty, the W. C. T. U. about sixty, and the Band of Hope over one hundred and sixty, while a nice, well furnished room, with reading room, and good library, nicely kept, greatly aid the work of the W. C. T. U.

A Fourth of July free lunch, consisting of coffee, sandwiches, cake, lemonade etc., was furnished all day and evening by the W. C. T. U. of Westfield, N. J. Over seven hundred visited the rooms, ninety signed the pledge, and the receipts from voluntary contributions amounted to forty dollars.

The Band of Hope of Collinsville, Ill., has from its organization last April, evinced a genius for earnest, practical work that is decidedly inspiring. Prizes for the best compositions on temperance were offered, and in response eleven were received, all so good, considering age, etc., that prizes were awarded for all.

Of a tour among the new unions of Georgia, for the purpose of giving instruction in the lines of state work, Miss Missouri Stokes gives a most encouraging report. Everywhere she found earnest, intelligent women willing to work, and Christian men ready to aid them. At Chipley, a colored union, of both men and women was organized with 32 members. Miss Stokes is now arranging for a similar tour in the north eastern part of the state.

The third national Prohibition camp meeting will be held at Jacksonville, Ill., September 5 to 14. Arrangements are being made that will ensure its being the best yet held. By invitation the 13th district W. C. T. U. will hold its annual convention in connection with this camp meeting, occupying two days, Sept. 10 and 11, thus availing themselves of the services of Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Clara Hoffman and other eminent workers who are to be present at the camp meeting.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

Eleventh Annual Meeting at St. Louis, October 22, 23, 24 and 25, 1884.

To all Members of the White Ribbon Army,—Beloved Sisters,—The results of this year's work, locally as well as in the state and nation, have far transcended those of any other. Patient and intelligent effort of the rank and file; persistent work of county, district and state presidents and national organizers to extend our organization; tireless work and far reaching journeys of superintendents; the greatly widened circle of influence permeated by The Union Signal and state papers meeting local necessities, and finally the immense impetus given to crystallizing temperance sentiment into powerful organization by the nomination of St. John and Daniel, all mark this year as an epoch greater than any predecessor.

Six great national conventions have been approached by our representatives. The International Sunday School Convention at Louisville, with 1,800 delegates and the National Educational Convention at Madison with six thousand teachers in attendance have both responded heartily to our requests. The "Memorial of the American Home for Protection from the American Saloon," asking for a plank in platform committing the party to national constitutional prohibition and for candidates committed by character and public pledge to the submission of such amendment, was disregarded by all the presidential nominating conventions save that of the Prohibition party which, endorsing our memorial, nominated the well known temperance champions ex-Gov. St. John, of Kansas, and Hon. William Daniel, of Maryland. We stand today upon the heights of answered prayers that ascended in May last from north and south alike, through all our borders.

With grateful hearts to God for all the hopes by which our way is brightened, we call upon you to send your delegates to the eleventh annual convention on the following basis (see Article III. of our Constitution):

"The annual meeting shall be composed of the executive committee, the state corresponding and recording secretaries and treasurers, the superintendents of departments, the editor and publisher of our official organ, one delegate at large from each auxiliary state and one delegate for every five hundred paying members of state unions. Territories and the District of Columbia will be represented on the same basis."

We are invited by the state W. C. T. U. of Missouri and the local union of St. Louis to be their guests and our convention will be held October 22-25. The executive committee will meet October 20 at 10 a. m., place to be announced later. Meetings will be held in the churches of St. Louis on the Sabbaths preceding and following the convention.

Each morning from eight to ten all business will be put aside and a prayer and consecration meeting held under the care of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith.

The corresponding secretary of each state will send the names of delegates and alternates to Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, 16 East 14th street, New York, who will supply all states with blank credentials for the delegates.

Beloved sisters, we are moved in heart to appoint at this time Tuesday, the 7th of October as a day of prayer for the convention that it may be the most earnest and effective temperance meeting ever held on this continent; that the crusade fire may burn in all our hearts; that a Pentecostal baptism may rest upon the land we love, and that men committed to the cause of prohibition may become the governmental leaders throughout our nation. Frances E. Willard, President.

Signal Notes.

If the public drinking places of England were placed side by side, in a straight line, they would extend a distance of 700 miles.

On one recent Friday six murderers were hanged in the United States. Five of them declared that drink had led into crime.

I protest against having laws made for me by male voters, "assisted" from the almshouses and prisons of foreign countries to our shores.—Helen M. Gougar.

In the county of Halifax, Nova Scotia, under the license law, a special enquiry has brought out the fact that there are five hundred unlicensed grogshops. And these do not include those in the city itself.

Mary E. Balch pityingly exclaims of a certain man: "When a man has principles and can't stand up to them, he is worse off than the man who has no principles to stand up to."

Halifax, N. S., is under a license system, a high license system. But the Globe's special commissioner remarks: "One feature of the liquor business which struck me particularly in this city is the wholesale Sunday trade."

In more than half of the towns of Vermont the United States revenue collector could find, in the year ending April 12, 1883, no one selling liquor. There are 240 towns in Vermont, and in 127 of these no drug store, hotel or dram shop was found hat could be required to take a United States license.

In Massachusetts, which has what is called a "rigid license law," 8,476 persons held United States licenses to sell liquor last year, being one to every 202 of the population. In Connecticut, 3,357 persons purchased United States licenses, being one to every 187 of the population. In Vermont the number taking out United States licenses was 529, and the proportion was one to 700. In other words more than three times as many persons were selling liquor in Massachusetts, and four times as many in Connecticut, in proportion to population, as in Vermont.

The Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald says: "Mark our words. The Prohibition vote means more this year than it ever meant before. It has a larger number of mothers and wives and sisters behind it, and its magnitude will astonish some of the people who have tried to throw contempt upon it."

Acquaint your friends in this way with the work of the W. C. T. U., and get them interested.

Local unions in many places have done good temperance work, "circulated literature" in the most effective way, by taking The Union Signal for the pastors, physicians, editors, teachers, leading politicians, members of town and school board and most prominent objectors to their work. This is worth thinking about, ladies. Your money tells in this way at both ends of the line, financially for your own paper, and educated public sentiment in your own town.

Miscellaneous Selections.

READ AND PONDER.

The following was prepared by Rev. L. L. Wood, with special reference to a former election in Massachusetts, but applies with force to us now:

WHY THROW AWAY YOUR VOTE?

Question—"Is not the 'tariff question' of the Republican party of great importance?"

Answer—Undoubtedly it is. But if the total custom house revenue of $130,000,000 for the whole country is a matter of great importance, the annual expenditure of $760,000,000 by the consumers of intoxicating beverages in this country is a matter of vastly greater importance, saying nothing of the physical and moral ruin which it produces.

Question—"But, really, ought not the question of temperance to be excluded from politics and confined to persuasive efforts?"

Answer—The beer-brewer's conference think so, and they pledge the influence of their $300,000,000 of working capital for the defeat at the polls, if possible, of every candidate for office who thinks differently. To this end, also, they support an agent at Washington to secure national legislation in their favor.

Politicians and rumsellers think so, and they will even contribute to your pecuniary support as a temperance reformer so long as you strictly confine your efforts to moral suasion, having learned by fifty years' experience that no harm comes to their interests through such efforts.

The best reply we can make to those who counsel us to keep on using blank cartridges and wooden guns in the temperance army, is to point to the history of half a century's conflict with the drink-demon of this country along the line of moral suasion, during which time the evils of intemperance have, year by year, increased in magnitude and grown more appalling in character.

The internal revenue on distilled spirits during the last fiscal year, show an increase of $8 615,240.10 over the previous year, and on fermented liquors an increase of $2,100,486.12—a poor showing for moral suasionists and for the beer brewers' argument that the use of beer decreases the consumption of distilled liquors.

We ought as soon to think of curing a volcano with pills, as of checking the liquor traffic and purifying the politics of this country by neglecting the proper use of the ballot box, for which God has made us responsible.

Heaven speed the hour when, out of the chaos of the old and effete parties, there shall come forth a party embodying enough of the principles of temperance and godliness to hold the balance of power in this land and to save us from the horrors of alcohol.

Prohibition is gaining ground all over Arkansas. Keep the ball moving, my dear brethren. Let there be no faltering in the ranks. Let us vote our full strength in September next. The indications are that we shall have the wisest, safest and best legislature that we have had since the war. Our good people are determined to be represented by reliable and sober men, and not by tricksters and political gamblers.—Southern Ex.

Some years ago Geo. W. Curtis, the learned and able Republican editor of Harper's Weekly, wrote the following grand sentence:

"Although it is true that in politics we have often presented to us a disagreeable alternative, and that it is the part of good sense to sacrifice preference and tastes, it is also true that when the alternative is not one of personal taste and preference, but involving great principles and the public welfare, honest men will decline to be shut up to the alternative. When the alternative is between two evils, good citizens will choose neither. They may not be able to prevent evil, but they will not connive at it." Why does he not practice it now?

It strengthens and invigorates sufferers from enervation, languor, weakness, and mental depression.

It has an almost magical effect in curing eruptive and cutaneous disorders.

It eradicates from the blood the taint of that terribly destructive disease, Hereditary Scrofula.

It expels from the system the baneful poison of Mercury, which is as serious as that of Scrofula.

It purifies and regenerates the life current polluted by the corruption of contagious disease.

It stimulates the secretory organs, effects the removal of all impurities from the blood and makes it new, rich, and pure.

It restores health to sufferers from thin blood and impaired vitality.

It saves, by its thorough purification of the blood, from Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and Tubercular Consumption.

It cures Scrofulous affections of the Liver and Kidneys, and their symptoms, Jaundice and Dropsy.

It cures Scrofulous Catarrh, Itching Humors, and the purulent Sores caused by Scrofula.

It clears and improves the complexion.

It neutralizes the poisons left in the system by Diphtheria and Scarlet Fever, and restores the debilitated patient to perfect health and vigor.

It is, in short, an unfailing remedy for all disorders arising from impurity of the blood, where such disorders have not become so deeply seated as to be beyond all human aid.

Advantages that AYER'S SARSAPARILLA Possesses over all Others.

It is composed of the most efficacious alterative, diuretic, and tonic drugs known in pharmacy, among which are the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Stillingia, and the Iodides of Potassium and Iron.

It is a highly concentrated medicine, scientifically and honestly compounded so as to secure to it the highest degree of activity and perfect uniformity.

It has received the hearty endorsement of the leading men in the medical profession, who recognize it as a standard pharmaceutical preparation, and prescribe it in their practice.

It contains no po[illegible]als or other dangerous drugs, [illegible]ish for temporary effect in the[illegible] and cheap mixtures sold as an[illegible] produces effects on the system often w[illegible] than the diseases they are offered to cure.

It costs no more than any other, but would still be the cheapest blood-purifying medicine in the world, even were its price three times greater, since it is the only one that does "real, lasting good."

It has been before the public for nearly forty years, and has constantly grown in popular favor, both at home and abroad, until there is hardly a place in the civilized world where it has not a host of friends, made so by its marvellous cures.

It has been used in, and approved by, at least 4,000,000 families in the United States, and 7,000,000 throughout the world. Women have especial reasons for commending it.

It has proven its potency in curing obstinate, deeply-seated, and long-standing diseases caused by vitiation of the blood. It must not, however, be expected and is not claimed that a single bottle will cure such cases; but patients should persevere in the use of this remedy [illegible] radical cure is effected.

[illegible] the only blood-purifier that has won [illegible]tained the confidence of the people of all tropical countries, where such medicines are much required.

It is the only medicine of its class that sailors, as a rule, have any faith in — and they are right.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 34. CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 4, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

When is a vote thrown away? When a man throws his principles one way and his ballot another.

The political campaign is rapidly verging toward a ten commandment basis. The close scrutiny of personal morals reaches even the candidate who smokes, especially if he be a Prohibitionist. It is a wholesome symptom.

A line from the Germania of Tacitus gives this as the policy of our Saxon forefathers: "In all grave matters we consult our women."

The new Germania reads: "In the grave affairs of state, women are the last to be consulted."

The American party—anti secresy reform—announces the near withdrawal of Senator Pomeroy, its presidential candidate, in favor of St. John. This party holds to its own platform but places the prohibition nominees thereon. This will count another 50,000 votes for the Prohibition ticket.

David Preston, the Christian banker of Detroit and Chicago, is the Prohibition nominee for governor of Michigan. He says that the party which recognizes God and its dependence upon Him, is the party for his vote or whatever else he may be able to do for it. He will make a strong showing in November.

An English saloonist advertises by name not less than fifty-three varieties of American drinks. They are novelties of concoction among the staightforward Britons who use ale, porter, brandy, gin and whisky without any disguise, and are looked upon with terror by even the tippling population because of their seductive attraction for young boys.

The cholera scare and the attendant admonitions to temperance are having effect in Paris. A diminution of fifty per cent. in the arrests for drunkenness on a recent national holiday is given in proof; also the fact that on the 12th of July the arrests were reduced to a smaller number than has been known since the police regulations concerning drunkenness have been in force.

There is not much suavity, and no halting and hesitating, about duty. Brusque and blunt and determined, no obstacle can stand in its way when once the right is made known. With bent head and folded wing standing in the presence of the Eternal, the first prayer is: "Make Thy way straight before my face." When that prayer is answered, the voice of the siren expediency, charms she never so wisely, is never heeded. With a countenance like the sphynx, "Staring right on with calm eternal eyes," it speeds to the goal.

The liquor men are not slow to see and use all national means for building up their business. It is said that at this very time, they are laying plans to secure an act of congress to be capped by a supreme court decision, which will sweep away all state and local constitutional and statutory prohibition against the liquor traffic, and will give to the liquor crime the full license of the national constitution.

The editor finds it necessary in view of the increased demands upon her time and effort, to give up the long expected pleasure of meeting with the unions of the eastern states in their annual conventions this fall. "Nevertheless and notwithstanding" it is confidently believed that the interests of The Union Signal will be given a large place in the hearts of the workers in convention assembled and that a harvest of subscriptions may be our token thereof.

A New York saloon keeper has, by the ambrotype process, fastened portraits of three presidential candidates upon his beer glasses, thus enabling each customer to choose a Blaine glass, a Cleveland or a Butler, as may suit him. A patron noticed that there were no St. John glasses. Said he very hotly, "No, and I won't have any either, we have no use for water here." Apply Joseph Cook's maxim here: "Show me what the saloon keepers do not want and I will show you what I want."

The Illinois W. C. T. U. at its last annual meeting promised its utmost endeavor to elect a legislature that should grant the two petitions of the W. C. T. U., viz: Scientific temperance instruction, and the submission of a constitutional amendment extending the elective franchise to women. To this end, viz., the election of a legislature, the candidates of all parties are being interviewed by the W. C. T. U. as fast as nominated. A full list will be published in about five weeks, showing the attitude of every candidate, so that the voters may choose from among them.

Francis Murphy ought to sit at the feet of his great prototype long enough to read what he, Father Mathew, says of legal suasion: "I have been laboring as a solitary man, but I know this, that no individual alone can contend against this giant evil; nothing less than an organization which spreads over the country, and has perpetuity in itself, is sufficient to contend ultimately, and I trust, to control and conquer this gigantic evil."

Dr. Palmer, of Michigan University, says of the new temperance physiology in preparation by Mrs. Hunt: "It is free from the errors in many of the works on this subject designed for school use, and covers more of the matter that should be incorporated in such a text book than any I have seen. In my judgment it is the best book I know of, of its class. If all the facts contained in this little work are firmly lodged in the minds of the pupils in our public schools throughout the country an immense work for good will be accomplished."

Mr. Wm. Daniel, the vice-presidential nominee of the Prohibition party, in his speech of acceptance, made this happy allusion to the attitude of the party toward a solid country, knowing no north, no south: "The disposition of the great north and west to make this movement national and obliterate the bitter memories of the past, is the more manifest from the fact, that neither of the two great parties, Republican or Democratic, has ventured to take a candidate for a national position from the south, since the war, whilst the Prohibition party has adopted the opposite policy."

The women of Arkansas have a ready resource against the mischief of the saloon. It is comforting, even to those of us who have not the comfort of this ability to help ourselves, to read in the recently issued circular letter of the state president, of such quick success for home protection as the following incident records:

A lady living in a small settlement, said to me: 'Mr. —— is building a saloon in our neighborhood; what is to become of our boys?'

"For answer, I furnished her with a blank petition, which she used as directed. The result was the prohibition of the sale of liquor within three miles of the school house where that lady lived; and she cried for joy when she heard the news."

It may not be known to every reader of these simple lines, that the petition referred to, if filled with the names of a majority of the adult inhabitants of the district (men and women), would be the effective instrument in securing this immediate prohibition. Almost any woman would become a "temperance tramp" if the tramping might bring about such blessed and such speedy results.

TWO GOODBYES

META E. B. THORNE.

Darling, I did not mean them,
Those cruel words I said
When in the morn I left thee:—
And now to find thee dead
Ere yet the sun hath vanished
From out the glowing sky!
Ere day hath wholly faded
That thou, my love, shouldst die!

It cannot be, my darling,
I will not have it so!
This morn those eyes were shining
With life's exultant glow,
And now the lid's dark fringes
Upon thy pale cheeks rest.
They rise not at my whisper,—
Nor stirs thy pulseless breast.

Just once, my darling, waken,
Once more unvail thine eyes,
O listen to my pleading,
And heed my piteous cries.
Darling, I love thee, love thee,—
Dost hear? Methought a breath
From those mute lips did fan me,—
Nay—nay—alas, 'tis death!

My love, such bitter anguish
As wrings this aching heart,
That I should speak in anger,
In anger, too, depart.
Love, love, I did not mean it,—
And ne'er shall I forget
Your last words meekly murmured,
"Dearest, you will regret."

"Goodbye, sweetheart," she gaily said,
With a smile on her curving lips,
And lightly wafted a kiss to me
From her rosy finger tips.
As thus she paused at my garden gate
With many a sweet "Goodbye,"
The scene was pictured on my mind:—
A tender morning sky
Bending above the hedgerows white
Where nestled in between Sweet primroses and violets,—
Beyond—the hillslopes green.

These but the pleasant setting seem
For Maud,—a picture fair,
With lustrous eyes and opal cheeks
And wind-swept, bright brown hair.
"Tomorrow, love, I'll come again!
Goodbye, sweetheart, goodbye!"
She turned away. I seemed to miss
A glory from the sky,
As down the lane her misty robe
Floated and fled away:
"Tomorrow," sung my eager heart,
And soon again, "Today."

But ah "Tomorrow" cometh not:
It ne'er will come to me:
Ere that again the sunlight dawned
Across the summer sea,
The angels came, a radiant band,
And bore my love away,
With all the sweetness of my life,
The glory of the May.

Yet often when the summer wind
Goes softly thro' the corn,
When hyacinths and violets
Perfume the blithe May morn,
Beside my modest garden gate
Among the shy, young flowers,
Lending a bright, celestial glow
To those entrancing hours,
I seem to see her form again,—
To hear her voice repeat,—
"Tomorrow, then! Sweetheart, goodbye!
Tomorrow we shall meet!"

THE PASSOVER WINE.

REV. T. H. TABOR.

Among the important works that are now occupying the attention of the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is an effort to complete the work of cleansing the Christian church from the fumes of alcohol, by banishing alcoholic wine from the communion table. The agitation of this question began many years ago, has received the attention and support of many of the ablest ministers and laymen that this country has ever produced and ought to have been crowned with success long ago.

But the undeniable fact is that alcohol has had its zealous friends in the church and pulpit, as well as in the world. Men who contended that though it is wrong to use alcohol as worldly drink it was highly improper to use anything else in commemorating the death of our Lord and Savior. Their position has been, and is, that Jesus Christ made and drank fermented wine, therefore nothing else should be used in memory of him. And all temperance legislation has had to have a saving clause, permitting the sale of alcoholic liquors for sacramental purposes, to pacify members of the church and ministers of the gospel.

But a woman, who is the superintendent of the W. C. T. U. in the city of Portland, Me., assaulted this relic of barbarism last spring by addressing some questions to Rev. J. P. Warren, D. D., the editor of the Christian Mirror of that city, on the subject of Passover wine. She showed that she comprehended clearly the question to be met, and she strikes the knot square and hard by asking Dr. Warren, "Would not the law prohibiting all leaven at the Passover feast, apply to the wine as well as the bread?"

To this question, Dr. Warren replies, "I think not. The terms of the command are specific, Exodus, 12: 15-20, unleavened bread. Here is no hint or suggestion of anything else. Even when the word stands alone, the context shows in every instance that some preparation of flour is intended. It never means wine. Besides, the radical ideas attached to the two substances in the Hebrew mind were diametrically opposite. Leaven was forbidden because it was the symbol of corruption and death; wine, especially when sparkling with fermentation, was instinct with life."

This answer is simply astounding. Had Dr. Warren no knowledge of the scholarship in this country that is revered and trusted, that has expressed a different opinion? Or did he think himself able to wipe out their expressed opinions, with his "I think not"?

Professor Moses Stuart was no slouch in criticism. It is highly probable, I think, that his opinions will be quoted as authority in this field of investigation for a good many years to come. And he says, "Not only leavened bread, but other things which have undergone fermentation were excluded from the Passover meal. Perhaps this usage, which was carried so far by the Jews, arose mainly from a strict regard to the supposed real meaning of the command in Exodus, chapter 12, which is not expressed by declaring that the Hebrews should not eat fermented bread, but by declaring that they should not eat anything fermented. Now the word (that has been translated) eating, is in cases without number employed to include a partaking of all refreshments at a meal, drinks as well as foods."

Again he remarks in the Bibliotheca Sacrae (vol. 1) "I cannot doubt that 'ferment' in its widest sense, was excluded from the Jewish Passover when the Lord's supper was first instituted; for I am not able to find evidence to make me doubt that the custom among the Jews of excluding fermented wine as well as fermented bread, is older than the Christian era.....That this custom is very ancient, that it is even now almost universal; and that it has been so for time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, I take to be facts that cannot be fairly controverted."

In another connection Prof. Stuart says, "The great mass of the Jews have ever understood this prohibition as extending to fermented wine as well as bread."

Gesenius, the eminent Hebraist, says that leaven applied to the wine as really as to the bread.

Dr. Cunningham, the learned Hebraist, says, "What is now chiefly used by the Jews at the Passover for wine, is a drink made of an infusion of raisins in water, which is either boiled at once or simmered for several days. It is free from alcohol and acidity. It is quite sweet. I have tasted it at the pascal table. No Jew with whom I have conversed, of whatever class or nationality, ever used any other kind."

The Rev. A. P. Peabody, D. D., in his essay on the Lord's Supper, says, "The writer has satisfied himself, by careful research, that in our Savior's time, the Jews, at least the high ritualists among them, extended the prohibition of leaven to the principle of fermentation in every form; and it was customary, at the Passover festival, for the master of the household to press the contents of 'the cup' from clusters of grapes preserved for this especial purpose."

The answers given by these writers to the question under consideration, are directly the reverse of that given by Dr. Warren. They give no intimation of any knowledge of the opinion among the Hebrews, that "wine sparkling with fermentation was instinct with life." But how did the practice of the Jews agree with the opinions expressed by these witnesses? They were in perfect agreement as the following facts show:

The agitation of this question began as early as 1835, perhaps a little earlier, and the church is more indebted to Edward C. Delavan for the agitation of this important subject than to any man living or dead. In a letter published in the New York Observer over date August 24, 1840, Mr. Delavan says, "Previous to leaving the United States, I ascertained from M. M. Noah, Esq., of New York, that it was universally the custom of the Jews of New York, to make the wine used at the Passover from dried grapes, so as to have it free from the intoxicating principal of alcohol. I was diligent in my inquiries with regard to the custom in this particular in Europe, and I found that it was the same, and in answer to my inquiry, Why is this? the reply was, that they did not feel at liberty to use anything containing leaven on that occasion."

Returning to this country, Mr. Delavan submitted the question of the kind of wine used by Jesus Christ in establishing the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, to the Rev. Dr. Levings, a learned Jewish Rabbi, of Albany, N. Y., 1841. Dr. Levings said in reply: "To suppose that He used fermented and consequently intoxicating wine on that memorable occasion,—an occasion on which the Jews were strictly forbidden the use of any fermentation whatever, is too absurd to be entertained for a moment."

The question of general usage was referred to the Rev. Isaac Leeser, a learned Rabbi of Philadelphia, in 1841, and he replied:

"We uniformly exclude Gentile wines from the ceremonies, and never, so far as my knowledge goes, use spirituously fermented liquors on the Passover night."

Dr. Guthrie published an article in his Sunday Magazine for September, 1870, from a learned English clergyman on Passover observances. This writer refers to the large Jewish population in Poland, who cling with rare fidelity to the traditions of their fathers, as affording a reliable illustration of the Passover observances of the Jews. He says: "If a Jew happens to carry on a trade in fermented articles, he must let his premises and transfer his stock to a Christian before the commencement of the Passover feast. A wine or spirit merchant will come under the head of those who deal in leaven. But before he can keep the feast he must put away all leaven from his house."

He also tells us what kind of wine these Polish Jews use at the Passover. He says: "A pound of Malaga raisins are bought at the nearest grocer's. These are chopped up fine and steeped in boiling water. The mixture is allowed to cool, and the liquid is strained off. This is their Passover wine."

Nor is this all. The Polish Jew feels himself under obligation to search every nook and corner of his house with a lighted candle the evening before, for crumbs of leavened bread and things leavened. Nay more, he must search the synagogue itself, (lest some boy should have brought some crumbs of bread with him in his hand or pocket), and after having done all this, he must say: "All kinds of leavened things which are in my house, which I have seen, or which I have not seen, which are within the boundaries of my house, or which are without the boundaries of my house, which belong to me, or which do not belong to me, which I have given up, or which I have not given up, I hereby declare to belong to any one else but myself, and that they are to me like the dust of the ground."

Now if Dr. Warren's "I think not," is the true answer, in relation to the law governing Passover wines how does it happen that the Polish Jews are so strict in their observances? Where did they get their customs? Opinions in regard to such matters may possibly be at fault, but prevailing usages and customs must have had a cause. And these usages and customs abundantly confirm the testimony already given, and prove that the law in relation to the Passover, referred to wine as well as bread.

In view of this extended notice of the customs of the Jews it may be well to refer to the fact that the woman who asked Dr. Warren the question in relation to the law governing the use of leaven, also asked him the following question:

"Do the Jews of the present day, in the observance of this feast, use unfermented wine only with unfermented bread?"

Dr. Warren answered, "It is possible that the usage is not absolutely uniform, not however because of any difference of opinion on this point, but for the same reason that has introduced diversity of usage in our Christian churches. In this country, especially since the temperance reform arose, there are synagogues which use unfermented preparations from grapes or raisins. The late Judge M. M. Noah, of New York, favored the change, and published a recipe for making raisin wine."

This answer is not simply untrue in view of the facts presented, it is more than that. Edward C. Delavan asked Judge Noah to explain to him the way that the Jews made their wine for the Passover, and he published Judge Noah's answer in the first number of his Enquirer, issued in 1841, on page 32. Judge Noah's reply is as follows:

"I have your favor requesting to know how wine is prepared for the Passover. If you wish to make a small quantity for the communion table (for the wine will soon grow sour, having no alcoholic body) take a gallon demijohn or stone jug; pick three or four pounds of bloom raisins; break off the stems; put the raisins into the demijohn and fill it with water; tie a rag over the mouth and place the demijohn near the fire or on one side of the fire place to keep it warm. In about a week it will be fit for use, making a pure, pleasant and sweet wine, free from alcohol. It may last from Sunday to Sunday without getting sour or tart, but it is easy to make a small quantity for each time it is to be used. This is the wine we use on the night of the Passover, because it is free from ferment, as we are strictly prohibited not only from eating leavened bread, but from drinking fermented liquor."

Now to say that "Judge Noah favored the change" (from fermented to unfermented wine at the Jewish Passover) in the face of these plain, positive words from his own pen, I call a misrepresentation that any minister of the gospel ought to be ashamed to make. Besides Judge Noah's testimony shows that what Dr. Warren calls facts are simply fancies, and without the least foundation in truth. And Judge Noah's testimony is confirmed by the testimony of Dr. Levings and Dr. Leeser and the customs of the Jews themselves, who are strict in following the example of their fathers, in widely separated districts.

THE WISE PHYSICIAN'S ATTITUDE TOWARD ALCOHOL.

DR. A. H. H. M'MURTRY.

In drinking alcohol men drink a poison, and the pleasure is at the expense of injured tissue and altered function, which would be permanent but for the body's power of repair. Alcohol retards digestion, paralyses the nerves controlling circulation, diminishes the importation of oxygen into the body and the exportation of carbonic acid from it, lowers the temperature, causes congestion of important organs, fatigues the heart, injures the nerve cells, confuses the intellect, stimulates the baser passions, disturbs muscular movement, wastes vital force, does not nourish, lessens the body's resistance to cold, produces many chronic diseases, and even affects a man's offspring. What should be the wise physician's attitude toward an agent so destructive? He should not drink it himself, for it will act as injuriously on him as on other men. His responsibility to his patients requires him to keep his mental vision undimmed, his judgment true, his caution watchful, his sympathy warm, and his hand steady, which he cannot fully do if he drinks. He should set an example worthy of his calling, and be careful not to lead others into the perilous path of the drinker. He should consider the habits and weaknesses of his patients before prescribing alcohol, which he should do as seldom as possible. The results of treatment in the London temperance hospital, and elsewhere, proves that disease can be successfully treated without alcohol, a fact which the prescribers of it were bound to explain. It is not fair to attribute a patient's death to the withholding of alcohol, and not blame it when it has been given. During the last fifteen years I have seldom ordered it, or seen good results from its use. If used at all, it should be used with the same care and in the same way as other powerful remedies, and not left to the discretion of untrained persons. What attitude does duty to his country prompt the wise physician to assume toward alcohol? He finds it sapping the vigor of the nation, filling hospitals with the diseased, asylums with the insane, and causing over 120,000 premature deaths annually in the United Kingdom. He finds parliament so indifferent to this destruction of life as to license 18,000 places for the sale of that which causes it. The British Medical Association could not render a greater service to humanity than to teach our legislators the madness and criminality of flooding the country with the greatest known destroyer of the health of the community. The medical journals cannot use their pages better than for telling our rulers that to poison a nation's water or bread is not greater insanity than to tempt the nation with a poisonous drink, and that alcoholic liquors are killing the people as surely and with as much blood-guiltiness on the part of those responsible, as if, instead of containing alcohol, they were impregnated with arsenic or the deadly germs of cholera. The medical profession should not remain silent or inactive in the presence of this tremendous curse.

WHY A FOREIGNER CANNOT DECIDE THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

MRS. L. PFEIFFER.

The foreigner says: "How can temperance people say that intoxicating liquors hurt our systems? Father has drank for forty years without doing any harm to him." There is a difference between the liquors of America and the liquors of the old country; and there is a difference between an American drinker and a German. While a German drinks one glass of beer, the American swallows ten; and if it takes fifty years to weaken a German drinker, an American drinker is a wreck in five years. The liquors which fine educated people use is most always two, five, ten, twenty or thirty years old and the beer a year; these liquors have only about the fifth part of alcohol of the liquors here. Now if the American liquors harden a brain in ten years, old country liquors will do it only in fifty. Still alcohol is a poison everywhere. I came from the old country, and I would tell a lie, if I should say that the use of intoxicating liquors did not harm my father. Common sense ought to be enough, to make us stand for total abstinence.

We may say that our share in upholding national customs is only the share of one man's influence. But we must measure our responsibility at the other end—by results, not by the magnitude or insignificance of our personal influence. The whole result has been evolved through the consent, or the silence, or the direct support of such as ourselves; and that whole result is what we have to answer for and weep over.

TWO DAYS AT CHAUTAUQUA.

DECADE BIRTH DAY ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—This has been "Decade Anniversary year," from the smallest village union to the grand old "national," the "mother of us all," whose birthday honors occurred August 15 and 16, at beautiful Chautauqua, her native home. For, at the first Sunday school assembly here convened, and on the 15th of August, 1874, the meeting was held which sent out the famous "call" for a "national convention" of women to form a permanent gospel temperance organization to preserve the fruits of the crusade. This thought, given to her while she knelt in prayer, was first promulgated by Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, now president of Cincinnati College for women. It was a spark to tinder, for earnest hearts were gathered here from all the crusade states. A circular was prepared by Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller, and sent broadcast over the land, calling the clans to rally at Cleveland, chief city of the crusade, in the following November. The name of Mrs. Jennie F. Willing, of Chicago, was affixed to this circular as chairman of the preliminary meeting, and of Mrs. Miller as secretary, also those of nine other ladies, who with these officers constituted a committee on organization viz.,

Mrs. Dr. Ganse, of Philadelphia; Mrs. E. G Knowles, Newark, N. J.; Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, Ohio; Mrs. Dr. Steele, Wisconsin; Mrs. W. D. Barnett, Kansas; Miss Auretta Hoyt, Indiana; Mrs. Ingham Stanton, New York; Mrs. Frances Crook, Baltimore; Miss Emma Janes, California. "What hath God wrought" since these elect ladies from that new lakeside Sunday school assembly cast the pebble of their organizing thought into the ocean of American humanity? Chautauqua has now a world wide fame, and the W. C. T. U. is a household name wherever Christian hearts aspire toward God. In both of these great enterprises Christ has been from the first the central figure and the present miracle of their unmatched success refutes the sneer that "this is a skeptical age." Happily, both illustrate the rare adaptability of the gospel to the people's current needs, the tendency it has to break old and outworn molds and choose for itself the channels of a wider and more practical beneficence.

But to the case in hand: Going directly from Evanston, we arrived at the People's University August 14, and found that every arrangement had been made for our reception by Dr. Vincent and a local committee of ladies, Mrs. Dr. Burger of Dayton, Ohio, and Mrs. William Patten, of Philadelphia, being leaders in this, with Mrs. T. B. Hoover, of Franklin, Pa., at their head. (Mrs. Hoover is temperance secretary at Chautauqua.) It seems that a meeting of W. C. T. U. ladies had been held, at which Dr. Vincent had frankly stated his objections to our society, the main points being, so far as I could learn, that we believed in women as public speakers, favored their citizenship, wanted a quarterly S. S. temperance lesson, and had patronized David Cook's literature. Nevertheless, he recognized us as a body of earnest and well-intentioned Christian workers, and desired that every effort should be made to show us respect and good will.

He even went so far as to propose that a reception be given to your humble servant in the elegant parlors of the Hotel Atheneum, all of which was appreciatively told me by the ladies who thought, as I certainly do, that "the doctor deserved all the more credit for being so kind when he was so unfortunate, (Methodist preacher though he was,) as not to perceive the excellence of the methods we have chosen to adopt!"

Well, upon going over to the ampitheatre at 11 a. m., August 15, we found the platform beautifully decorated with flowers, banners bearing our motto, and over the arch Ohio's huge battle flag which had gone through the amendment campaign, while above it, on a white ground, were the letters "W. C. T U., 1874—1884."

Dr. Vincent presided at our first meeting, and patiently endured during one hour and a half, the voices of women pleading their cause, Mrs. McLaughlin and myself being obliged by the exigencies of the program, to inflict this portion upon the sensitive ear of our kind friend.

Our gifted Boston speaker served the cause grandly that day. I clip a paragraph from her address, as stenographically reported in the Assembly Herald:

The law is but a magnificent piece of machinery with which to do something. There stands an engine on the track made of the best possible material, polished to the last possible degree. It has everything needful. It is on the track, but it does not stir a step. What is the matter with the engine? Nothing is the matter with it. It wants a man aboard who knows how to run it and where he wishes it to go. When he gets aboard and sets the engine at work it is not long before it steams away. So the finest prohibitory law we could ever have put upon the statute book could not of itself be of any practical utility for the overthrow of the liquor traffic. It must have earnest men and women behind it, with the fire of prohibition in their hearts, intent upon having the majesty of the law sustained.

At the close Dr. Vincent pronounced the benediction. Two o'clock came and a general platform meeting was conducted by ourselves in our own fashion at which we had excellent speaking by Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Mrs. Wells, of Indiana, and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, who had just arrived from the "St. John Circuit," and was full of the electricity of the campaign, though she did not then refer to the mooted question it involved. Let me give you a few specimen sentences:

Then came the woman's crusade, which lifted this question of temperance reform to the heart level and the prayer level. And in the W. C. T. U. it is lifted to the level of logic and of law. So, by the will of God, by the will of the women, this mighty question in our civilization has been lifted once for all to the eyes of the American people, never to go down again until it is settled in righteousness.

There never was such an hour as this before the American people. Every home and heart has been touched by the power of God. How much we need a national party that will join the north and the south, how much we need a national question that will unite us, that will wipe away the tears and blood, and blot out the sorrows of the past, a great question which shall reach the heart level and home level of this continent. There is power enough in the church of God and the homes of our people to do this.

After two hours occupied in brief, bright speeches by the ladies mentioned, and Mrs. McLaughlin, who made another capital address, we held "a conference," based upon questions handed up from the audience. It should be understood that Chautauqua is a Gatling gun and can keep up perpetual fire "all round the sky," several different exercises going on at once, in the various departments. It must also be remembered that audiences change, else that which was "cruelty to animals" so far as our speakers were concerned, viz. a three hours' continuance in one place and practically one meeting, would have been equal y so for our hearers.

The conferences, of which two were held, the second at seven that evening, making in all five meetings in a day, developed some interesting facts. Forty-two different queries were propounded from the audience of which nineteen related to the new firm of "St. John and Daniel;" one of these and one only, so far as I know, being handed in by a worker of our own. I am explicit on this point because the introduction of this subject seemed most distasteful to the Chautauqua management, which still stands by "the good old Republican party." At least the ovation given to General Logan is susceptible of that construction though pointedly declared to be "non-partisan." Democrats, Greenbackers and Prohibitionists present hardly viewed it in that light. In the conference we plainly stated that the W. C. T. U. is perfectly free to decide for itself in town and state what its attitude shall be toward the Prohibition party, though the overwhelming majority of our members are its friends and allies, and we declared at Detroit last fall that we would "lend our influence to the party furnishing the best embodiment of prohibition principles." At night Mrs. Lathrap made the crowning speech of our anniversary, and the best I have ever heard from her eloquent lips, in which, while not dwelling upon the new party, she hewed so close to the line that I am sure she sharpened perception and aroused conscience in listening thousands. Next morning the paper edited by our generous "friend at court" and champion of woman's ballot, Dr. Theo. L. Flood, had an editorial entitled "A Word to the Elect Ladies" with this sentence:

You are doing a splendid work for a noble cause. Of woman suffrage we have nothing to say in connection with your mission as representatives of the W. C. T. U. But let us ask this plain question: "Is it wise, or even prudent, to project the political party phase of the temperance question into a promiscuous assembly?" Certainly it is in bad taste on the Chautauqua platform. This is not a political assembly.

So far as I have heard this is the only great summer camp where exception has been taken to these utterances, (and our speakers have attended all) save that at Martha's Vineyard a request was made to "wait till Monday."

After Mrs. Lathrap's address an immense reception was held, in which our honored and beloved Sallie Chapin had equal part, as north and south were represented side by side. The next morning, after devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Fannie D. B. Chase, of Pennsylvania, I spoke on the "Evolution of the Idea of Home," claiming that woman's sphere is to make the whole world a home-like place, by active participation in all of its affiairs; that by their inventions men have so intruded on her sphere as formerly understood, from Eli Whitney with his cotton gin and Elias Howe with his sewing machine, to Froebel with his kindergarten system, that woman was quite in danger of finding her occupation gone had not the widening circle of philanthropy filled her hands with new and blessed cares.

In the afternoon we had a young ladies' meeting at which Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. Fannie Leiter, Mrs. Angela Davis and Anna Gordon spoke to great acceptance, our brave Mollie Hay, of Indianapolis, reading the Bible and Mrs. Wells leading in prayer. Mrs. Patten will organize a Y. W. C. T. U. within a few days we hope.

Mrs. Gov. John P. St. John was at Chautauqua with her daughter and it was with great difficulty I induced this noblest and truest of women to take a seat upon the platform. Much as I desired it I dared not ask her to be introduced, though I know it would have given pleasure to the multitude, as was testified by the applause when I stated the fact of her presence. We planned for an old fashioned crusader's prayer meeting, to be lead by Esther Pugh on Sabbath morning, but I was obliged to leave and so cannot report it. I would gladly enumerate all our workers present but the list would be too long.

Mrs. Dr. Ganse of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Dr. Steele of Wilbraham were the only original members on the grounds.

We had their presence throughout and earnest help in scripture reading and prayer. Mrs. S. M. Perkins, of Cleveland was especially apt in her replies to the questions and is reported in the Chautauqua paper as "having organized more local unions than any other woman in the same space of time."

Mrs. Rev. Andrews of Kincardine, Canada, spoke, representing the work of our cousins across the line. Mrs. Matthews, of Carlinville, was with us on the platform, also Mrs Grey, Ohio's treasurer, and all our good friends of the local committee. Miss Emma P. Ewing, of the cooking school, sent me a loaf of twentieth century bread, so good that I want her to be with us at St. Louis, and have a school for our edification if we can find an "annex" for the purpose. She is professor of domestic economy in the Iowa agricultural college at Ames. Iowa ahead as usual, save on one question! I send you Mrs. Chapin's beautiful poem, recited in one of her addresses with the editorial comment. I think we cannot too highly appreciate the delicate tact with which Mrs. Hoover bore her part as the connecting link between the authorities and ourselves. She is a woman to be reverenced and beloved.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that Dr. Vincent was most considerate, and when we remember his peculiar views, I feel that we should greatly honor him for his catholicity and kindness. He insisted on paying for our expenses (we expected nothing for our services) twenty-five dollars more than he had agreed, and spoke of some permanent method of relating our work to Chautauqua's plan of summer teaching. I suggested that we did not care for platform meetings, after all, half so much as for real, solid work, and would, above all things, rejoice in having a training school, with model W. C. T. U., model Y. W. C. T. U. and Band of Hope. I should not wonder if some such arrangement might be brought about, for I am certain it would prove of the highest mutual advantage to both "the parties in interest." Chautaugua is a great, a growing, a blessed institution. One hundred thousand people come and go during the six weeks' season, so quietly and with so much good will and nobleness of purpose that the place predicts the time "when all men's weal shall be each man's care."

The special sensitivness of its honored chief is "the last infirmity of a most noble mind." He thinks he may outgrow his aversion to woman as a speaker. I earnestly pray and honestly believe he will.

OUR WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.—MRS. E. PEIFFER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—In your issue of July 31, there was an article from Mrs. Grubb about the way and the means to get a German temperance paper. Nearly a month is passed and the busy, UNION SIGNAL, did not bring anything more on this subject. I wonder if our state presidents did notice that article and if they consider it as a duty of their office to do anything in this direction.

In which way shall the $175 be raised? By whom shall the money be sent? I would be glad if THE UNION SIGNAL would answer these questions. I believe that it could be collected easily in every state if only we would ask for it. I saw the necessity of a German temperance paper long before I read Mrs. Grubb's article and made the following plan which could just be suggested to that of Mrs. Grubb: The sisters of every local union should go around to the manufacturers in their neighborhood and to all people interested in the work among foreigners asking them to subscribe money for a German temperance paper and getting directions of persons to whom the paper shall be sent. Thousands of dollars and addresses could come in. They could be sent to Mrs. S. F. Grubb, Kirkwood, Mo. But this is not all we need. We must know what we will print. Facts of intemperance, the evil done by it? People see the results of intemperance daily, without becoming any better; and we don't need to report that in our paper.

Last week I read "An editor is like a general of an army," and so we need an editor who knows his enemies, his arms and his army; and he ought to have the following qualifications:

I. He must have the Biblical gospel, the gospel of H. W. Smith, the gospel of the W. C. T. U. As sure as the crusaders are today the pilots of the vessel United States, as surely I believe that the W. C. T. U. is called from God to save the German church from her sectarian nature. I call secterian every one who seeks salvation in anything outside of Christ and His precious blood shed for all; as in the church, in the doctrines, in baptism, in conversion, etc.

II. He must be well educated, many foreigners are educated and cannot be ruled by a half educated one.

III. He must know the history of the intoxicating drinks, their nature and effect on the human system; heredity and hygiene. If our nation would know the history of alcohol, none of our ministers would oppose prohibition without knowing that he acts like a Baal priest. It was not the idol that attracted the people but the dancing and drinking of intoxicating beverages. The idols are gone, but dancing and drunkenness remained and stepped over into Christendom.

IV. He must understand politics; as foreigners don't know how to rule our country, we ought to teach them.

Hoping that the money, the directions, the editor, the publisher will be found soon.

A LETTER TO MRS. S. F. GRUBB, FROM A GERMAN PROHIBITIONIST.

I am glad that you found my letter in the McGregor News worthy of your notice and I am likewise very thankful for your kind letter. I am a native of Germany, raised among that nation which is the hardest to win over to prohibition to the good cause.

When I look over the ranks of my countrymen, almost a solid phalanx, then I feel like shrinking back from so hard a task as trying to convince them of their error, of their wrong to uphold drinking, that the saloon is the greatest curse of all ages. We ought to have a German paper to advocate the good cause, but it will be almost impossible to start such a one. According to my judgment it would be best to secure a German paper already established, with some circulation, with a racy editor at its head. If such a paper could be got, a good, newsy, family paper, with a prohibition department, and published as cheap as our best English weeklies (for the German is very economical except in drinking) then I think it would do some good. The subscribers of such a paper would naturally read on till their subscription run out, and probably some of them might remain in the fold, especially if the paper was made interesting for the wives and daughters. But our greatest endeavor should be to promote woman suffrage, which means the death-blow to this curse of all the curses, the saloon. As women have suffered by these dramshops as no earthly sufferers have suffered before them, so I deem it but justice that the saloon should fall by the hand of woman. If all the woe suffered by unhappy women and children, caused by strong drink, could find its vent in one single outcry, that cry could be heard upon the distant planets.

You say we need German speakers to advocate our cause, but as they will be hard to get we must try and get along with English speakers, most of the Germans understand English anyhow, the trouble is to bring them out to hear.

I learn that our government refuses to let those paupers land on our shores who are shipped here from time to time from foreign countries. There are thousands of drunkards landed in our cities, why not ship them back too? They don't rank any higher than the paupers.

As to distributing literature I have to say that there are hardly any Germans around here; if we could induce the German preachers to distribute and recommend our tracts to their parish it would do good in my opinion. The church is the natural enemy of the saloon.

Hoping that you may never tire out in the good cause and meet with all possible success. ERNST ERBE.

A DISCOVERY — BY MRS. A. H. KEPLEY.

I have just had word from Rev. L. Pfieffer of East Green, Erie county, Pa., that he has had word from Germany of the works of Dr. A. Baer on the "Nature of the Alcoholics," etc. Dr. C. Bernreuter, of Nashville, Ill., discovered a notice of Dr. Baer's book in an old copy of the Apologist, the organ of the German M. E. church. This information was obtained from a review of the book in the New York Staats Zeitung.

Rev. Mr. Pfieffer says that the book will cost $4.00 in Germany, and to import it $5.00 more, making a total cost of $9 00. He is not able to buy it, as he is a clergyman with a small charge, and I have not the funds to get it either. Money should be furnished with which to buy it and we should have such notice of its contents as would fit us to speak of it to our German friends and to Germans in places of authority or position. Any people will take most notice of that which is produced among its own nationality, and the Germans are pronounced in their respect and honor for writers of their own people. Our temperance books they may read and understand, but they are not likely to accept the doctrines which are contained therein, but with their own writers it is another matter. An instance will make this clear:

Mrs. Lumry, of Wheaton, Ill., who has our German work near her heart, because she has many Germans in her county, through a German tract distributor, Rev. Mr. Poener, came across a little book written by a German Catholic priest in Germany by the name of Alban Stoltz. Its title was "Das Faterunser und die Tehn Gebote" (the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments). Rev. Mr. Poener read it and made comments and then it was sent to me with directions to keep it as long as needed. I was also to be allowed to send it to German friends for reading.

The particular good thing we found for our use was under the head of "Dein Ville Geschehte wie in dem Himmel, so auch auf Erden." (Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven). Here Father Stoltz without reserve teaches the doctrines of total abstinence and prohibition, and he exalts above all work the work of elevating the drunkard. I wish I might quote freely but THE UNION SIGNAL is always pressed for room. Suffice it to say he declares it is against the will of God for men to drink or make intoxicants; declares moderate drinking harmful in the highest degree. He says it "bores a hole in one's life," makes all the allegations against it that we "fanatics" do and says if he were the ruler of the land and the "Landleute," (legislature) refused to pass prohibitory law he would do it himself; he speaks sarcastically of the legislator looking for re-election. He says no work is so glorious and praiseworthy as that of saving the drunkard, and that he must be pledged to total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks "gar kein geistig Getrank mehr zu trinken." He says "das Witshaus" (the saloon) should have a sign with the death's head painted on a black ground, and it should read "This is the house of Death."

The book was published in Leipsic and bore no date, but from references we concluded it was probably published about 1855. Inquiry developed the fact that Alban Stoltz was a voluminous religious writer and a favorite with the great middle class of German Catholics.* A circular letter was sent to the German Catholic priests of this county directly after this information had been accumulated, asking in the name of the foreign superintendent of W. C. T. U. work of Illinois if "Any considerable number of German Catholics were in harmony with the views of Alban Stoltz on the questions of total abstinence and prohibition, and if the German Catholic clergy as a class taught these ideas as Alban Stoltz did?"

One priest, not in our county, who edits a paper, gave Alban Stoltz a wide notice in a left handed sort of a way. He gave nearly a column of editorial matter to the writer of the circular in particular, and to all women in general, and professed utter ignorance of the W. C. T. U. (He has been fully posted since as to what the W. C. T. U. is since he has had our methods in our annual and tracts and in THE UNION SIGNAL laid before him fully.) As Alban Stoltz was mentioned, this fully compensated the undersigned for the ill conditioned comments made on her. Last Sunday week our own priest, from his pulpit, explained Alban Stoltz to his congregation! This grew out of having his attention called to Alban Stoltz. This work the W. C. T. U. must do. It must seek out and present the material which is ready and waiting for our Germans to make use of.

Rev. Pfieffer says Baer's books are two in number; one a tract worth 15 cents, called "Die Trunksvcht in ihrer Bedeutung fur die Gesundheit, und Gesundheitspflege." (The drink habit, or mania, and its relation to health and healthfulness.) The second will cost, as stated, $9 to import; it hasthe following title: "Der Alcoholismus, seine Verbreitung und seine Wirkung auf den Individuallen, und Sociallen Organismus, sowie die Mittel ihn zu bek ampfen." (Alcoholism, its propagation, and effects upon the individual and society and the way to destroy it.)

Dr. Bernreuter says from the review he read, he judges it must be fully as radical as Richardson's writings. Given this book and the attention of thinking Germans called to it, we must surely get good results from it. Will not some one make an effort to get the book into Mr. Pfieffer's hands. He hastranslated Julia Colman's Catechism into German and it is now in the hands of the national society, 58 Reade street, for publication.

The scientific line of temperance is one we particularly wish developed among this practical people. I wish I might write more on the German work but this must suffice for the present. There is much to bring to the notice of workers that has developed the last year, but it must wait till some other time.

PROHIBITION OVERTHROWN BY REPUBLICANS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The statement of Francis Murphy "that independent prohibition action in Massachusetts was the means of overthrowing the prohibitory law," not only is not true, but it is grossly and utterly untrue. That law was overthrown by the Republicans. It was done covertly, hypocritically, and in a most cowardly manner. In those New England states where they have not repealed the law, as in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, they are guilty of mischiefs almost as great in their refusal to execute it. In Democratic cities and towns it is the same. Concord, N. H., is an illustration. A combination of some of its best citizens, including many clergymen, waited on the mayor, sheriff, marshall and police, urging them to execute the prohibitory law, in violation of which liquor selling abounds, and they flatly refused, the mayor saying: "He was not elected to execute the law." And yet he had taken his oath to execute it. Perjury against the interests of a private citizen is adjudged worthy of the state prison. How much more when committed against the public!

BOOK NOTICES.

A HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE By Arthur Gilman M.A. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston.

This is a history of nationality. Its keynote is expressed on the title page in the saying of Daniel Webster: "I was born an American; I will live an American; I shall die an American." Special prominence is given to the history of American beginnings and to the periods of struggle for nationality. It is also a history of the people—special passages being devoted to the manners and habits of the past. Illlustrations show the flax wheel and "weaving room" of our great grandmothers, the country schoolmaster and his pupils, the log cabin of the settler, and the mansion of the southern planter. A view of the life and customs of the people during two centuries is the great lack in American history, and this book written by such an authority will help much to meet that want.

OLD CARAVAN DAYS. By Mary Hartwell Catherwood is another of the new publications of D. Lothrop & Co., which comes to us from S. A. Maxwell & Co., Chicago.

In another vein this book is also a contribution to popular, i. e. people's history, "folk lore" of the realistic order. It is the story of "Westward, ho!" A family moving from Ohio to the "far west" of Illinois some forty years ago, in which the grandmother, parents and children figure naturally and easily in the pioneer travel across country before the railroads were. It is full of humor and romance; grandmother's wisdom mixed with children's nonsense and the charm of good story telling thrown over the whole.

THE HAUNTED ISLANDS. By Margaret E. Wilmer. National Temperance Society Publication House, 58 Reade street New York.

The hero of the story is an exemplary young man whose mother, a Quaker, died in his early childhood of neglect and a broken heart, whose father was an early victim of intemperance, and who, as carefully and conscientiously brought up by his Quaker grandparents, became an effectual helper and teacher of others by the force of his singularly upright, manly, Christian example. The lesson of total abstinence, and the importance of avoiding hurtful associations, is most impressively taught.

MILLERTON PEOPLE. By Faye Huntington. Fom the same house.

It is a W. C. T. U. story, sufficiently guaranteed by its authorship and might have been written of many other villages than Millerton—where a few zealous temperance workers bore for years the heat and burden of the day, but at last were able to overcome the apathy of the people among whom the ruin of the saloon made fearful havoc.

The PROHIBITION SONGSTER is a little pamphlet also from the National Temperance Society, containing some very good songs with music.

THE YOUNG FOLKS' LIBRARY, gotten up in stiff paper covers at twenty-five cents a number, by D. Lothrop & Co. has three new issues, "Kitty Kent," by Julia A. Eastman; "Mrs. Hurd's Niece," by Ella Farman, editor of Wide Awake, and "Margie's Mission," by Maria Obier. These are all seasoned with temperance in that proportion that attracts instead of nauseates.

COOKERY FOR BEGINNERS, by Marion Harland, is another publication of the same firm, also in paper covers and with blank pages for inserted recipes. Mrs. Terhune's cook books proper are so popular that this pioneer of household affairs will be appreciated by mothers as a book to put in the hands of their daughters. It is a wineless book.

MANUAL OF BIBLICAL GEOGRAPHY. A text book on Bible history with maps and diagrams, comes to us from Rand, McNally & Co., the Continental Publishing Co.

This text book is written by the Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D.D., well known as superintendent of the normal department of the Chautauqua Assembly, and has an introduction by Dr. J. H. Vincent. It is in compact form, and furnishes one of the most complete aids to Bible study that we have seen and one which for the Sunday school teacher can hardly be excelled.

VEGETARIANISM; the Radical Cure for Drunkenness. By Harriet P. Fowler. M. L. Holbrook & Co. publishers, New York. Sanitary Pub. Co., Chicago.

This is a treatise in pamphlet form which endeavors to show that a vegetarian diet is not only a preventive of intemperance but a cure for its evils. The meat diet it is urged causes the craving for stimulants which leads to the opium habit when the appetite for drink cannot be indulged.

"WHERE ARE THE COMING MEN?"

ANNIE A. PRESTON.

Dear Aunt Mary asked this question,
Then, glancing up at Ben,
Who a fine cigar was rolling,
She asked it o'er again.

"For smokers, now, we need not search,
We find them nine in ten.
There are swearers, too, and loafers—
Where shall we look for men?

"Good men must come from somewhere soon,
To run the church and town;
For these we have are growing old,
And must of course go down.

"These growing boys. They will not do!
They swear, and smoke, and fight.
Dear me! must we then send abroad
For men who serve the right?"

The boys all looked surprised enough.
"We'll think of this!" said Ben,
"I'll tell you, lads, we'll mend our ways;
We'll be the coming men."

US BOYS.

"When we are old enough to vote
We'll make a great commotion;
We'll sweep the land of whisky clean
From ocean unto ocean.
Old Alcohol will have to fall
From his exalted station;
We'll smite him right, we'll smite him left,
And drive him from the nation!"

REUBEN PLANT'S FAULT.

CHAPTER II.—TRANSGRESSION.

"I'll lay you anything yer like yer can't knock them skittles down in twice."

"I'm not going to bet with you, Jem Tarrant. Bad as I may be, I've not come to that."

"Come to wot, Bob?"

"Betting."

"Well, you may think wotever you likes of yerself in yer own mind, Mister Bob Plant, but for my part if I told yer wot I think on yer you'd sing werry small."

"What you think of me or say of me I care little for," replied Robert. "What do you want?"

"Least said soonest mended," said Tarrant. "Pay for a pot; it's the only thing you'r good for since your guv'nor took you into his shop."

A moment's pause, and two young men are grappling together—the one, Jem Tarrant, with a good natured sense of his own superiority as an athlete, the other, Robert Plant, with glaring eyes and feverish lips, anxious to punish his adversary fairly or unfairly.

"Come out o' that," says the landlord of the "Sly Fox," while another ruffian assists to disengage the combatants, "why can't the two on yer agree?"

"He told me," says Jem, "six year ago, that his father said my father was a drunken vagabond, and that he wasn't going to mix up with the son of a drunken vagabond. Why, he's as bad as my father ever was, and worse than I ever shall be."

And it was too true. The bright-faced boy had grown into a dissolute young man. Reuben Plant's first thrashing had positively demoralized the lad; and it had destroyed confidence, love and mutual respect between them.

The father bitterly suffered the pangs of remorse. He perceived, when too late, that by sending his son, his beloved son, to the dram-shop he had unthinkingly paved the first step to that son's downfall.

Now, when beer was abolished from the wheelwright's shop, went the lad of his own accord to the "Sly Fox" and every day that passed over the head of Reuben Plant brought fresh sorrow and more regret.

His wife had died, and the only friend poor Reuben had was Mr. Miles, who had striven to prevent, as well as he was able, the torrent of grief and trouble, that threatened to overwhelm the wheelwright's home.

"Father, I shall stand no more of this; I'm off," said Robert, as he knocked out the ashes of his pipe on the work bench; "I've had enough of it. Any bit of good there was in me has been rubbed out of me; you can do better without me than with me: I'm off to sea. I shall at any rate be out of the way of the 'Sly Fox,' and if I stay here much longer I may do somebody a mischief."

There was a strange light in the young man's eyes as he uttered the words; there was something almost horribly painful in the reckiessness of his demeanour.

Reuben looked at him with his heart full of love; but the tears he would have shed refused to flow. Tremulously, tenderly, did the strong man place his brawny hand upon his son's head. "May God bless you, Bob," said he; "I shall be alone now your poor mother has gone, but it is better that we should part, at any rate for a time; I will pray earnestly for you, pray for yourself and for me."

And so Reuben Plant was left alone. The woman he had loved had gone before him; the son he loved had gone from him, and out of his heart's solitude he looked for one familiar face, one brother in life's wilderness, to console him. Did he look in vain? No! who was the truest, trustiest friend? Mr. Miles, the teetotaler, the person who seemed years ago, in Reuben Plant's estimation, to be too weak to be of any use to man or woman.

As Robert's ship sailed away to a far-off land it was the quiet voice of the clergyman that spoke words of peace to Reuben Plant, it was upon this physically weak servant of God that the strong man leaned for strength. As the vessel diminished to a mere speck Reuben cried in a voice choked with sobs, "My boy, I thrashed you for my own fault; may God be merciful to me and to you!"

"Amen!" said his friend. "Remember, God is more merciful to us all than we can ever be to ourselves."

And so Robert remained to be thought of; and his father prayed for him.

CHAPTER III.—RECONCILIATION.

Five dreary years passed away; there had not been one line received by Reuben Plant from his son.

Jem Tarrant had left the village with the name of a "ne'er-do-well" clinging to him as fast and as sure as an awkward tail clings to a decent kite.

The "Sly Fox" still reared its vulpine head on the signboard that swung to and fro in the breeze: wagoners quaffed the foaming pewter, and sucked the short clay pipe within its portals. It was a cool, shady nook, indeed, for tired travelers, was the porch of the "Sly Fox!" Many a joke was uttered there, many a curse was muttered there, and many wails arose through its baleful influence. If we could only deprive the village ale house of its generally pretty surroundings, and peer into its realities, we would realize the true meaning of the word charnel-house—a place for dead men's bones, or a receptacle for the death of living men's lives.

Reuben Plant still worked on in a listless, humdrum fashion. He had his work to do and he did it. There was only one hope he possessed, and that was the hope of Robert returning. At last a letter arrived.

"Bob will be at Euston on Thursday," said Reuben Plant to Mr. Miles; "he will arrive by the early train from Liverpool. I am almost afraid to meet him alone! Strong as I am, I feel weak in the knowledge of my own weakness."

"And that means strength, God be praised!" rejoined his friend, "for in weakness we are perfected."

A hasty scramble through a hurrying crowd, the bustle of railway passengers, the hurly-burly of railway porters, the screeching of whistles, the snorting of engines, the clanging of bells; and Reuben Plant with Mr. Miles stood on the arrival platform at the Euston terminus.

"Heaven grant that I may see my son sober!" ejaculated Reuben as the train entered the station.

In came the engine, puffing like a comfortable and good-hearted giant who had performed his duty in a straightforward and satisfactory manner.

"Father," rang out a voice, loud and clear; and a bronzed face looked out of the carriage window; "Father, here I am."

The carriage door opens; a man descends. Reuben sees that the man is his son. With a tottering, uncertain step Robert comes forward, and falls to the ground.

"Drunk!" says a railway porter.

"May the Lord be merciful to me!" ejaculates Reuben.

"Who says drunk?" sings out another sunburnt sailor, springing from the carriage. "My name's Jem Tarrant; this is my shipmate, Robert Plant. Why, mates, we both wear the blue ribbon. Drunk! Oh! he's dead!"

"Let me pass, if you please. Many thanks, thanks!" and without the slightest appearance of concern a quiet, gentlemanly little man places his hand upon the sailor's heart. He whispers to Mr. Miles.

"I am prepared to know the worst," says Reuben. "I thrashed my son for my own fault; he is dead, and I have murdered him."

"Not dead," replies his friend, "not dead, and not intoxicated.

"The Almighty God be thanked!" murmurs Reuben.

There are meetings in this life too sacred in their nature to be discussed. Bob Plant had got home, but the effects of his earlier habits had told upon him; these combined with the excitement consequent upon his journey produced an illness that was destined to be of some duration.

"Never mind," said Reuben Plant, "invalid or not, I'm happy now your back, Bob; I wronged you, and I wronged Jem Tarrant. I placed temptation in your way, and I quite forgot that Jem had temptation placed in his."

The "Sly Fox" is still in existence. Jem Tarrant is a thriving colonist. The wheelwright's shop is still flourishing; Robert Plant is almost as hale and hearty as his father used to be. Reuben's hair is growing very gray, but his voice retains its pristine clearness. If you want to hear it, be good enough to find fault with Mr. Miles, and Reuben will declare in stentorian tones that the strongest friend he has or ever had, is Mr. Miles, the teetotaler, who he once dubbed too weak to be of much use to man or woman.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S MAIL BAG.

DEAR CAPTAIN DEBORAH:—I am a member of a Band of Hope which was organized not quite a year ago. We have now some forty members, twenty of whom are pledged. Those who attend are nearly all small children, for the larger ones seem to think it disgraceful to associate with the little ones.

Our leaders instructed us several months before they gave us pledge cards, and then, lest we did not understand, had us take them home before we signed them and get our parents' consent. But they need not have been so particular, for most of us had seen drunken men enough to know what intemperance meant and to be willing to pledge ourselves against it.

Our village of five hundred inhabitants has three grog shops, one church, a school and a W. C. T. U. of noble, earnest women, not all the village "ladies" in it by any means.

When we girls of the Band of Hope get old enough they will have an accession to their ranks. If we could make as noble women as is the president of our union we would never be ashamed of having joined the Band of Hope.

We wish we could enjoy the teaching of Mrs. Youman's or Miss Gordon, who are said to be very good at instructing Bands of Hope.

Our superintendent is a grand, talented woman, and is frequently heard at the local W. C. T. U. conventions, but says she knows nothing about children.

I have not much to write that is interesting to you, but as you have asked the "children" to write you I thought I would send a few lines.

I enjoy reading "Captain Deborah's" letters very much and wish she would get to be the "Captain" of every boy and girl in the land; and would "Captain Deborah" be so kind as to send me her autograph, for I am making a collection of the autographs of noted temperance workers and would prize hers very highly.

Yours with esteem, one of your little soldiers of the Empire state. EMMA.

DEAR CAPTAIN DEBORAH:—I am sending you a letter from Mrs. Deputie, of Africa. Please publish it and make an appeal to every body for the supplies needed in that far away mission home. Can't you ask Sabbath schools that take the Youth's Temperance Banner to gather up the papers after they have been read, and mail them them to Mrs. Deputie. We could very much increase the influence of all foreign missionaries if we would send them generous supplies of temperance badges, mottoes and papers.

Yours for the Prevention Army all over the world.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 19. ELLEN M. WATSON.

MRS. ELLEN M. WATSON:—Dear Friend, It has been a long time since I have heard from you but I suppose that you are kept busy since the rum sellers and the rum drinkers are now trying to carry the day as election time approaches We are kept busy here as there seems to be a disposition manifest on the part of many of our civilized people to think that money cannot be made on any thing else but the sale of rum, gin and other intoxicating liquors. It is a curse to the country. The heathen are fond of gin and rum and they will make any sacrifice to obtain it. Last month a native chief died within four miles of this station from the use of gin. He went to visit a friend of his in the country and upon his arrival his friend gave him five large bottles of gin, as a token of his friendship and of his welcome, and the chief on his part to show his appreciation drank to excess, became drunk and had to go to bed. That night he was taken with hemorrhage from the nose and ear, continued to grow worse from time and to time and in a short time he was dead. I have often met with this chief in his lifetime. He was a very quiet man in his town and often invited me to visit his home. I have done so and found everything in order according to their country style of living. He was very anxious to have a day school taught in his town, but in this we could give him no assistance, having no money at our command to employ a teacher or purchase the necessary books.

This man died as he lived without God and without hope; his immortal soul hurried into the miseries of eternal torment by a poison manufactured by more intelligent beings and sold to an ignorant people by persons born and raised in gospel lands.

Our temperance Band of Hope is doing all in its power to put down the sin of intemperance around us. We have done some good here. If we have not yet succeeded in preventing the sale and use of liquors around our neighborhood we have kept such a diligent watch that wherever and whenever it is indulged in it is on the sly, and not publicly as heretofore. At Marshall, and at Shieffelin are societies formed and energetic persons engaged to remove this evil from our land. Mrs. Amanda Smith is now at Greenville, Sinoe county, working there with all her mind and heart to remove the evil from that county. That is a great trading mart and there are many foreigners there as well as Liberian traders who use liquors in the trade. We are expecting Mrs. Smith to visit us before long and give us some assistance in our work here.

And now before I close I wish to inquire of you as to where we can obtain temperance cards, temperance songsters and other cheap temperance literature to encourage the enlargement of the work around us. Truly we are surrounded by heathen, and they cannot read, but the members of our society many of them can read and they can read these books etc., and learn of what is being done in other parts of the world and make themselves useful in imparting instruction to those around them. If you can give us the necessary information we wish to make a small order for books, cards, etc., as we may be able to get. We have not much money in our society as yet and we wish to use it to the best advantage, and will be grateful for any favors. I must now close. Hoping these lines may find you well, I remain

Very respectfully yours, MARY JANE DEPUTIE.

Mount Olive, Liberia, West Africa, July 4.

Captain Deborah has been down to the Cradle Mission and found that a box of playthings and picture papers has been received from the Band of Hope at Erie, Pa., through Nannie E. Burwell of that city. The babies crowed their thanks, and the good superintendent expressed his more intelligibly. Captain Deborah too says "Thank you," and "God bless us every one."

My whole is an earnest appeal to all to help in the temperance reform.

183. CROSS-WORD ENIGMA

In good, not in bad.
In own, not in sad.
In dove, not in chain.
In sorrow, not in pain.
In pure, not in good.
In eat, not in food.
In evil, not in sin.
In done, not in win.
In tears, not in weep.
In hour, not in sleep
In end, not in done
In rent, not in gone
In ink, not in black.
In give, not in lack.
In have not in lend.
In tear, not in rend.
My whole is a prayer we all should use
And to aid in the work we each should choose.

C. B. L.

184. HIDDEN NAMES.

1. Be ye faithful in all things.
2. I need perseverance lest I arrive at Doubting Castle.
3. Did you see that camel in danger?
4. O Handel! lend me your knife.
5. It is Susan, niece of John Smith.

185. RIDDLE.

There is a monarch of renown
He's found in each saloon in town:
He is a prince of mighty fame.
Do you desire to know his name?
Take the second vowel, and the third,
With five placed in the middle;
Five hundred in the front may stand
And fifty ends the riddle. E. F. A.

THE MASTER'S TOUCH.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty lies unseen;
To wake the music and the beauty, needs
The Master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, touch us with Thy skillful hand,
Let not the music that is in us die;
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let,
Hidden and lost, Thy form within us lie.

Spare not the stroke; do with us as Thou wilt;
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred.
Complete Thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, O our God and Lord.—Bonar.

A LITTLE TALK WITH JOHN.

MATTIE ECOB HAMILTON.

I've been told, John, that the saloon keepers are a class that can seldom be reached by temperance workers; that the business is so hardening that they who once engage in it forever after turn a deaf ear to those who would point to a better life. But they say that you are an exception, John; that you are kindhearted, honest and keep a respectable place. I am led to believe that you are kindhearted, for as I met you on the street the other day and noticed your frank, pleasant face, and saw how gently you helped up the crying child that had fallen on the icy pavement, I concluded there was a great deal of good in you yet, John. And now let's talk it over and try and find out just how much goodness you have and if there is not some danger of your losing your stock. They say that you have given as much to the poor, this winter, as any man, and perhaps more. That was good in you John and I know you felt better for it, but when you were giving out the dollars and cents, did you stop to think where that money came from? That if C's dollars had not gone into your till his wife would not now be clothed in rags and his children crying for bread? That if you had not taken A's last "bit" for drink he might have slept in a decent bed instead of taking refuge in the "calaboose"? That the last sum you gave the "poor relief fund" was the money that Tom meant to have spent for Johnny's shoes but which was spent at your bar instead.

You took a load of wood to the widow B. It was nicely split, too, John. That was a great kindness to the poor woman. Her husband died last spring of delirium tremens. "But he didn't get it at my bar," you say, "I don't sell to drunkards." That's true, John. The last year of his life he was such a wreck that you wouldn't let him put foot in your door. But you know when you first set up shop, John, that he was your best customer. Who helped make him a drunkard, John? And how can you always know that you are not selling to drunkards? Do you remember that handsome young fellow, a stranger to you, who came into your saloon last winter and called for a flask of brandy? He paid for it too like a gentleman, and he wore good clothes, yet he was a drunkard, John, and after he had paid for the liquor he had just enough money left to take him to C, where he went straight to a room in a hotel and after drinking the last drop in the bottle, blew out his brains. The papers were full of it then, John, but you nor the public never knew before where he got his liquor. It's forgotten now by the world. No one blames you, John; you didn't know that he would do that dreadful act. That's it, John. Its the awful uncertainty of the business. There are more drunkards who wear good clothes than we dream of.

They say you are honest, John; that you pay your debts and never defraud any man. Is that so? did you pay E for the loss of his time and the loss of his place when he went on that week's debauch. The greater part of the liquor that did that work was bought at your bar. Did you pay the docter's bill when F's horses ran away with their drunken driver and almost killed him? Remember he got his liquor at your saloon. And what do you give in return for the nickles and dimes that are steadily flowing into your till, good, honest bread, or clothing, or anything that will better your brother man physically or mentally? I wish you did, John, I wish you were back on that little farm where you worked so hard and though you earned not quite so much money, yet it was good clean money. You used to think of those days, John, and sigh for their return. When your last customer had gone, and you had put down the days earnings of your bar, and you were turning out the lights, in the midnight quiet, a still small voice would whisper in your ear, and you would almost feel a hand upon your shoulder pointing you back to the better life, when you were a man, doing a man's honest work and earning a man's honest money, pointing still backward to your innocent boyhood in the old home by your mother's side dreaming bright dreams of the future.

You little thought then you would ever keep a saloon. It would point you to your innocent children who love you but who will one day blush because their father was a saloon keeper. It would point you to that mound-strewn graveyard where before many years a place will be found for you. You acknowledge, with a sigh, that you are growing old, John. Every day you notice a few more gray hairs. Soon the last glass will be sold, the last customer go out and your last bar account be reckoned. What then will be the sum total of your life-work? Why for so many years I have done nothing but sell liquor that has degraded and pauperized my fellow men, sending some to insanity, others to suicide and perchance some to the gallows. For this I have received thousands of dollars wrung from the wages that should have clothed the naked and fed the hungry! Will you be proud of that, John? They say that you keep a respectable place. Let's see John. Is it so respectable that you ever invite your wife and children in, or any of your lady acquaintances? Don't you sometimes blush, yourself John, over some things that occur at your bar? And why do you have those heavy screens at your windows by night and day. There's something wrong somewhere, John, or you wouldn't be so anxious to exclude the public gaze. "But," you say, "It must be respectable, for I have the names of some of the best men in the city and church members too, on my book. Perhaps that's so, John. But if all the church members on earth and all the angels in Heaven should join in an evil deed, would that make it right, John? And what church member will shield you in that great day when we all stand before the judgment seat of God and you are rendering an account of your life work. Ah that church member will be groveling in the dust crying out for mercy on his great sin of giving you aid in your evil traffic. None of those who patted you on the shoulder and called you "a good fellow" while they sipped your foaming glasses, will have a thought for you, John. Did I say none. I wish I could, but ah there will be some who will think and who will say, "If it had not been for you, John, I might have been saved. I went to your saloon, because it was a 'respectable' one. I took my first glass at your bar, there I learned my first oath, and heard the first blasphemous story, there I brought others, and together we wasted our time and money and lost our health and character and self-respect and manhood and alas our souls! for see over that dreadful judgment throne is flaming that awful sentence, 'No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven.'"

The Sunday School Lesson.

Sept. 14.] Third Quarter, No. 11. [1884.

TOPIC: WAITING FOR THE LORD.

LESSON TEXT.—Psalms 40:1-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I delight to do Thy will, O God. Ps. 40:8.

1. One can often wait for God, for His vindication and even for His salvation. But it is one thing to wait and another to wait patiently. Waiting may be a stoical sort of performance, or a dogged sullenness; but waiting patiently is waiting gladly, surely, restfully. "Waiting I waited," is the Hebrew idiom used by David, meaning a little more than the ordinary significance of patience. It is a waiting of expectation. This is involved in patience, for as St. Paul says, "If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it."

2. God bends, "inclines" to our low estate. He "comes down our souls to meet." He has to do this when we are in the "horrible pit" of our own self condemnation. His is a wonderful condescending love. It passes our own self love, which is about the strongest usurper the heart's throne knows. When we are in the "miry clay" of humiliation and can scarcely pray or do aught but wait to see if our God will have mercy upon us, then He "inclines unto" us as the tenderest of mothers bend over repentant children.

3. Our repentance and God's bending toward us can have but one outcome. He will always bring us out of the pit into the sure places of the rock Christ Jesus. That rock never fails to establish or make sure our footing, because all the promises are made to us in Him.

4. God's way is to be made known among the heathen, i. e., among those who do not know His blessed way with His children. So when a great deliverance comes to us a new song comes with it if we will but sing it, that others may know the exceeding goodness and mercy of our God unto us. It is a part of the preaching of His gospel to every creature, that we who have tasted His mercy shall shout to those behind us, "O taste and see that the Lord is good." It is a part of the dispensation committed to us that we sing of His mighty love, that those still in the depths of the horrible pit may have courage to wait patiently for deliverance.

5. Some people mentally scourge themselves as a way out of darkness and despair, thinking this helps matters. But it is only a weariness to the flesh, and accomplishes nothing. God's word is "Give me thine heart," meaning thy love, thy willing acquiesence in my plan for thee, because it is the surest channel of blessing and uplifting. David's sin did not require sacrifice, even in the sacrificial days of the old dispensation, other than that of the broken heart and the contrite spirit. It is the glad "Lo, I come," that God waits to hear, and not the reverberation of our self inflicted blows.

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

A BIT OF HISTORY.

The word "mum," the use of which has recently been revived in Iowa, is not of recent coinage. Webster defines it to be a strong beer which originated in Brunswick, Germany, with one Mumme, who first brewed it in the year of our Lord 1492.

As early as the first year of the reign of William and Mary it was subjected to an excise duty of three shillings per barrel under the designation of "Imported ale, beer or mum." This duty was highly protective, for domestic ale or beer was taxed not any higher than nine pence per barrel.

The names brandy, whisky, rum and gin seem not to have been known in the early times of the English parliament. Wine and ale are mentioned in Magna Charta and the word beer occurs as early as the statute of 5 and 6, Edw. VI.

Distilled liquors were first known by the name of strong water (not unlike the Indian name fire water). In a little while these were subdivided into "strong water" or aqua vitae, and "strong water perfectly made."

There was also a distinction kept up between imported and domestic liquors which sometimes led to strange and perplexing questions of law. Thus by act of parliament of 12 Car. II. duties were laid as follows: spirits made of wine or cider imported, two pence per gallon; strong water perfectly made imported, four pence per gallon. Before that time brandy seems to have been unknown by name, and when it began to be imported a doubt arose whether it should be taxed two pence or four pence per gallon, and the doubt was resolved by an act of parliament of 22 Car. II. in favor of the higher rate. This is believed to be the first mention made of brandy in the excise laws of England.

Aqua vitae (water of life) seems to have meant precisely the same as the "strong water" before mentioned. In an act of parliament of 9 Geo. II. we find the word "usquebaugh" used to designate a certain spirituous liquor. This word according to its derivation as given by the best lexicographers means the same as aqua vitae (water of life) and by corrupting it we get our word whisky.

By an act of parliament of 10 and 11, William III. it is recited among other things that "Whereas it is found by experience that the art of distilling spirits or brandy in this kingdom is of late very much improved, and that spirits or brandy made here from molasses and sugar which are the product of English plantations is nearly as good as brandy imported from foreign parts," etc. From this it would appear they had not yet learned the name of "rum," or the liquor distilled from the products of the sugar cane.

"Geneva" is the word from which we derive our word "gin." According to Webster it has two meanings. It may mean a liquor produced by fermenting the juice of the juniper berry, or one produces by flavoring a distilled liquor with the berry itself. Under the stat. 9, Geo. II. and subsequent acts it is classed with distilled spirits and nowhere among the fermented drinks.

"Arrack" is a liquor distilled from fermented rice or from the juice of the cocoa palm. Under the excise laws before mentioned it was classed among the distilled spirits.

A very cursory examination of the early legislation in England therefore gives us the following distilled liquors: brandy (spirits of wine), apple jack (spirits of cider); rum (from sugar cane); arrack (from rice and the palm); whisky (usquebaugh, aqua vitae, all kinds of spirits distilled from grain); geneva (gin distilled from grain and flavored with the juniper berry).

Of malt liquors mention is made of ale, beer, mum. Of liquors made from the fermented juice of fruits, mention may be made of wine, cider and perry.

In addition to these liquors, all of which are more or less intoxicating, the following drinks were also at one time or another made subject to excise duties, to wit: Metheglin, mead, coffee, chocolate, sherbert and tea.

The curiosities of the early excise laws in England may be fairly illustrated by the act of 12 Car., II. C. 23, which was entitled, "A grant of certain impositions upon beer, ale and other liquors for the increase of his majesty's revenue during life."

By this act the following excise duties were levied:

|---|---|
| Beer and ale above 6 s. ($1.45) per bbl. | 15 d. per bbl. |
| Beer or ale 6 s. or under | 3 d. per bbl. |
| Cider and perry | 15 d. per hhd. |
| Vinegar beer | 6 d. " " |
| Strong water, aqua vitae (home made whisky) | 1 d. per gal. |
| Beer and ale imported | 3 s. per bbl. |
| Cider and perry imported | 5 s. per tun |
| Spirits made of wine or cider imported (foreign spirits) | 2 d. per gal. |
| Strong water perfectly made, imported (brandy) | 4 d. per gal. |
| Coffee made and sold | 4 d. per gal. |
| Chocolate, sherbert, tea made and sold | 8 d. per gal. |

By the next act of parliament these duties were for certain reasons doubled.

Why should not people drink home made beer in preference to lemonade when the former was taxed less than one half cent and the latter thirty cents per gallon? Why should not people get drunk on whisky or brandy when coffee was taxed fifteen cents per gallon, domestic whisky only four cents and imported brandy the same as coffee?

Wise legislators those! But for their day and generation they were doubtless as wise as some in modern times.

As wise as those who claim today that a generous excise restricts consumption, while the revenue reports show a gain of 1400 per cent in the manufacture of spirituous liquors during the twenty-one years of revenue operation. As wise too as those who claim that a low duty or tax on fermented liquors restricts consumption to these lighter beverages in face of the fact that the gain in fermented liquors during the revenue period is not quite 1100 per cent to 1400 per cent of gain in "strong water."

GLORIOUS as is translation to the better world we cannot forget that it inevitably brings bereavement. Such sorrow has come to Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, our former well beloved associate in editorial duties, in the death of her husband, the Rev. Edwin Andrew, which occurred two weeks since at their home in Evanston. An illness of months, with nights and days of intense pain, was crowned with the triumph of Christ-like patience and unfailing faith. The peace of his sick chamber was as near the glory of heaven as earthly places can borrow. "Going home gloriously," was the unspoken testimony of the life so long devoted to Christ and His cause, to all who watched its painful ebbing away. Though conscious of his near release he did not know but his Heavenly Father migh leave him here till after the election in November, and so carefully studied the political situation that he might be able to perform once more a citizen's duty in the fear of God. Although never before identified with any political organization for the embodiment of prohibition principles, he came quietly to the conclusion that his last vote, if he should be spared to cast it, must be given to St. John and the party he represents. Such a decision, made in the clear light of a near eternity, has in it much for the well to think about and to make the strong consider.

A useful and a beautiful life never ends. He who lives for God has something of God's omnipresence in all good, here and hereafter.

THE Evening Journal states that women are not making good jurors in Washington territory. In opposition to this we give again Judge Roger S. Green's testimony to the contrary, and the Journal itself notes Judge Green's rigid requirement that women be not released from jury duty. In giving the charge to the grand jury in a certain county of Washington territory he said:

The number of courts holden by me, since our laws that put woman on her present political plane became operative, is seven, at six of which women served on both the grand and petit juries, and as to the manner in which they performed jury duty I have yet to hear from any one who, by actual presence in court and intelligent following of what was going on, became qualified to pass an opinion, a single adverse criticism or any word but praise. Heartily, I concur in what thus appears to be the general judgement of competent observers. Even though it be granted that the female jurors who have served hitherto are, in intelligence, above the average that may be expected, this fact is counterbalanced by two others: First, that in selecting from the entire panel parties at every term have shown a decided preference for the women as jurors; and second, that no grand jury ever in session in this territory has done prompter, cleaner, better work than those which have sat in thi district during the last six months."

MISS WILLARD writes of the effort to make our organization beneficent in all lands as follows: "If but little has been said about the World's W. C. T. U. this year, it is not because but little has been done. Letters have gone to every country of the world, with full statement of our plans and hopes. Earnest hearts are enlisted and seed is sown which shall bring forth fruit ere long. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, who is at the head of the Pacific Coast committee, will probably make a reconnoisance next year in Japan, India and China, Australia, etc. We can then intelligently act. Rome was not built in a day, and a World's W. C. T. U. which shall bind all continents in the effort to overthrow the opium and alcohol habits is not to be had save as the sequel of unmeasured faith and works."

OUR Herald tells a story pointing its moral so well that we pass it along:

At a recent conversation held in the parlors of a member of the W. C. T. U., by Mrs. Gougar, for the purpose of reviving an interest in the organization, which seemed to be dying, the following questions were asked, after the president had stated that "we seem to be dead. We used to be enthusiastic, but have lost our zeal. Mrs. Gougar asked:

"How many UNION SIGNALS do your members take?"

A wise, inquiring look went around among the ladies, when the president said: "We took fourteen copies when we first organized, but none are taken now."

"How many temperance or woman's papers do you take in the club?" inquired Mrs. Gougar.

The answer revealed the fact that but one temperance paper (one copy of the Lever) was taken by the entire membership. No wonder that that W. C. T. U. "seemed dead."

THE California W. C. T. U. at its recent conference of northern and southern workers adopted the following significant resolutions:

WHEREAS, It is an undisguised fact that the law against selling liquor to minors is disregarded by the vendors of intoxicating liquors in California, and

WHEREAS, Little or no effort is made by the officers of the law to bring its offenders to justice; therefore

Resolved, That the W. C. T. U. of California, urged by a love for their sons and brothers, by a duty they owe the state, and the higher duty they owe their God, should unite in an effort to secure the enforcement of the law.

Resolved, That in our opinion the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the state, should include wine that is made from grapes grown in the state for the reason that the same contains a large proportion of alcohol and is intoxicating and that the experience which comes from other wine growing countries confirms this fact and demonstrates that intemperance increases as does this so-called industry, and on this point we solicit facts.

IT is a little late to renew the "temperance colleges" enumeration, but we cannot forbear mention of the Central University of Iowa, at Pella, where every professor is not only devoted to total abstinence, but is also engaged in the labor of spreading temperance sentiments. The efforts to insure the execution of the prohibitory law in the neighborhood proceed principally from said institution. The University of Des Moines, Col. Alonzo Abernethy, dean, is said by its president, the Rev. Dr. Kenney, to be "a prohibitory school with a strong prohibition faculty in a prohibition city in a prohibition state." What more could be desired?

OFTEN and often it is the unconsciously uttered truth that teaches most. As for instance the following from an officer's letter published in the Army and Navy Gazette:

All our officers fought like devils, and how we only lost one I cannot tell. God is good and must have put his shield around our brave and gallant officers. The Colonel is a splendid man. He shot two Arabs dead and would have more, only the ammunition missed fire.

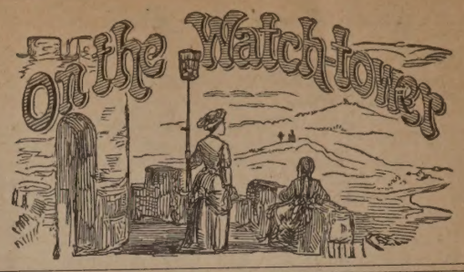
It is soon to be believed throughout the whole world that fighting can never be done otherwise than "like devils."

WE have reason to believe that any woman who may have considered the communication on a "New Work for Woman" published in our issue of Aug. 21, as worth investigation and investment, will do as well to invest neither time nor money in the affair. A W. C. T. U. worker in Wisconsin may be applied to through THE UNION SIGNAL office for some discouraging facts in reference to the "new work."

A WORKER among the colored people of the south calls upon the readers of temperance and religious newspapers to save the papers for distribution among the negroes who will eagerly read and mark their contents. Any person who will comply with the request may address packages of books, tracts and newspapers treating of temperance topics to J. A. Rountree, Hartsell, Morgan Co., Ala.

Now is the season for preparing communion wine. The following receipe has been used in several localities and found satisfactory:

Make the grapes into jelly allowing three-fourths pound of sugar to a pint of grape juice. Boil until it jells. Put up in pint bowls. When wanted, dissolve one bowl of jelly in one quart of boiling water. When cool it is ready for use. Use glass, earthen or porcelain vessels in the preparation.



A delightful description of Grace Cottage, the home of Jennie Smith the, evangelist, at Mountain Lake Park, Md., is given in the West Virginia Freeman. With such a pen, cottages would palaces prove, and nobody will be sorry if they do, provided they shelter weary temperance workers on their brief stay-at-home vacations.

I see that a voter who professes to know, says "there will be no Mrs. Hayes' foolishness at the White House if Blaine is elected."

* * *

Col. Bain says that in going from Louisville to New Castle, a distance of 226 miles, there are just four places where a drink of liquor can be had. This is excellent for Kentucky, or indeed any where else.

* * *

He spoke at Lake Bluff on Sunday last to a large audience, President Blanchard preceding him with a sermon in the forenoon. He is as magnetic as ever and has made many votes for St. John during his recent eastern tour.

* * *

A further statement made by him is that within the next ten days, not less than eight or ten St. John clubs will be organized in the city of Louisville, all made up from the very best citizens of the place.

* * *

Miss Willard spoke to a crowded house in the city hall, Portland, Me., on Tuesday evening of last week. Mrs. Bent's golden cornet was in its best tone and mood that evening.

* * *

Speaking of camp meetings, was I not, last week? well here is a different story to tell. At New Lennox, Ill., where the W. C. T. U. had charge of a day's service the presiding elder called home by illness in his family left this triumphal note behind him. It became the key note and was well sustained.

NEW LENOX, August 28, 1884.

MRS. L. A. HAGANS,—Dear Sister,—I regret very much that my duty to myself, my family and my work calls me home, and hence detains me from your meeting. The responsibilities of another meeting have kept me constantly occupied here two weeks nearly, and with other duties, from home longer than that. Save Friday (tomorrow) I cannot be at home for a week. Much correspondence demands immediate attention, my wife is ill, and I must be one day at home in three weeks. Be assured of my heartiest sympathy with temperance work and workers, to the farthest extreme, including St. John, Hobbs, etc., etc., with third ticket and party. The largest temperance society in America, the Methodist episcopal church through the presiding elder of three thousand Methodists, sends greeting to its daughters, and other co-workers, in their great work of the W. C. T. U. Yours heartily,

JOHN M. CALDWELL,
P. Elder of Joliet Dist., M. E. C.

Mrs. Jennie Newby has been as instant in the usual "out of season" summer as in the southern winter, and the North Carolina W. C. T. U. rejoices in consequence. Four live unions and several flourishing Bands of Hope are her trophies.

* * *

Mrs. Emma Obenauer, who can with utmost difficulty be made to report herself and her work in the papers, has established at East Saginaw, Mich., a large industrial school, a Sunday school, and nightly gospel meetings. She attended the prohibition convention at Lansing.

* * *

Mrs. Jennie Beauchamp, state president of the Texas W. C. T. U. has reached home again after a very successful tour through the southern portion of the state. The way these southern workers stop not for torrid heat amazes me.

* * *

I learn that through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. every Protestant Sunday school in the city of Owatonna, Minn., used the temperance lessons last quarter. This month brings us another quarterly temperance day. Work ought to begin at once. ON DUTY.

SOUTHERN GLEANINGS.

BY MRS. GEORGIA HULSE M'LEOD.

Maryland.—The inter-state convention held at Mountain Lake Park, the home of Jennie Smith, was one of unusual interest. Delegates from five states took an active interest in the proceedings, and the crowning joy was an address from Frances E. Willard, who came from the Prohibition convention at Pittsburgh, as did Hon. Wm. Daniel, of Maryland, and other noted workers.

At the Gates of Druid Hill Park, in Baltimore, a large audience gathered to listen to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, of Ohio, who addressed them under the auspices of the State Temperance Alliance. For an hour, notwithstanding the intense heat, she held the attention of her audience by her clear reasoning, eloquent appeals to the consciences of voters and pathetic illustrations, living examples of the sorrow and evils resulting from the liquor traffic.

"Police Matrons." Such was the heading of a paragraph in our daily papers, showing the result of the faith, perseverance and tact, which for two years has been exercised by our state president, and her coadjutors. Through their persistent efforts the legislature at its last session passed a law authorizing the police board to appoint matrons for the different station houses as they saw proper.

Mrs. McLennan, the first to be appointed has entered on her duties at the central station.

The Board of Commissioners drew up a series of instructions for the matrons who are to assign to separate cells such female prisoners as in their opinion are first offenders, and who should be kept separated from such prisoners as are disorderly or vicious. Truly the W. C. T. U. have cause to be encouraged and press onward in their labors of love.

Virginia.—In Staunton a very successful entertainment was given by the Band of Hope, concluding with a well sustained dialogue, "Applying for a License," and by the way I think it is this Band of Hope which is alluded to in Capt. Deborah's correspondence, and not of Staunton, Mass. The state convention is advertised for September 16 and 17, at Staunton.

Mrs. R. D. Wilson, the state president, has issued an earnest circular letter to the women of Virginia, urging delegates to come from all parts of the state. Among the attractions will be addresses from Miss Willard, Mrs. Chapin, Anna Gordon and others. Virginia has many obstacles against which the W. C. T. U. workers must contend, but with the earnest, able state officers to lead them, they will yet apply to the giant alcohol, the proud motto of their state.

Louisiana.—Our earnest superintendent of state fairs will be glad to know of the bright prospect for the temperance workers during the world's exposition at New Orleans.

The State Alliance propose to erect a hotel within half a square of the Exposition grounds, the hotel to be under the entire influence and control of temperance women as far as possible. Permission will be given them to decorate the building with as many temperance mottoes and devices as they may wish. They will also be allowed to have a flag with our national motto floating from the top, that all may know the W. C. T. U. are unceasing in their work for God and home, and native land.

In my next I will give you a cluster of fragrant memories, some items of interest, work done by our girls on prison day. May the gentle deeds reach our dear Miss Casseday, with a benediction like the echo of sweet music, and the fragrance of June roses, and all summer blossoms.

FLORIDA.

Sanford.—Florida having sent no word to you for several weeks I thought some of your readers might be interested to hear from her. Work has almost stopped among most of the unions since hot weather began. After our convention in February new life seemed infused into every W. C. T. U. in the state, and all worked well until emigration time came. First one member, then another and another would say "Good bye," and fly away to a more genial summer clime. Here in Sanford those who remained worked on until between the rain and hot sun it seemed impossible to get our ladies out. We met weekly, and were very much interested in the course of reading on beer, but when just getting ready to start for the church, Wednesday afternoon, determining to be there sure, down would come a heavy summer rain. Thus we tried for several weeks in succession to have a meeting. Our children in the white and colored Band of Hope schools, numbering each from fifty to sixty, hardly wanted to take vacation, so interested had they become. Finally, we thought best to suspend their meetings during the months of August and September.

The latter part of May last we visited Tampa, one of the oldest seaport towns in our state, just brought into more direct communication with the interior by a railroad connecting it with the St. John's river. We found the Christian women there fully awake to the importance of temperance work, knowing nothing of our organization. When told of it they were delighted; so immediately we organized, with twenty or thirty ladies, a most interesting auxiliary. If we only had some one to canvass the state and organize, Florida would outreach some of the most populous states. While my heart and soul is in the work my health forbids. Won't some dear sister take Florida in her heart and come this fall or winter to do this work ere the meeting of our convention next February. Poor Florida is crying most piteously "Come over and help us." In the few days Mrs. Chapin spent in our state during the convention she spoke in St. Augustine and Jacksonville, and won many to our cause, but those two places, though important ones, are only a very small part of Florida.

Can we not induce her to come again? Here lies a field waiting, rich in soil, for the ploughing and the planting. Florida has nearly 5,000 more square miles than Illinois, Indiana or Ohio, and is fast giving birth to new towns everywhere over her territory. Now is the time to push our way, and plant temperance principles. God grant that some one may feel it incumbent upon her to come and help us.

Ere closing let me tell of one of our boys who was playing torch light procession a few evenings since in the yard. Somebody asked whom he was carrying his torch in honor of. He boldly replied: "Gov. St. John." "Yes, Frederick," we said, "if our Band of Hope boys and girls could vote, Gov. St. John would surely be our next president." Mrs. Walter Gwynn.

GEORGIA.

Oxford.—During Miss Willard's visit to our town, a year ago last winter, she offered a ten dollar medal for the best essay on temperance, written by a student of Emory College. Our union, organized by her at that time, urged upon the students the importance and the duty of writing upon the given topic, yet for the time being with very indifferent success. At commencement only two essays had been handed in, and the subject did not seem to have taken hold upon the young men as we had hoped. However, we determined last fall to renew the offer for a medal for the present year, and we narrowed the subject down to a somewhat more limited field, viz., "Prohibition the Best Means for Promoting Temperance." Meanwhile the temperance work in this section was assuming a much more determined form. Debates, lectures, newspaper articles, Sunday school conventions, more widely disseminated temperance literature, etc., had stirred the whole people, and students as well as the rest of the populace. A dozen essays were offered this time for the prize medal, and very many other students read up the subject who did not present papers. We determined to make the occasion of conferring the medal a special one, as in the general melee of commencement, where many medals are given, our temperance award could not receive the special notice which we believed it to merit. Therefore we selected the early part of June as the date, and sent for our gifted Mrs. Chapin of South Carolina, and our esteemed state president Mrs. Sibley, to be with us. They came, Mrs. Chapin led off with a sparkling, powerful address on prohibition which captivated the entire audience, and made a deep impression for good. The writer, as president of the local union, made some explanatory remarks concerning the origin and work of our union, and the object for which the medal was offered. Mrs. Sibley presented the medal which was awarded by the committee to Mr. J. A. Quillian of the senior class, who has since taken charge of an academy in Florida, and who expects to devote his life to the ministry. Our meeting was most satisfactory. After the benediction Mrs. Chapin, in a kind of informal talk with students who still lingered in the church, induced over fifty of them to sign the pledge, and our excellent local sister, Mrs. Dr. Moore, still kept open the doors of our temperance church to receive additional members.

The temperance cause is booming. Nearly all the white men of standing in our county are becoming enlisted in the work, and we hope this autumn to strike a decisive blow for prohibition, and add our county to the great majority in this state which have preceded us in the great good work Maggie W. Scomp.

MAINE.

NEWS OF THE AMENDMENT CAMPAIGN.

They tell us "all eyes are upon Maine" and we realize it. Almost breathlessly we have been and are working for the amendment. We realize that a majority vote for it will give a new impetus to the enforcement of the law and go forth to the world that the temperance people of Maine believe in probibition, while a vote against it would paralyze all efforts for enforcement and make it very hard to resist successfully the demand which would be made for the substitution of license for prohibitory statutes.

We have over 300 speakers in the field, and no one among them is doing more effective work than Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California. Her earnest, eloquent appeal touches all hearts. One evening she finds a response from the refined, intelligent audience in a conservative church. The next evening she is greeted with an immense crowd in city hall, and the answer "We will," which breaks forth in reply to her question at the close of her plea, "Will you vote for the amendment?" is cheering indeed. She remains till the campaign is ended. The G. W. C. T. U. of Maine, Rev. H. C. Munson, deserves to be mentioned in The Union Signal and many other nice places. As we work together the meaningful letters, I. O. G. T. and W. C. T. U., get strangely mixed, and yet the work is in no way retarded, and I am sure if the majority is not so great as it should be it will not be for want of harmonious, earnest action from the friends of temperance. We believe that on September 9, all good people will rejoice. If they do not have reason to, I am about ready to join Mr. Munson in the reply he made to some one who spoke of the possibility of defeat, "In that case I don't want to be living to see it." S.

VERMONT.

We hold our tenth anniversary at Middlebury, September 17, 18, and 19, assisted by Mrs. Hannah W. Smith and Mrs. Emily McLaughlin. We expect to go up to this yearly feast with rejoicing, because of the blessing of God which has crowned the year with good. Nearly fifty new unions and a large increase in our membership are some of the tokens of the divine favor.

Much is due under God to the wise and helpful labors of Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island. She came into the state in May and has been speaking almost continually until the second week in August. About half of the unions organized came in as the immediate result of her labors. Many others planned and prayed and helped to execute but she has been especially blessed in reaching hearts. She delivered more than a hundred addresses and Bible readings, beside forenoon and afternoon parlor meetings, talks before Sabbath schools and in some instances pledging nearly every member, speaking on the Sabbath from pulpits of various denominations, and bringing the subject of temperance before the students in our academies. We might give these facts in detail with many charming incidents, but only eternity can reveal the help which she has been enabled to give to individual souls. Often at a late hour at night, after a day of travel and perhaps two public meetings she might have been found guiding to Christ in a fuller consecration some burdened or aspiring sister.

She says, "My public work was but a small part of my service. I never saw such readiness to work in your state before, nor such a spirit of consecration. Taken all together it has been a wonderful trip, in the number of consecration meetings, good audiences, and careful preparation before hand, in most places; the attention to details on the part of our women, the readiness to assume financial responsibility and the attendant success. There has been an evident going before of the Holy Spirit preparing the way for the seed sowing. The work has been presented and emphasized from a Christian standpoint and the call to the work given in the name of the Master. Scores of the dear women have come to a clearer appreciation of their duty and privilege and to a personal consecration of their life and service to the Master. The Vermont women have come to be inexpressibly dear to me, stand next to my own loyal Rhode Island women."

This with dates and facts is about all that our indefatigable worker could find time to note down. And if I were to begin upon the incidents of her work and attempt to do any justice to the ladies who decorated churches for her to speak in, trained children to sing, engaged choirs, individuals and orchestras to furnish music for her addresses, many columns of your paper would not contain the interesting facts. But our experience has proved conclusively that the work of preparation is just as essential to success as securing a good speaker. That to decorate churches or halls with plants, ferns, mottoes, flags, and cut flowers, is good temperance work. That white ribbon misses with flower trimmed baskets to take collections, make good ushers, too.

I do not think we have had one small audience this summer in a decorated room and with good music prepared for. Make a note of it, sisters, if you are going to pay out your money to anybody to talk temperance in your town, to your money add effort enough to make it a success on your part, then add to your works faith and prayer, and you may be sure of success.

I select out of Mrs. Barney's months here, one day to illustrate her work. It was in June, when all her days were filled and seven Sabbaths in a week were asked for, that circumstances necessitated the cancelling of a Sabbath appointment. She was in the northern part of our state and I had been obliged to refuse her to a place in the southern part where they greatly desired her. Not knowing how she would feel about having her one day of rest, Saturday, occupied with travel, I telegraphed that she would be at —— for the Sabbath. But I followed this telegram with a letter saying that she was very much worn with continuous travel and speaking, and that she must not be allowed to leave her room for any service until evening. Monday as she traveled back to her appointment she wrote to me. "Yesterday was a 'red letter day for the Vermont W. C. T. U. I spoke at C. and had the promise of a union. (The promise was fulfilled too.) Judge W. who was present, said to me, 'I was born with temperance principles. Fifty years ago my father and mother put up over the entrance to their kitchen door this motto, "Anti-rum, anti-tobacco," and it remains there to this day.' Then he brought me to his venerable mother who shook my hand twice; once because I was such a strong temperance woman, and again because I dared to tell the people of their sins. I was invited to dine at the academy in S. R. Met the pupils and had some little talk with them to prepare the way for action. In the evening I addressed a union congregation in the Baptist church. House was filled and extra chairs had to be brought in. I was helped wonderfully and many people stopped to talk over union work. I took about twenty names for a union and the names of several honorary members. Seventeen names for a Young Woman's Union at the academy with honorary members."

The next morning she met twenty three young ladies at the academy and organized a Y. W. C. T. U. and the ladies organized later. Three promising unions brought into line, and much good seed sown, as the result of one day's work under God.

And when I met our dear Mrs. Barney Monday evening, after she had traveled all day, she looked as though she had had a day of rest. Verily the Lord careth for his own. We loved Mrs. Barney for her work, and for herself in former years, but this year we took her to our hearts as our very own. Many a tired and disheartened woman has risen, aided by her prayers, and wise counsel, to the heights of confidence in One mighty to save, and has thus been transformed into a courageous trusting worker. I would love to tell you of our last county institute and the encouragements from it. But saying nothing of the evening addresses and class exercises, and timely instruction, the ladies who had done the most work in preparing for the gathering, said they would have felt amply repaid for it all, had they had only the consecration service which occupied the last hour of the last afternoon.

To some burdened souls it was there verified, "If ye ask anything in my name, I will give it you."

MINNESOTA.

The eighth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota will be held at Winona, Sept. 24-26. Each local union is entitled to five delegates. All officers of unions, including local vice presidents, district vice presidents, and county presidents, are delegates by virtue of office.

Fraternal temperance organizations are invited to send representative delegates. Sister unions in Wisconsin and Dakota are cordially invited to send fraternal delegates.

Our beloved and honored national president, Miss Frances E. Willard, will be at our convention at Winona with her gracious words and godly wisdom and courage to inspire all hearts. Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's helpful private secretary, will also be there to instruct the Young Woman's Unions and to organize and teach the children.

For entertainment address Mrs. G. H. Hallowell, Winona. MRS. H. A. HOBART, Pres.

RHODE ISLAND.

WESTERLY.—I have to report that during the summer months the local union, despite the heat and contrary to the too prevalent fashion among local unions at this season, is keeping up its meetings, and with an attendance which none would have dared to predict a year ago. The membership of the Westerly branch is, I think, nearly one hundred; some twenty attended the last meeting, and an interest in the work was manifested which is very gratifying to the society's friends.

The union has held two public meetings during the summer, one in the Calvary Baptist church, and one in Armory hall. At both the address was given by Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the latest comer upon the W. C. T. U. plattorm, and the wife of a former principal of the Westerly high school. Mrs. Drake belongs to the highest rank of temperance speakers, intellectually; she possesses a logical, well trained and richly stored mind, has evidently had experience as a W. C. T. U. worker, and has unwavering confidence in the ultimate success of the temperance movement. I think the most intelligent hearer must have been instructed by her, and certainly all who heard were afforded an opportunity to receive good, the like of which in form at least, is not an everyday occurrence. She spoke entirely without notes, yet in an easy and self possessed manner.

I wish to express my satisfaction at finding THE UNION SIGNAL so consistent in its attitude toward political prohibition. The weak fear that unless the Republicans again take the reins of government, the country will be ruined, together with the popular bugbear, "If you vote for prohibition, you throw your vote away," seems to influence many eastern temperance Republicans to cling to the party which is working, not for moral reform, but for self perpetuation. ## MICHIGAN.

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Allow me through your columns to call for help in the work among soldiers and sailors for Michigan for which I am state superintendent, Mrs. Sara McClees, of Yonkers, N. Y., being the national superintendent. I wish the names of those who would act in this capacity for the several districts of the state, also counties and localities, that I may be able to report the state well organized by the time of the next convention. Much local work has already been done but not reported to me. Already about fifteen localities have begun the work. Will not more follow? Will not these unions assist me by reporting to me the names of such women as would assist me?

We have within our borders several forts, recruiting stations, G. A. R. and militia companies, and our natural situation should make us the banner state for work among sailors, and when we remember that most of them have ballots, there is great encouragement.

I wish full reports of all work done and will on the receipt of any name forwarded, send all instructions and help in my power to conduct the work. May the Lord call many sisters into this vineyard, and will you not respond as to the Lord?

MRS. A. N. MOFFAT.

LOWELL.—It is due others, as well as justice to the members of our union, to report our success in the work that is so near our hearts. Three years ago last April our union was re-organized by Mrs. Boise. For two years we held our semi-monthly meetings for prayer, asking the Lord for work, and wisdom and strength to execute the same. Our prayers were heard and answered. We little thought, however, that such weak instrumentalities as we were would be so highly honored in accomplishing such a marked reformation in a place so completely under the sway of the evil one.

Lowell contains about 2,000 inhabitants, surrounded by a rich farming country. A large Irish settlement is but a few miles to the north and a German one to the south, so the idea prevailed largely, that to hold the trade of these foreigners, saloons must be plenty and made inviting and popular. Several murders have been committed in the village, one within a year, directly through the influence of strong drink, and it was no difficult task to find a jury to acquit the guilty. For three years the Bible had been removed from our public schools through the influence of Liberalists, and a teacher was forbidden and threatened arrest for repeating scripture. One young lady teacher had the stamina to get council and dare to do right. This brought the fact before the union meeting, and the ladies resolved to go that very night before the school board at its regular meeting and pray that the word of God might be read again in our public schools. It was a dark, rainy night but a delegation went, and what is far better their prayer was granted, but not without strong opposition. Then a petition largely signed, from the other side was presented but unheeded. As much depended upon the new trustees to be elected at the annual school meeting the union appointed a committee to canvass the village for woman voters, and the result was nearly as many women as men voted. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed, and our victory was complete. Then "twenty-three prominent citizens of Lowell" began suit in the circuit court asking for an injunction against the board of education and the teachers in the public schools of the village of Lowell, to restrain them from using the Bible in the schools, or from conducting any religious exercises in the schools, or from permitting the singing of any religious hymns in the schools. Among the reasons cited for their petition, the complainants assert that among the taxpayers and patrons of the school were Hebrews who do not accept the Christian dogmas of religion or the New Testament, and Catholics who do not accept the version of the Bible in use by Protestants, and other citizens who do not accept any Bible as worthy of credence. They further urged that the laws of the state prohibit the use of public moneys to maintain sectarian schools, and that the use of King James' Bible in the schools was practically making them sectarian schools.

The papers were duly served, but the great fire that swept through our village commenced in the rooms of the leading spirit, and so crippled him financially that he had to leave for other parts. The majority of the twenty-three had no children to send to school, and not one of them was a Hebrew or Catholic. This was many months ago, but the commencement of a succession of victories that have crowned the works of the W. C. T. U.. Our aggressive work was commenced through standing committees appointed for special work. One visited the drug stores and found not one of them bonded or keeping books as the law requires. The saloons kept open on the Sabbath, sold to minors, and, unmolested, did as they pleased. The committee on prosecution retained the lawyer they considered best for the work, for six months, or a year if they wished, at the rate of $100 a year, and $10 a day besides for services rendered. I don't think any of us realized what we were commencing, but had faith in God, and we meant to do our best to make the men, high or low, keep the laws they had made.

We commenced this fight with $20, in our treasury, but can say, to the glory of God, that we have never lacked for money and are out of debt.

The druggists complied with the law, and were excused for past neglect. On the first two prosecutions the juries disagreed. One was tried over, and a jury selected from honest farmers, and the women gained. It was carried up to circuit court and the jury stood two for acquittal and ten for conviction. After the last disagreement the saloonists began to open up again, saying that the women had enough for the present. Seven more prosecutions were made, and each one plead guilty, paying costs and fine. The one in circuit court will be tried in September. For the sake of settlement every saloonist in the corporation signed a paper to remove their tables, and abide by the laws in every respect. The results are beyond our expectations. Our membership has increased from 22 to 100, and temperance sentiment is rapidly on the increase.

The Fourth of July services were under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. A large temperance mass meeting was called, and Prof. Dickie of Albion, secured as speaker. Those present were very much delighted with the address, and will give him a large audience when he comes again. We have paid all our dues, contributed to special funds, and paid our lawyers about $200. We have been instrumental in introducing some temperance literature in the school library, and Dorman Steele's Physiology has been purchased for the school board to examine, and will, without doubt, be introduced. A small temperance library, 3,200 tracts on beer, and 500 by Prof. Foster have been purchased for reading and distribution. We are not weary in well doing, but are willing to work and pray, and fight if necessary, until not only our village, but the nation is redeemed from the bondage of rum. S. JENNINGS.

CIRCULAR LETTER.

I wish through the wide-embracing columns of THE UNION SIGNAL to invite the attention of our good Michigan W. C. T. U. members to the claims of the new department of memorial and petition named by the state W.. C. T. U. at its last convention. Ten years of faithful work for the suppression of the traffic in alcoholic drinks in our state, and effort to relieve the distress of its victims, and yet the valley of decision, is not reached. The awakened sense, and conscience of the people is not given opportunity to declare against this abomination, whose stronghold is now and has been since the spring of '75 in our statute book. The months are drawing on in which our law makers will assemble and we must again arouse to the importance of the occasion before us. Whatever line of work for temperance reform we may choose to follow, its hope of final success centers in revised statutes and amended constitution, with which it will be possible to drive the "liquor crime" out, and bring temperance into the citadel. Strong as our enemy is entrenched may we not reasonably hope from present indications that the time is ripe for a great victory. When the enlightened conscience of this people shall find opportunity for expression concerning the loathsome business of making drunkards with, and by the consent of the state? Without doubt the hope of such victory depends much upon the degree of earnestness with which W. C. T. U. members begin and carry forward the efforts to secure this change of our laws. For a beginning in this important line let us as unions, and so far as possible as members, secure immediately the constitutional amendment manual prepared by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of N. W. C. T. U. department of legislation. (Address with 25cts National Temperance Society and Publication house, 58 Reade street, N. Y.) A reading of these well written pages cannot fail to arouse and enliven interest in the question of legislation and make every one feel more sensibly that doings in legislative halls, hurts or helps, as the case may be, every home, every man, every woman, and every child in the commonwealth. The plan suggested by the executive board of W. C. T. U. embraces the securing from organized influential bodies in our state an expression relative to the duty of the legislature to submit to the people for their approval a constitutional amendment that shall prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in Michigan.

This will for the present excuse us from presenting petition for individual signatures, but it will not excuse members of unions from individual interest in the advancement of the work. We wish the leaven of your earnest desire for the triumph of constitutional amendment to both precede and accompany memorial to whatever body we may appeal. The life of every one in our unions has an influence either more or less upon church, school, grange or other association of persons, and will you see to it that this influence is used to awaken and encourage action favorable to our cause?

Let Michigan's great need and the enchanting prospect of what Michigan would be, relieved permanently from the abomination of the liquor crime be our rousing motive, and together let us agitate until we stir all classes and avail ourselves of every grain of thought and conviction that can help to fill and weigh down the balance for right and truth. Individual thought and earnestness must be the beginning of this, constantly coupled with prayers of faith that the spirit of truth may convince the people, and that Michigan may, in the near future, redeem her early record, and take her place among the states first to prohibit this curse of strong drink.

Plans of direct work will be brought to your attention in due time. For the present, dear sisters, do not neglect the manual referred to above.

JULIA A. UPTON.

MISSOURI.

WINDSOR.—Thinking some word from our W. C. T. U. might be of interest, the society requested me to write for THE UNION SIGNAL, of our prosperity. During the past year a few faithful workers among us have sustained regular meetings, but sometimes their members were so very few, that they were almost discouraged. A temperance Sunday school was kept up a portion of the year. Last week Mr. C. J. Holt came to our aid and for nearly a week has conducted two meetings each day. His audiences steadily increased until our large temperance hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the interest in town was intense. The W. C. T. U. has increased its membership, and we find ourselves reinforced by an enthusiastic Y. W. C. T. U. of twenty-four members, with many more to follow. A Band of Hope was organized numbering forty-two, and the cadets having been decorated with sashes, immediately commenced drilling. We propose to establish a reading room in the near future. Three hundred and twenty-five took the pledge, some of them drunkards, and the morning Mr. Holt left the only drinking place in town, a gallon house, was found to have mysteriously closed its doors. At our annual meeting, August 19, 1884, the following officers were chosen: Mrs. May E. Bailey, president; Miss Flora A. Sanborn, corresponding secretary; Mrs. James Baker, treasurer.

F. A. SANBORN, Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

CONNECTICUT.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut will hold a mass temperance meetings in the opera house at Hartford, the state capitol, September 10th.

Few return tickets have been received on the leading lines of railroads in the state, and we hope to make this the largest gathering of its kind ever held in the land of steady habits.

At nine o'clock a.m., there will be a devotional meeting, continuing one hour. On the arrival of the morning trains the convention proper will begin. After a short introductory address Mrs. Lathrop of Michigan will speak upon the American Home and the American Saloon, followed by Miss Willard upon the broad question of Prohibition. At half past one in the afternoon Mr. Bain will deliver an address, followed by Mrs. Pearson, of England.

Mr. Bain has ten engagements in the state, and Mrs. Lathrop will remain after this meeting to lead a no license campaign, speaking every evening but Saturday, up to the time of the taking of the vote the first Monday in October.

The coming months will be busy ones on account of the presidential election. The men of the state are more or less engrossed with the campaign, but the women of the W. C. T. U. should not neglect their work. It is just as necessary this fall to carry the no license vote in the several towns as it has ever been. It is not enough that the towns in which our local unions are situated give a majority for no license, but we should try to extend our influence to other towns. This is what the state W. C. T. U. is seeking to do by inaugurating this no license campaign, and securing the aid of the few speakers who will address the 10th of September meeting, and visit the more prominent towns in the state.

The object of the meetings to be held this fall is to arouse temperance sentiment, influence the no license vote, and thereby through the votes of the various towns make the state prohibitory, at least in sentiment.

At the semi-annual convention held in June, it was voted to employ a state organizer, and a lady was secured who will, we feel assured, abundantly fill the place. Her work will begin at once, after the meeting to be held in Hartford.

Every member of the W. C. T. U. should do her utmost to extend the knowledge of this meeting by encouraging the inspection of a notice of it in her town or county paper, and by asking the pastors of the various churches in her vicinity to give notice of it from their pulpits, and urging an attendance. It will be a long time ere another such opportunity will be given to our people to hear four of our leading temperance orators. Let us then do all we can to inform others. Sincerely yours,

CAROLINE B. BUELL.

THE "MURPHY MISSION" IN EVANSTON.—ITS STORY TOLD BY ONE OF THE GIRLS, ALSO BY ONE OF THE WORKERS.

Has any one written THE UNION SIGNAL of our "Murphy week"? It seems to me that the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will be intersted to hear something of the work in Evanston, and of the several organizations which were started during theweek that Mr. Edward Murphy spent with us; his mission, he called it. The first we knew of Mr. Murphy was that he was advertised to lecture in one of our churches on a Sunday evening, about a month ago. Most of the people had never seen him, and I think they went to hear him more because he was "the son of his father," than for any other reason, at first; if so, Mr. Edward had his chance to retaliate, for, when his father spoke on the following Sunday, several people were heard to remark afterward that they had been anxious to hear Mr. Francis because he was "the father of his son." Mr. Murphy spoke again on Monday evening and won the hearts of his large audience by his pleasant manner, and irresistible talent for story telling; his brogue was so perfect that every one could see very plainly that, if he had not the honor of being a native of his own country, at least, he had had the benefit of some of the advantages which that country affords. At the close of the meeting according to his usual custom, Mr. Murphy gave the invitation to come forward, and sign the pledge. His father was advertised to speak on Tuesday, but was detained by illness until Wednesday evening, when he gave us a short, but very characteristic talk. On Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Edward Murphy, with the help of Miss Anna Gordon, organized a Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which started with about twenty members, and now numbers between forty and fifty. It will be worth while for me to tell you about this union and of its different departments, which even in so short a time have done work the results of which are beginning to tell. The union comprises three departments, the flower mission, the social committee, and the department for juvenile work, and none of these have been idle. The flower mission sends between forty and fifty bouquets to the mission in Chicago, for distribution among the hospitals and jails. The part of our work which has been the most enjoyable in a social way, was the reception given to Mr. Murphy about a week ago. One hundred and seventy-five invitations were issued by the Y. W. C. T. U. The reception was held at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bradley, whose daughters are our strongest workers, kindly opened for our use. The grounds were brilliantly lighted, and as the evening was warm, those who desired, promenaded on the lawn. Many of the guests remained until a late hour, which showed that they enjoyed themselves quite as plainly as anything could; and we have Mr. Murphy's word for it, that the evening was a pleasant one. The juvenile work department have organized a band of children, who are known as "The Loyal League." They have weekly meetings, under the excellent supervision of Miss McDowell, who provided a very original entertainment last week, in the shape of a water melon party. Mr. Murphy's work in Evanston closed with the Sunday following its commencement when we were so fortunate as to have Miss Frances Willard and both the Murphys with us. Of course, the best part of Mr. Murphy's mission were the two thousand signatures for the pledge, and the awakening, which we hope will be lasting, to the fact that there is a need for earnest temperance work in Evanston.

KATE.

THE WORKER'S STORY.

I am sure, dear editor, you have not willingly overlooked Evanston in casting your watchful eye over your editorial kingdom, but you have left us and our good work out entirely, and for others' sake we want to tell of the blessed results from the Murphy mission held here a month ago. The work was begun by the "women of faith," the synonym of the women of the W. C. T. U.

With very little money and plenty of work on their hands some doubted the wisdom of taking a new and heavy responsibility. As is the habit of these wise women, they called a meeting for prayer, and at the close of the meeting they took the responsibility from God and trusting in Him the Murphy mission was inaugurated on Sunday afternoon by Mr. Thomas Edward Murphy. The meeting was small. Mr. Murphy looked young for so serious a work, but he was full of hope and he and the good women prayed again, and that night in our largest church was held the first public meeting. It was a good meeting, a few signing the pledge who had never done so before, and many Christians tied on the blue ribbon to strengthen the work. Monday evening the wisdom of the W. C. T. U. that is born of love, was shown by the choir of young people, mostly those who had never been identified with total abstinence work, but had been firm believers in the principle.

These young people became enthused and not only sang the hymns to God's glory but labored for the cause by inviting others to come to the meetings and by giving to Mr. Murphy and his father their kind encouraging words. This fresh material gave new life to a work that had gone on in our village for years. And each night during the week our eyes were rested by seeing bright, happy faces of young ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, coming up side by side with those whose lives have been blighted by intemperance.

At the end of this week that had brought cheer and fresh courage to many, a grand climax was proposed and carried out. Miss Willard and Mr. Francis Murphy spoke Sunday evening, the enthusiastic young people sang from their hearts, and a collection was taken that made the doubters promise never to doubt again. This closed the mission but "the truth goes marching on."

The following week Mr. Murphy Jr., and Miss Gordon organized a Y. W. C. T. U. of fifty members, from the best young women in our village, young ladies who not only are well educated and of a social position requiring them to give a good deal of attention to society's demands, but who are earnest Christians and proud of being identified with the work of total abstinence.

These girls are "wise as serpents," and if you could see our flower mission committee you would exclaim, "Yes, and as harmless as doves."

They said we will give Mr. Thomas Edward Murphy a reception, and while expressing to him our grateful friendliness we will at the same time draw society by a dainty esthetic chain nearer to a subject she proposes to pass by, and we will continue to draw her by these chains she has used so successfully herself, until she finds herself landed, she knows not how, within the safe and peaceful waters of total abstinence.

Mrs. Francis Bradley not only offered her house, where all the young folks love to go, and feel to home, but she and her daughters made the affair their own, and nothing could have been prettier and more complete than it was. This new union of characters is so full of suggestions for work in every line that it was hard to choose the neediest and wisest work.

The juvenile committee have sixty children in charge, and to understand how well they know how to win and hold these girls and boys you ought to have seen the water melon party given them one afternoon last week. The afternoon was perfect, the children gay and full of

DEPARTMENT OF HEREDITY.

To the State Superintendents of Heredity, and to all interested in the work in unorganized States:

DEAR SISTERS: — Will you please send me your state report of Heredity work for the year by the 15th of September, if possible.

Give at least approximately, the number of heredity institutes and mothers' meetings held, heredity Bible readings, chalk talks, kindergarten and Band of Hope lessons, young women's club formed for this study, prizes offered by unions and individuals for essays in medical and other colleges and public schools upon inherited effects of alcohol, tobacco, etc.

Papers presented by physicians at medical associations upon these topics, sermons preached, lectures given in schools and colleges, and to public gatherings and local unions. Also articles in newspapers bearing upon heredity, also any other work accomplished or plans laid.

I am organizing a national bureau of heredity statistics for our aid in private scientific researches. I am also arranging for the publication of a journal of heredity which will give the most reliable and latest scientific researches into heredity by our best men and women scientists.

fun, the young ladies anxious to make their guests feel at ease, and the twelve melons perfect ones.

The social committee have in their plans drawing room meetings, musicals and many other charming social attractions to arrest the thought of our society people.

A fair is in preparation, and all this is beside and annexed to the monthly meeting held at the different churches.

A paper on the effects of alcohol on the human systemwas read by Mrs. Stannard at the August meeting. The subject of alcohol in all of its phases will be discussed during the winter.

I have neglected to tell you who were chosen officers for this beautiful union, and I leave this for the last that their names may be remembered by other workers: Mrs. Lewis C. Talmadge, president; Mrs. Frank Elliott, first vice president; Miss Blanchard, corresponding secretary; Miss Mamie Bradley, treasurer.

You may expect to hear from this union in the future, for it has a noble work to do and its members recognize this fact and are happy at the prospect of working for others and helping themselves.

THIRTEENTH DISTRICT ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of the 13th congressional district will hold their annual convention in Jacksonville September 11 and 12, 1884. Great efforts have been made by the president and officers of this district to have this convention a great success. It will not be only a delegated meeting, for a general invitation has been extended to all those who are interested in temperance work. There will be noted speakers from abroad, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, of Ohio, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Missouri, and others. This meeting will have the advantage of being held during the session of the national Prohibition camp meeting, which will add much to the interest and also afford the advantage of reduced rail road rates.

Brothers and sisters of the 13th district we want to meet you all on this occasion. Let us consider the duty of cleansing the home from the sin of alcohol, the very greatest of home duties, to be attended to at home and abroad.

MRS. S. J. STRONG, Sec.

FOURTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The third annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the fourth district, was held at Lake Bluff, August 20. Miss Helen L. Hood, the president, in the chair. The day was one of rare interest, addresses being delivered by many prominent workers in the temperance cause. Miss M. A. West, state president, showed very conclusively the importance of temperance being taught in our public schools. She advocated temperance in all things and deprecated the system of cramming practiced by too many teachers and parents. Mrs. E. B. Harbert spoke on the subject of "Temperance in Politics" and warmly advocated woman suffrage.

Miss Hood spoke out loudly in favor of prohibition, and said that it was to the Prohibition party that woman must look for her greatest help.

Mrs. Zimmerman's lecture on "Ways that are Dark," held up in a very dark light the nefarious practices of liquor dealers, too often aided by unprincipled government officers. A temperence scrap bag, consisting of piths and points on the temperance question as clipped from various sources, was read by Mrs. C. F. Lockwood.

The secretary's annual report showed a great increase of interest on the subject of temperance throughout the district during the past year, and a flattering outlook for the future. At the beginning of the year there were in the district, thirteen W. C. T. U.'s, six Bands of Hope, and one industrial school. There are now sixteen unions, four of which are Y. W. C. T. U.'s, twelve Bands of Hope, two industrial schools, and one temperance school. The total membership at the beginning of the year was 478; it is now nearly 700. Over $2,000 has been expended for temperance work during the year. The district has a most excellent plan of work by which it is hoped much good can be accomplished and great and beneficent results reached in the near future. Many who went to the convention lukewarm, came away pledged, in their hearts at least, to work for prohibition. The annual election of officers resulted in retaining the officers of the previous year, viz.: Miss Helen L. Hood, president; Mrs. C. F. Lockwood, secretary; Mrs. H. J. Berry, treasurer. Mrs. Lockwood was chosen as delegate, and Mrs. Hull alternate, to the national convention which meets at St. Louis, October 27.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett will read a paper on "Heredity," at state convention. A rare treat will be given the delegates in the hearing of this.

—It is of the utmost importance that the letters of inquiry sent out regarding the nominees for the legislature should receive prompt attention, and replies be sent as requested to Mrs. M. B. Willard as early as possible. Please let there be no delay.

—Unions will please order freely of Leaflet No. 7, "The Story of a Great Conviction," and the four page "Temperance in Public Schools." They are sent to the unions in our state for mere price of postage, 10 cents per 100. They should be circulated in every public meeting held by the union, at state fairs, and other assemblies.

—The following railroads offer reductions of one and one-third fare to those attending the state convention, full fare to be paid going, and the reduction given on the return trip: Illinois Central, Chicago and Northwestern, (from Chicago, Dixon and Freeport), Rock Island and Pacific, Chicago and Alton, (from Washington, Bloomington or Delavan), Peoria, Decatur and Evansville, Indiana, Bloomington and Western. The Illinois, Midland, Peoria and Pekin, and Central Iowa, will sell round trip tickets.

NEW YORK.

WYOMING COUNTY.—This county has been favored with two stirring Prohibition camp meetings during the month of August. The one on Camp Wesley of the M. E. church, opened July 31st with a lecture by Dr. Talmadge on High License, or the half-loaf, to a large audience. During the week the platform was occupied by Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Mrs. Yeomans, Mrs. St. John, and Mrs. Boole, of Brooklyn. Also John Sobieski, ex-Gov. St. John, Dr. Boole and Dr. Dorchester. The meeting was all that could have been desired from such an array of talent, continued one week, and was followed by the annual national Prohibition meeting on the assembly grounds of Messrs. Mead and Stearns, which continued ten days. Many of the above named speakers were present at this meeting. Beside these was the Rev. Mr. Price, of North Carolina, Mr. Finch, G. W. Bain, Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge, Prof. S. S. Hopkins, who gave two lectures on political economy, and Dr. Purdy and Dr. Mann on alcohol, physiology and hygiene, Chaplaine Searles and Mrs. Fixen. Many of the lectures were worth reporting in full, but space only permits us to say the meetings were a glorious success, and we believe thousands of interested listeners will testify to the fact at the coming election.

One day was given to the county W. C. T. U. Mrs. Burt, state president, and Mrs. S. M. Wicks, county president, had charge of the meeting. Rev. Mr. Mead gave a very cordial address of welcome to the assembly grounds, which was responded to by Mrs. Prout and Mrs. Wicks. Addresses were given by Mrs. Burt, Miss Dr. Greene, and Mrs. Decker, and Mrs. Wicks, Mrs. Gardinier and Mrs. Peringo conducted black-board exercises and children's meetings.

The annual election of the county W. C. T. U. occurred at this meeting. Mrs. S. M. Wicks of Attica was renominated county president, Mrs. C. S. Jeffers, East Troy, secretary; Mrs. F. B. Lovell, treasurer, Attica; Sunday school secretary, Mrs. Ida M. King Perry; temperance literature secretary, Mrs. E. W. White, Castile.

SKANEATELES—W. C. T. U. has felt discouraged in the failure of some liquor suits, but the foundation of a Y. W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Fannie Barnes of New York, in memory of her mother, Mrs. Allis, has inspired them with fresh courage to press onward in their work.

HOMER.—W. C. T. U. enjoys THE UNION SIGNAL, is trying to distribute literature regularly among employes. We enjoy spiritual meetings.

SPENCER CAMP MEETING.—This is one of the twenty camps in St. John circuit. Here Gov. St. John, Col. Bain and Dr. Purdy gave earnest lectures from their standpoints, while W. C. T. U. representatives were there in Mrs. Fixen, Mrs. C. H. St. John, and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, who delighted their audiences. It was indeed good to be there. Spencer union had been much disheartened, but seems inclined to reorganize, and turn their attention to juvenile work under the stirring appeals of Mrs. Lathrap, who formed the union some three years ago.

CORTLAND.—W. C. T. U. seems likely to accomplish good results. They have been organized but a few weeks, but have taken up several lines of work, among them scientific temperance instruction, literature, juvenile and press.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE W. C. T. U. of Bethany, Mo., held the largest ratification meeting of the season in honor of the nomination of St. John and Daniel.

CAINSVILLE (Mo.) W. C. T. U. organized last October with twenty-seven members, evidently has a mind to work, as its new building, to contain a hall and library will soon testify.

WARREN county (Ind.) fair ground is to be without its customary beer stand this year, and the directors have granted the W. C. T. U. the privilege of having an address upon temperance.

ENCOURAGING words are these from Rev. Dr. G. A. Nunnally, of Rome, Ga., corresponding secretary of the Home Mission Board of the southern Baptist church: "I need not tell you that I sympathize with you noble women in this great, grand, good and glorious reformation, revolution, and renovation of our customs, society and civilization. I am talking, working and praying for the same. May God bless and prosper you all."

A TEMPERANCE picnic was held at Cheney Valley, Ill., camp ground, August 15, by the temperance people of Rockford and Belvidere. After dinner the president of the Rockford reform club called the people to order. Telling speeches were made by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, followed by Dr. Dunn, Rev. Mr. Reeves and others. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry spent Sabbath 17 in Belvidere, spoke in the M. E. church in the morning, at 3 p. m. at temperance headquarters, in the evening at the Presbyterian church to a crowded house.

IN one of his recent lectures in Louisiana the Hon. W. H. Goodale, having incidentally mentioned the name of Miss Frances E. Willard, paused to pay her the following glowing tribute.

"God bless this noble woman! Others of her sex have charmed the world by their matchless beauty and won them by their great intellectual gifts; others still are enrolled in the long line of heroines who have devoted their lives to the glorious work of relieving suffering humanity and ministering to human necessities. These are recorded upon the scroll of the great and the noble who have helped the individual up to a higher life. But I count this woman the noblest of them all, since, the equal of the greatest in her individual gifts and benefactions, peerless in the grandeur of her personal character, she strikes at the very root of humanity's ills and raises up the individuals by elevating the entire race. So, above the great and the mighty that shine in golden characters on that azure firmament where those are written who have blessed humanity, she has set her name in a glittering galaxy of glowing gems that will sparkle in the pure sunlight of a universal gratitude so long as there exists light to reflect virtue or capacity in man to appreciate the good the beautiful and the true."

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS

KING DODDS and his employers say: "Your license law is all you want, if only you enforce it." A Presbyterian elder, writing from Oakfield, N. Y., remarks that "experience is worth several tons of talk." They enforced the law vigorously for three or four years: "What was the result? It was just what any man with a head on his shoulders might have foreseen. It turned the business from an illegal into a legal channel. They took out licenses wherever selling without one, and conformed to the law within gunshot range. We could not see that it at all diminished liquor selling or drinking. It made radical prohibitionists of all who engaged in this movement. We concluded it was utterly useless to attempt to suppress intemperance under a license law."

THE ladies of the W. C. T. U. in Saratoga, Santa Clara county, California, are evidently alive and in good working condition. They are purchasing a St. John and Daniel banner, and organizing a glee club to sing stirring Prohibition songs during the campaign. Racks have also been put up in which to keep temperance literature for free distribution. Arrangements have also been made to have Mrs. Skelton, the well known German worker, with them soon. This is the same union we think which had public watering troughs placed along the roads so that teamsters would not be obliged to stop in front of a saloon to water their horses.

WE hear it talked that the Prohibition movement is only to injure the Republican party, as there are but few Prohibitionists among the Democrats. That may be true in the north, but we know it is not so in the south. Arkansas is intensely Democratic, and no state in the union has better temperance legislation. It stands in the front, and we are proud of it. We feel assured that the great mass of the Democratic party are not connected with the opponents of Prohibition.—Southern Exchange.

MURDER is no greater crime than persistent neglect of physical diseases that certainly lead to the early graves of your loved ones. Consumption is an awful fiend, but if Oxygen treatment, manufactured by Dr. Peiro, 85 Madison street, Chicago, is inhaled while yet there is hope, life may be prolonged many happy years. ## THE DRINK QUESTION IN RUSSIA

Between 1863 and 1867 inclusive, the brandy traffic was burdened with imposts amounting to 100 millions of rubles. Those imposts for the last four years now reach the sum of about 150 millions, showing an increase of fifty per cent. All this, of course, means an increase in the price of intoxicating liquors to those who consume them, yet somehow or other the consumers have risen to the occasion, bad as the times are, and the flow of spirits is even greater than before. Ten quarts of brandy is now the annual rate of consumption for every man, woman, and child in the empire. Every 224 men have a whisky shop to themselves in the country districts, including villages; in the towns, drinking establishments are provided in the proportion of one to every 120 inhabitants; in parts of Podolia, Volhynia, and the Ukraine there are places where as many as ten beer shops may be reckoned to a single village. That the measures contemplated by the government will really wean the population to any noticeable extent from its fondness for vodka by no means follows from the comprehensiveness of the measures, or from the flourish of trumpets with which they have been heralded. To treat the whole of the Russian people as having a natural penchant for liquor would be a mistake. In the middle and upper classes of society intoxicating drinks are very sparingly used indeed. "Morning nips," are unknown. "Liquoring up" is no essential part of the formality of a bargain in business, and if life is sometimes thought not worth living in this country, it is not because a good half of it has been spent in the atmosphere of a bar parlor. Most of the beer and whisky shops in Russia have been devised, not for the convenience of the tradesman, but for the use of the artisan and the peasant, and it is to these classes, one would think, that government measures should be most directed. The misfortune, however, for both town laborer and country laborer is not only that there are no philanthropists in Russia engaged as in the west of Europe, in combating various social evils by well-equipped social organizations, but that the national church herself, despite her vast wealth and immense facilities of influencing good for the very classes most concerned, should treat this drink question as one with which she has absolutely nothing to do.—Correspondence London Globe.

SAID a sister at the meeting for prayer on behalf of the recent conventions, held by the Central Indianapolis W. C. T. U.: "To my thought the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has seemed the high priestess of the nation. As such we have come today into the very holy of holies to inquire of the Lord what He will have the Christian people of this nation to do. With a power which silenced the words of prayer on my lips, there has come to me the command, and I perceive that to others it has come also: 'Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward.' Our brethren, the people are expecting to hear the 'Thus saith the Lord,' from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Shall we fear—dare we refuse to declare the Divine command?"

In an English paper, we see a letter from Mr. William Hoyle, the great statistician, who visited Canada a short time ago. Before going home, he passed through the state of Maine, and here is his experience: "I went about Portland and the surrounding district a good deal during the four days I was there, but did not see the least indication of liquor selling or drinking. It is true the law is violated, but not so much as other laws, as, for instance, the education law, nor more than our liquor laws in England, if so much. The observance of the Sabbath, and the moral tone of Portland, are far, very far, ahead of any of the American towns we have seen. Nor do I know a British town that will compare with it."

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the VIGOR it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses HAIR of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

THE VALUE OF ABSTINENCE.

People accustomed to strong drink, and who call themselves moderate, when they are disturbed by any mental cause are often given to go a little over the moderate mark. They may be very temperate indeed, as they think; but when something agitates and worries them, then they take a glass of wine more, or a glass of whisky, or a little brandy. They fall back upon an agent for which the abstainer never has the desire. If the abstainer is worried or fatigued, or subjected to physical shocks, he never thinks of resorting to alcohol. If he be subjected to anything that upsets his mental balance in the sense of fear, he does not desire to take alcohol, but is saved from much of that worry and anxiety which no doubt tends largely to reduce the value of life. I happened one day to be at the Marble Arch, and my carriage was following me. The large carriage dog ran away. I caught him with difficulty, and he pulled me down with great violence against a hansom cab, and I received a scalp wound four inches long, and down to the bone. A gentleman told me that the blood was spurting from the wound, and I put my finger to the spot, and stopped it as best I could. Dr. Symes Thompson was passing, and he came up and took me home, calling on the way on Dr. Warton Hood, and they most carefully and nicely stitched up the wound. I had stopped the bleeding by my own compression. Under ordinary circumstances, a man would have taken brandy, from the loss of blood. If he had done so, he would have had a little fever, followed by a great deal of depression, and then, perhaps, a little more brandy, after which he would have gone to bed, and been in bed a week or more, and possibly, if at all unhealthy, erysipelas would have set in, from which he might have died, and he would have gone to swell the mortality of his insurance office. In my case, I wanted nothing alcoholic; and as soon as the wound was dressed, and everything put right, and I had been made respectable looking, I recommenced my work, answered my letters, next day went to the houses of parliament to give evidence before a committee, and never changed my course of life in the least. It was simply a matter of being free from any desire to take alcoholic stimulants to meet such a shock. Total abstainers generally, subjected to a similar accident, would obtain the same advantages. Here, then, we come upon the mental influence of alcohol, and see that by taking away the risks incurred through its action, there is again a reason why there should be for abstainers a longer life.—Dr. W. B. Richardson.

COLONEL BURNABY, in his "Ride to Khiva," tells how the right to sell liquor in a certain Russian village was sold by auction. This fetched nearly $2,500, which was divided among the population. The money was readily paid, but it is said the publican got it back in about three days, as it was all spent in his shop.

MILWAUKEE last year produced 1,066,030 barrels of beer, or 86,290 barrels more than the year before. The Milwaukee Prohibitionist asks: "There is in this city one saloon for every twenty-six voters, and as half the people do not drink, every thirteen drunkards must support one saloon. How many women take in washing to support the thirteen drunkards who support each a saloon?"

HORRIBL!—Just think of it—over 100,000 people die in the United States alone from throat and lung diseases, many of whom could have been cured by the inhalation of that wonderful, pleasant remedy—the Oxygen treatment. Send a stamp to Dr. Peiro, 85 Madison street, Chicago, who will send you a nice book of 120 pages, with four colored plates—free.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO, Troy, N. Y.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 35. CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 11, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE constitutioual amendment putting prohibition into the constitution of Maine was adopted on Monday last by a majority of thousands—exact figures not known at this writing.

MR. BLAINE takes pains to state to the country that he did not vote for the amendment, because he believes the prohibition question should not be intruded upon national politics. We scarcely see the relevancy of this objection to action in his capacity as a citizen of Maine.

MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP gives all the pungency of a bitter truth to the statement that, a people who license the liquor traffic give a legal life to the saloon and are responsible for the evils wrought by it; and that there is one thing from which the government cannot defend its subjects, and that is the power of legalized rum.

IN all modesty and yet with strong desire that the truth may have free course and be glorified, we ask our readers to give attention to the article on our editorial pages entitled "The Governmental Liquor Traffic." It is our reason for the faith that is in us, our basis of conviction that the national evil of drink and the drink traffic demands national treatment and remedy.

TO AVOID railway restrictions upon the transportation of illegal merchandise, the brewers of Iowa have set out to deliver beer in wagons to any part of the state. This will give new zest to the old song "Wait for the Wagon," and emphasize the truth that civilization does civilize. The iron horse will not haul liquors in violation of law.

A private letter from our national superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, says: "I am a Prohibition party woman out and out. Any party that takes such a stand concerning women ought to have the support of every enlightened woman, and when to this is added prohibition, and all other pure and noble things I do not see how our women can withhold their support. I have prepared a leaflet on the elections which I propose to send to all our unions on my own responsibility."

UNWITTING testimony to the benefits of prohibition may be found in Governor Glick's speech before the convention of the Kansas Democracy. He says that, "during the last eighteen months not less than 250,000 intelligent, industrious and worthy people have chosen Kansas as their home." That is to say that the percentage of Kansas immigration has been one-fifth of the entire immigration of the country, which speaks as loudly and as well for the attractions to settlers in Kansas as any state could ask.

THE Jews, it is said, are not affected by the cholera epidemic. Sanitary law was a part of God's law to the chosen people and the observance of this law protects them. It is our misfortune and our sin that we do not always, in the Christian dispensation, remember that Christ said, "I came not to destroy the law but to fulfill."

PARISIANS consume upon an average over a pint of wine per diem, each man, woman and child of them. Eli Perkins says of them that, "they are all sallow, never a rosy cheeked girl to be seen and even the babies have a sickly look." He urges the substitution of a pint of milk as the daily beverage.

A GERMAN voice is heard from Kansas, saying that prohibition is a blessing. Here is its exact utterance:

Like most Germans I was very much opposed to prohibition before it was adopted in our state. Indeed my aversion was so great that I earnestly contemplated selling my farm and turning my back on Kansas. At that time I held it to be a great shame to live in a state where drinking was not free. Fortunately for me I could not sell. I say fortunately, because I have since found that I was greatly mistaken. The state instead of going down, as was prophesied by the liquor party, has experienced the height of prosperity. It was said that immigration would cease if prohibition was adopted, but the reverse took place. Immigration increases every day, and the price of land has raised in value considerably. Farmers are in better circumstances than ever before. Any man who opens his eyes can be convinced of this fact. Before prohibition was introduced, drinking and loafing were going on at every corner. Money was scarce and credit was the watchword of all business. But now almost everything is sold for cash at public auctions and paid for on the spot, which is certainly good proof that prohibition does no harm.

IT is very possible that the twentieth century will have unlooked for work to do. The tyranny of representatives in a republican government must sometime receive a severe rebuke, and it begins to look as if that time were near. American citizens are weary of petitioning legislatures to mend certain grave errors in government, and now we learn that the Swiss republic is afflicted with a legislature very like our own. The people petitioned for restrictive legislation concerning the liquor traffic, setting forth the fact that in no country is the per capita consumption of alcohol greater than in Switzerland; that the traffic in, and the use of brandy is rapidly increasing, and that misery, disease and death are the natural and dreadful consequences, statements that ought to move a body set apart to think, plan and act for the welfare of the whole people.

The federal council however refused to grant restrictive legislation, the chief ground of its refusal being the revenue of thirty thousand dollars accruing to the government from the drink traffic. Ever since thirty pieces of silver bought the betrayal of the world's Redeemer the clink of silver coin has stilled all holy voices, all piteous appeal.

America or Switzerland, it is all the same.

WE give our readers the benefit of a variety of opinions this week. Miss Armstrong writes up "the other side" of the drink question, or more properly, as she herself entitles her paper, the drink question from another point of view. It is one from which all of us take observations, but not all are so frank in giving them to the public. In our pages of correspondence, will be found a letter from our superintendent of legislative work, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, which evidences most clearly the freedom in which the National W. C. T. U., places both state and local organizations. As was stated in the address of the national officers, the "influence" pledged at the last national convention, to the party furnishing the best embodiment of prohibition principles, is not obligatory upon states when such influence would be detrimental to state interests. The Iowa W. C. T. U. very naturally and very properly "stands by" the Republican party of the state. The only criticism that can be made upon its position, is its attitude toward the National Republican party whose candidate for president has declared that it would be "a great beneficence" to make the revenue from spirituous and malt liquors, (consequently the traffic therein), "a permanent resource" of the nation, which "beneficence" Iowa has indignantly repudiated. Mrs. Foster is a consistent believer in state rights and has frequently avowed her conditional adherence to the Republican party, saying upon the platform at the recent temperance camp meeting at Franklin Grove, Ill., that if she were an Illinois woman she must inevitably be with the Prohibition party. THE UNION SIGNAL as the organ of the National W. C. T. U. is the mouthpiece of Iowa as well as every other state in the union, and next week we shall publish a letter from Mrs M. J. Aldrich president of the Iowa W. C. T. U., upon this same phase of Prohibition politics. It is our pleasure however to note that no other state has protested against, or dissented from the Detroit resolution.

THE topic of THE UNION SIGNAL'S Sunday school lesson for the third quarterly Sunday will be, The Story of Deborah. Orders should be sent at once.

THE CRYSTAL WAVE IS RISING.

DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

Dear Union Signal:—I send you a little St. John song which I hope will please you. I have composed a melody for it and sing it sometimes. Is not a great cyclone forming in Kansas? Let it sweep on! Or is not the Lord creating a Red Sea path for us to go through dry shod? Yours to help drive out America's third great oppression. Dwight Williams.

I.

The crystal wave is rising
That bears the good ship on,
The good ship Prohibition,
Commanded by St. John;
The surge is onward rolling,
Let all the land give heed,
We've called the Kansas hero
Our armies all to lead.
The crystal wave is rising
That bears the good ship on,
The good ship Prohibition,
Commanded by St. John.

II.

He fought upon the prairies,
And broke the tiger's jaw,
Till Kansas swung her banner
Protected by the law.
All hail the Kansas hero!
We've nailed the colors fast
Of brave St. John, and Daniel
The daring, to the mast.
The crystal wave is rising
That bears the good ship on,
The good ship Prohibition,
Comm nded by St. John.

III.

The stars and stripes dishonored,
And held by shameless hands,
Must from their grasp be wrested;
Come forth ye loyal bands!
Put down the great oppression,
Write on the nation's flag
The watchword Prohibition
To float o'er lea and crag.
The crystal wave is rising
That bears the good ship on,
The good ship Prohibition
Commanded by St. John.

A PLEA FOR PROHIBITION.

S. J. WEAVER.

There are many who object to the prohibition of the liquor traffic on the ground that such an act would be subversive of personal liberty. Government, they say, has no right to legislate as regards what one shall drink; this matter should be left to the individual judgment; each person should judge for himself and should control himself in this respect. As well might this be said of many things relating to the appetites and passions in regard to which government does legislate and which it endeavors to control.

This theory might do, perhaps, if individuals possessed no hereditary biases of appetite and no cultivated ones, arising from the ignorance and injudiciousness of parents and friends in their infancy and early years, and if they were not made subject to temptation, or had sufficient moral force to hold at all times all appetites and passions to their legitimate uses; but every one knows that such is not the case. It is a law of our being, acknowledged of old, that both good and evil tendencies, good and evil desires, dispositions and habits are transmitted from parent to child from generation to generation. It is also a fact which cannot be disputed that a large number of parents are very poor teachers in a moral and physical point of view to their children. We all know from experience and observation that many of the very best born, surrounded and disciplined, are very far from perfect in the control of their appetites and passions. It is no very uncommon thing for those even, who set themselves up as public teachers of the pure, self-controled Christ and his religion, to be slaves to some debasing habit or to an uncontrolled will. If these things are so under the best circumstances what ought we to expect of the bad born, the evil surrounded, the undisciplined, or those who make no profession of being followers of the blessed Master?

There is a grea lesson in this subject of heredity for all who would become parents; a lesson to make themselves pure and strong in mind soul and body for this sacred relation. It should not be assumed ignorantly, thoughtlessly, reckless of results. How much misery and wretchedness would be saved to their offspring, how much sin to the world, if all who enter the marriage relation realized the obligations they take upon themselves!

At a public meeting of women held in this city some days since a physician stated that in the last five years of her practice there had come to her the cases of fifty young girls of different families attending high school who without any apparent cause, or cause at all adequate to existing conditions, were full of languor and losing vigor and ability to prosecute their studies. This state of things finally led her to decide to go to the fountain sources of their existence to ascertain if the real cause might not lie there, and after thorough investigation she became fully satisfied that in most instances such was the case. She learned that the fathers of sixteen were hard drinkers and that the parents, one or both of twenty-four others were addicted to the use of wine and beer, and that most of the mothers before birth and during the period of nursing, took habitually wine, beer, or quinine as tonics, and this frequently by advice of physicians.

She further stated that these articles were used to a great extent in cities by both men and women as stimulants to the great injury of themselves and their offspring.

Up to this time she had been a disbeliever in prohibition and a strong advocate of moral suasion and the will power as the proper means to overcome the evil of intemperance, but these experiences had converted her and had forced upon her the conviction that "man is his brother's keeper," that society is to a very great extent responsible for the good or bad lives of those who compose it.

And herein lies a great argument in favor of prohibition and also of the necessity of hygienic and scientific instruction upon the nature, use and effects of such stimulants. Neither society nor government has any right to place, keep or allow a great temptation or evil to exist in its midst to destroy the peace, prosperity and lives of its members, to ruin such a vast army of its youth and make wretched, desolate and wicked so many of what would otherwise be happy, Christian homes. Society is organized, laws made, government administered in the interest and for the safety and protection of the whole people. This is our republican idea of government. How then can it consistently or righteously permit a great evil within its borders? much more how can it license such an one?

To see that liquor selling and intemperance are great evils, great crimes even, and should be made such by law we have only to refer to the countless statistics of our own and other countries relating to this subject, which show that three-fourths, and in some places, nine-tenths of all the poverty, crime and degradation is attributable directly or indirectly to them. Society hesitates not to make laws to rid itself of little nuisances, utterly insignificant as compared with these great nuisances, to call them by no harsher name. Is it legislating against the rights and liberty of a man any more to say by law that he shall not have the privilege of selling that which debases and ruins morally and physically youth and manhood, which leads them to commit all kinds of crime and taking in return means which mothers and children need for food, clothing and shelter? Is it taking away the rights of a man any more to do this than it is to say by law that his dog which worries his neighbor's sheep shall be killed or that a dog running the city street untaxed shall be shot? Are not youth and men of more value than sheep or a little property? or than the comfort arising from the prevention of a dog nuisance? Shall he who deliberately takes away the bread from a starving boy go unmolested and the boy who, famishing for food, steals a loaf of bread be punished? Shall he who in a fit of drunkenness commits murder be hung and he who continually sold him that which made him drunk go unpunished or be protected by law in doing it? Where have justice and mercy fled? Where is the public conscience?

Oh men! Christian men, fathers, you who so long have had the power why have you not united long ago to create public sentiment against and to make and enforce laws to destroy this terrible wrong? Why have you permitted political and business ambition, selfish appetite, indifference to human good, lack of courage to conquer you? Suffering women have worked single handed and alone for generations against it to little purpose, but at last, thanks to the Heavenly Father, they have found a way to combine mind, heart and physical strength to oppose it and in numberless ways to create public sentiment against it and urge on to making and enforcing laws to its overthrow. They are a great army, conscientious and earnest; trying to be patient, but vigorous and determined never to give over, but if need be to hand the work down to their daughters that they in their turn may carry it forward to its accomplishment. Oh! men, why will you not combine your forces and join them that this great evil may the sooner be eradicated from our fair land?

ANOTHER POINT OF VIEW.

MINNIE W. ARMSTRONG.

What I have to say will no doubt fail to please many whose entire sympathy is with the drunkard. Let no one think that I do not pity a drunkard. I pity him as much as he deserves, but people differ as to what his deserts are.

Given a divine soul, a will to govern his actions, power to be good and true, he wills to be base and low, to degrade himself below the brutes. He expects and demands that mother, sisters, wife and daughters, be pure, chaste, and womanly, while he pollutes them by his mere existence. Ah, yes, I do pity such men, but my pity is mixed with scorn and contempt for those who have no care for anything but the gratification of a debasing appetite.

Some say, Poor fellow, he can't help it! He can't help it? He might have helped it once. No man can say that he was never warned to beware of liquor. How do women help it?

Does any one suppose that no—or very few—women have a taste for liquor? Many love it, but women don't dare get drunk, not even for the first time, for dishonor and disgrace is swift and sure; and just so soon as it is such dishonor and disgrace for a man to be seen drunk, just so soon will the liquor traffic receive a blow from which it will never recover. While we work for prohibition let us make the habit of drinking disgraceful. Perhaps girls will say, How can we refuse attentions from a young man who drinks, when our own brothers do the same? Don't expect other girls to go with your brothers, and let your brothers understand the whys and wherefores. How many young men, even those who get drunk, would be seen on the street with any girl who had once been drunk? Not one! They would shun her as they would the plague. Follow their example, girls.

This thing of girls reforming young men by associating with them has generally resulted in no good. Girls can have more influence by refusing to associate with a drinking man, than by lowering themselves to go with him while he persists in his degrading course.

If a boy gets drunk he is monarch of all he surveys. The entire family aim to please him and shield him from temptation. He must be humored, praised and indulged in every way to keep him from drinking. The girls may get along the best they can; no education, no money, no privileges, for they must be good any way. If they swerve from the path of duty their punishment is certain and sure. But the boy, there is no fear of punishment to keep him straight, and so he must be coaxed to make a man of himself, but if he chooses to make a brute of himself, then mother and sisters are censured by the community because their influence was not stronger than the example of the leading men of the town. He is wept over, prayed over, made into the hero of the hour, thinks himself of considerable more importance than is the boy who never went on a spree. It's a pretty nice thing to get on a drunk once in a while, makes folks think he is "some." The temperance societies notice him; he takes the pledge and is held up as a bright and shining example to his companions, whom he soon rejoins and breaks his pledge. But every one is sorry. "He is such a good-hearted fellow, you know." He is re-obligated, which is wrong, for every time a man breaks his word he weakens his power of resisting the evil, and he ought not to be encouraged to his own ruin. He is pitied and caressed, and in time some loving, credulous girl marries him to bring upon herself a life of misery and to bring children into the world to inherit the father's weakness and degradation. It would be a mercy to her if her friends would burn her to death by a slow fire on her wedding day. No need for me to repeat the story of a drunkard's life, nor to tell of the sufferings of his family. We all know the story, alas too well! But I do say that we, by the course we take, do much to encourage drunkards as well as those who sell them liquor. If it, drunkenness, were treated as a disgrace and a dishonor, for it surely is disgraceful and dishonorable, there would be much less of it. If, when a boy tried his first spree he was punished by law and by society as he deserves to be, he would not repeat the offence, nor would his companions desire to follow his example if he persisted in his course. If a man who got drunk was lodged in jail and kept there a time, not a few hours but a few weeks, and no bail accepted no matter what his standing or business, he would not be in a hurry to "get on a little spree, for the fun of the thing, you know."

Of course I do not mean old drunkards when I speak of saving men from drink. I do not believe in the salvation of an old drunkard. There is no power on earth to save him from a drunkard's grave, and I sometimes am almost tempted to think that the sooner those graves are filled the better for the world in general and some families in particular. This sounds cruel, I know, but when I think of suffering mothers, wives and sisters I can't help it. It is well for us all that > "When the stars are old,

> And the moon is cold,
> And the leaves of the judgment book unfold," we shall be judged and condemned each soul for its own sin, and not for the sins of others. But while we are here let us try to make the souls of others, as well as our own, as free from sin as may be, and as a special work let us try to eradicate that root of all sin, drunkenness.

Edina, Missouri.

AN EXPERIENCE IN THE MATTER OF DRESS.

In the hope that it may help some of God's children who are longing to walk in everything so as to please Him, I desire to speak of what He has taught me with regard to dress; which though in itself so secondary, is a matter of no small importance to Christian women.

The promises of God as to the guidance of His children's minds and inclinations generally are very numerous, and one of the results of this guidance is what we may call spiritual instinct; an inward shrinking from anything inconsistent with or unseemlyfor a Christ-like walk.

I believe my own experience in this matter of dress is a very usual one among Christian women, and that many suffer great loss, as I did, from not recognizing the Lord's voice in their feelings concerning it. In the beginning of my Christian life I was so exclusively interested in the things of eternity, that there seemed no room for thought on such a subject as dress. But later on, when the effects of the new life necessarily spread outward, as well as existed within, I began to feel troubled about my dress, and longed to know just what would be right for me to do about it.

My friends being for the most part Christians, I relied on their explanation of the scripture teaching on the subject, and took it for granted that their practice was right; although I had many secret misgivings, and often wished that the course which seemed to me the only right one had been more explicitly insisted upon in the Bible. The longer I lived the more I shrank, sick at heart, from the fashions and ornaments of the world, which, alas! seemed to be so equally shared by the church; but my confidence in the piety and judgment of my friends, and my want of understanding the exact meaning of the scripture rules, kept me from yielding to the spiritual instinct which I now believe was the voice of God to my soul. And I cannot but think that were Christian women to be honest, the majority of them would confess to the same impressions.

All this was felt before I knew anything practically of entire consecration to God, or an hourly life of faith. But when the Lord in infinite love led me to receive Jesus as my all and in all, and to yield my whole self up to His control, I began to feel more strongly than ever that the outward conformity to the world, which appeared in my own dress and that of most other Christian women that I knew, was utterly opposed to the spirit of such commands as "coming out from the world and being separate," "walking as Christ walked," "letting our light shine before men," "not being conformed to this world," and numerous other similar directions. And I felt that even had there been no distinct commands on the subject of the dress of Christian women, these principles ought surely to be enough. But I still hesitated to make myself singular among other and better Christians, until I could understand just what the teaching of scripture implied. I therefore prayerfully examined the two well known passages on the subject, and determined to abide by the result. And I found the impressions already made on my mind by the Spirit entirely coincided with what seemed to me the plain and obvious meaning of the texts in question. In short, I believe our gracious Lord has condescended to give us very clear indications of His will on this subject, and that we are distinctly warned against the outward adorning of "gold or pearls or costly array." And to avoid these things, which honestly considered are very comprehensive, would bring about a marked changed in the dress of the large majority of Christian women. For surely the correct reading of these passages means, that the outward adorning is to be exchanged for "the inward ornament of a meek and quiet spirit which in the sight of God is of great price." And I feel entirely convinced, both from observation and my own experience, that no outward thing so separates a woman from the world, and so delivers her from its ensnaring influences, as this separation in dress; and that the laying aside of all that is doubtful in the matter is to us the removal of many a snare and hindrance, and does in a wonderful manner seem to leave the soul free to receive and follow the Lord's leading on every other point, besides giving an undoubted strong influence over others.

As regards the guidance of the Spirit as to details, I would only say that if we are troubled about any article of dress we must at once bring it to the Lord and ask Him to teach us. And if after thus committing it to Him we are still in doubt about it, the only safe course is to give it up, giving the Lord's side the benefit of the doubt; for we are plainly taught that he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, for whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

It must never be forgotten that this blessed life of union with Christ involves prompt obedience to His commands, and that the soul cannot rest in Him where there is failure to obey. We cannot give ourselves to God to live in His will, and have a single reserve at any time without getting into trouble. The only way to maintain an untroubled spirit and a straight walk, is to yield to His blessed teaching at every step.

My great desire, however, in putting these thoughts before others, is not so much to press the duty, as to set forth the privilege we have in being called to such an entire dedication, both within and without, to our loving and beloved Lord, that even in such an insignificant matter as our apparel He should condescend to take an interest and give us directions. It seems so wonderful and so delightful that we may even dress for Him, as well as speak or sing for Him. And to know it to be our calling and privilege so to live in God's will as that it should extend even to such trifles, makes for us a heaven upon earth.

"He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."

HOME HELPS FOR VOTERS FOR OUR HOMES.

MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

"And what has the home to do with this question of prohibition, since the women and children cannot vote?" Everything. The beginning and end of the whole agitation is the home. Had women and children never suffered in body, mind or estate from the drink habit, there would have been no need of this new issue, of this new party, of the Pittsburgh convention, or the nomination of St. John and Daniel. Had women and children's homes not lain directly in the track of the whisky tornado that has swept resistless over the land, there would have been no need of Washingtonian societies, of Sons of Temperance, of Good Templars, of the National Union of Christian Women. Small need of the watchfires kindled on every hill, of the voices lifted in the churches, of messengers traveling from village to village all over the land, giving the note of warning, raising the cry of alarm, if all had been well with the home. Small need of temperance camp-meetings and conventions, and press agitations, but for the danger to the home. It is this danger that has sent mothers and wives and daughters of the country to their knees, and sent them forth again from their closets, strong in the might of an unquenchable purpose, born of the very breath of God. It is this danger that has stirred brave men's souls until they are as ready to battle against this foe as ever were men against pestilence and fire and sword. It is, all through, from beginning to end, a grand uprising for the protection of the centre and source of our national life, the family and the home. It calls for the manliest and noblest qualities in men. It can be no battle waged in a spirit of self-aggrandizement. For once, the high note of true patriotism is struck, and the movement is founded upon the divine principle of good will to man. If nothing be gained beyond a demonstration that true chivalry and the high heroic type of manhood is not dead, a great star will have arisen over a waiting world. We have almost been forced to consider politics as divorced from principle. We have too often been asked to uphold plausible and pretentious platforms where the thinnest veneering of regard for moral issues covered rotten planks of dishonor. We have seen the open smile take the place of the secret shame at corruption, until a platform founded upon eternal principles of truth and justice and honor is a surprise to the world, and breaks upon its night like a gray dawn that it can hardly believe shall deepen to fullest day.

Yet this is indeed a time when old men may safely prophesy, and young men may dream their dreams. For no highest hope of national glory and power that ever throbbed through the heart of youth, as it looked forth unsullied upon our country's life, can be greater than the glory that awaits us when this kingdom of temperance comes, and the beginning of the glorious day is in the individual citizen, and the first radiation is in the home, lighting and warming the heart of sister and mother and wife.

Think of this, women who hesitate and shrink and fear, and ask, what you of the homes can do? Not a drunkard in the land today but has drawn after him, down his track of degradation and sorrow, dragging by the very heartstrings that could not let him go—some suffering woman to share his shame. There is not a boy in the homes of today whom the home can really protect, or whose life is not bound to some woman's heart, that will bide with him through whatever depth of drunken dishonor he may pass.

And you ask, what has the home to do with the question? and what can the women do? The least they can do is to have the courage of their convictions, and on this question the conviction of the women of the land is far more unanimous than is generally believed. Democrat or Republican, sinner or saint, rum-seller or rum-drinker, let the husband be what he may, the wife is in nine cases out of ten, whether she has examined deeply into the question or not, a Prohibitionist at heart. She wants the drink and the misery it entails to come to an end, and though she may not say so, she welcomes every glimmer of light that promises the dawn. She may not say so at the polls, she can say so in the home. She may not be called to talk it on any platform, but she can talk it to her boys around the evening fire, or when she steals into their rooms and leaves the benediction of her good-night. The time has come when no timidity on her part, no dread of domestic disapproval should hold back any woman from declaring her hope that the good cause may go on. "What, shall she differ from her husband?" Not necessarily, but if conscientiously she does differ, she should not be afraid to have him know the truth. "Peaceable" she should be, certainly, but first "she should be pure," and while she hides for any reason her honest conviction, she misses something of the purity of truth. The day has passed when men, or women either, count it a sin that others do not agree with them in opinions and ideas. It is only a mockery of freedom that does not permit a woman the utterance of her views. It is worse than lack of courage that keeps their sealed lips dumb. It is a mistake that her speaking her convictions in the home will injure the cause in the minds of those opposed. If she speak gently and in the spirit of love; if she neither rants nor raves; if she is reasonable and just and fair, at the same time steady and firm, these qualities all have their power. Here and there a man will oppose her attitude with scorn and anger and abuse. Then is she chosen to suffer for the cause and if men revile and say all manner of evil against her falsely, she ought to rejoice. But, far more frequently the silent power of her conviction, if never offensively paraded, will be felt. It may not be acknowledged, and it is not a vote, but in the great summing up of things, let us assure you, timid and hesitating women, it will count. If the honest desire of all the women in these United States who wish for the overthrow and destruction of the interest of liquor, could be expressed by their signature to a memorial that embodied that desire, such signatures would not be votes, but they would count. Could such a canvass of the homes begin, and every woman be persuaded, by the love of her home, by the fear for her children, by the never silent voice of God in her soul, to reveal her secret longing and desire, her utterance would lack the force of the ballot, but in the grand summing up of moral forces, that, after all, shall move the world, who shall tell how acts like this would count?

It is indeed a time of solemn significance to the women, no less than to the men of the land. The men who have entered the ranks of this grand crusade to protect and save the children and the home, look as did the knights of old, for sign and token of approval, for inspiration and cheer. It's a weary journey to victory; and it is a war that will tax armor and courage and strength.

What should we think of the woman who, when her house was threatened by the flames, added now and then some little drop of oil to the flames and frowned coldly on the firemen straining every nerve to save her? Yet just that is what multitudes of women are doing. The oil they add is that of helpless acquiescence, of soothing consent to the drink in husband or son. They fancy they are pouring this oil on troubled domestic waters, but in fact they are preparing a fuel for the flame, under which soon or late their fair hopes will shrivel and die. To the women who have been through the fires intemperance kindled in their homes, who have sat in sackcloth and ashes mourning their slain; to the women whose calm lives this sorrow has never yet touched; to the women who have seen their dear ones saved from the habit that eats into soul and body alike; to mothers who hope, mothers who watch and pray, mothers who tremble and fear—it is for you that the ranks are filling and the army of voters is moving—for you. Its banner is one that shields the cradle. Its fight is for God and the home.

Let it not go into this campaign uncheered or disheartened for lack of anything women can do. It's a home conflict; do not expect to let it go on without the inspiration and benediction of home.—American Reformer.

THE right to vote carries with it a share of the responsibility for the kind of government we have; and if the voter by his ballot assists in placing bad or inefficient men in office, or knowingly, either directly or indirectly, gives his sanction to the existence of any evil in our midst, eh cannot stand before God guiltless.—Gov. J. P.St. John.

TRUTH should be the first lesson of the child and the last aspiration of manhood.

Correspondence.

STATE VS. NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am in receipt of many inquiries concerning pending political questions and the relation of the National Union to political action. I have endeavored to answer these by personal correspondence, but for many reasons I now desire to speak to our women through THE UNION SIGNAL. I believe our national organization should maintain a non-partisan attitude toward the political questions of the day. I believe the spirit of our organization demands this, and that we shall thus soonest accomplish the overthrow of the liquor traffic. I deplore greatly the attempt on the part of some of our ladies to ally our National Union with the National Prohibition party.

I believe that the resolution passed at Detroit was never intended to thus commit us. I believe the convention would have laid the resolution on the table if they had supposed any such construction would be put upon it.

It was an expression of our purpose to give individual personal influence in favor of political action embodying the principle of prohibition, so dear to all our hearts.

But if the resolution does bind the women to give the influence of our organization to "that party," etc., still the action of the organization must be by states, and not as a National Union.

All our W. C. T. U. women know that our plans of work are considered by states. Each one exercises its option as to plans proposed by the National Union. This policy has been fully set forth from time to time by resolution and otherwise. Great emphasis has been given to this as concerning the woman suffrage question, in regard to which some of the states are very sensitive. All our manifestoes are advisory not mandatory, and no state is disloyal in letter or in spirit which refuses to adopt plans proposed by the National Union.

Sad indeed will it be for the work of the W. C. T. U. if ever there shall be found among us a coercion of love as against a conviction of conscience. Such a condition of things would be as disastrous within its operations as is "boss rule" in party politics. Even if it is claimed that we must give the influence of the organization to some party, I should give my conviction that the demand for national prohibition is not the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and that the National Prohibition party is powerless to protect our homes.

Congress cannot, according to the constitution of the United States, prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in the states, and the demand that it shall submit the question of constitutional prohibition to the states while so very large a proportion of the states are shielding the traffic by license laws, is not a wise conservation of force in our great battle for God and home and native land. Is it asked, Why then have we as a National Union petitioned congress to do this, and why was the memorial asking this presented to the conventions of the national political parties?

I cannot answer for the purpose or design of other ladies, but for myself and my motives, I have to say, I approved these measures as a means of education and agitation, only that and nothing more. This is all a disfranchised class, as women are, can do in the political field. Methods which are permissible or even advisable in a great popular moral movement, may be futile or positively injurious in the field of party politics.

Could not congress wipe out the traffic in the District of Columbia and in the territories? Yes and no. It has the constitutional power to do so, but while so large a proportion of the members of congress come from states where the traffic is licensed, can they be expected to abolish from the nation's domain, that which is protected by the states which they represent? Can the same fountain send forth bitter waters and sweet? Will the action of the representatives of the whole people be more advanced than the action of the large majority of the people themselves? As a great question of political economy I believe every other political question to be of minor importance to the prohibition question, indeed all national questions are more or less interwoven with this question. I believe the temperance reform is doing more to elevate the character of our citizenship, to purify our civil service, to defend our institutions, than all other secular interests combined, and because I desire to see the forces of this reform utilized to the very best possible advantage, I am sorry for the seeming alliance of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union with the National Prohibition party. I expect to see the land I love freed from the curse. I believe that before a score of years shall have passed, there will not be a licensed dram shop in any spot the flag floats over, but prohibition by the terms of the constitution is not the subject of national legislation. It must come by state action, it can come in no other way, unless by an armed resistance by the traffic in the states, which resistance should be beyond the power of the states to quell, they should call upon the government to interpose its military aid as a war measure.

Peaceable revolution, according to constitutional methods, must come by state action until such time as three quarters of the states agreeing, the constitution of the United States could be amended, and the few remaining states be coerced into the adoption of the then national policy and national constitutional prohibition be the rule of the land. This I hope to live to see. But just as prohibition cannot be carried in a state until a considerable number of voters in the state are themselves prohibitionists, so national prohibition cannot be a political issue until a considerable number of states are prohibition states. It is sometimes claimed that the thirteenth amendment abolishing slavery in the states was submitted by congress before the principle had been incorporated into state constitutions. Yes, but not until there were so many free states as to control the government and carry on a great and terrible war.

Is it quickly answered, "But they begun the agitation long before they accomplished their desire. They were willing to stand in a hopeless minority, and thus to testify for a great principle."

I know the history of that old struggle. I grew up by its camp fires; its war songs were my cradle lullabies. On its moral side that reform and this new abolition movement are strikingly parallel; on the political side they are very dissimilar. The question of slavery on its political side was a question between states, concerning which the general government could be the only court of appeal. The prohibition of the liquor traffic is not a question between states but between the people of a state, and national political action is not at this time the proper place to try this cause. State political action is. I believe in that, and have often given service in state contests.

I have taught this doctrine from ocean to ocean; every day confirms my approval of it, but I have hesitated long in setting forth in the midst of a political contest in which so many of my dearest friends are hotly engaged, any views so wholly at variance with what seemeth to them good; I must be true to my conscience and the women who trust me. However we may differ as to methods, let us still "keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace." While for love of God and home, we labor to save those who are tempted on the side of appetite, and with righteous indignation, set forth the terrible sin of ambition that makes the politician willing to ride to place and power through and over the poor victims of the accursed traffic, God forbid that to ourselves as Christian women, or to our organization so highly honored of God, shall come the temptation to the sin of presumption. The devil thus approached the Savior when he suggested that He cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple, that through a miraculous interposition He might show forth His own glory.

Dear sisters, if we by a reckless impatience cast ourselves down, He will not save our feet from the stones. If He cast us down, it shall be to raise us up again, stronger for the chastening. Let us not "run before we are sent."

J. ELLEN FOSTER,

A KINDLY DIFFERENCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Though wholly unacquainted with yourself or the managers of your paper, I take the liberty, as a friend of temperance and of legal prohibition, of writing to you a few simple words of encouragement, which I presume will not be unwelcome at this particular time. Although a young man I am yet earnestly and sincerely concerned, as should be every citizen, in the welfare and prosperity of the country, which is, or at least should be, so dear to every American, and it is this love of my country which has led me to become interested in no small degree in the advancement and furtherance by all lawful and honorable means of the grand Prohibition warfare which is beginning to be waged throughout the entire length and breadth of this great country.

It requires no brilliant statesmanship to forecast the final outcome of this struggle which has but begun. In the first place I wish to give full meed of praise to the grand illustration of self sacrifice and devotion to home and country, which have been brought before the eyes of the American people as the result of the W. C. T. U. It is not the first instance in the history of our country when the tender and sympathetic nature of woman has first brought into the full light of day wrongs which have long been crying out for justice, and pleading before the bar of a stern and relentless public opinion which dared not express itself against a wealthy though heartless portion of the community. But in the present state of our national and state policy the voice of woman can only "rouse to action," but cannot carry into execution the noble plans which they have so wisely laid for the overthrow and utter destruction of the vile monster of drink, which has so long held sway in this country, and it is for the purpose, if possible, of bringing to the front some of the noble brothers, fathers and husbands of the grand women of your association that I take the liberty of intruding on your time and space.

Let me first say that I am, though but entering upon the duties of American citizenship a staunch Republican; that it will be one of the proud remembrances of my future life that I cast my first presidential vote for that grand lover of home and country, James A. Garfield, and I expect that it will be another proud remembrance of the future that in this coming election I expect to cast my second vote for the grand leader of the Republican party at the present time, a man who has for the past quarter of a century with such great honor and credit to himself and his noble constituency been bearing the standard of his country's honor and glory in the face of its bitterest foes. While I am thus so enthusiastic a supporter of James G. Blaine, I am nevertheless an admirer of the present leader of the Prohibition party in this country, Gov. John P. St. John, and I may frankly confess that after perusing the interesting proceedings of the Pittsburgh convention and the dignified and straightforward manner in which that convention placed the question of prohibition before the people, and seeing the noble patriots to whose care they entrusted the safety of their standards in the coming campaign, I say I must frankly confess that I wavered in my devotion and loyalty to party, and was almost tempted to cast my vote, though its effect and force might be ever so little, on the side of prohibition now and for all time. But I have concluded that the time is perhaps not yet ripe for casting aside entirely principles and questions which have not yet been finally settled between the two old parties which have waged such bitter warfare during the past twenty-five years, and though in assuming this attitude I am aware that I differ from the strongly expressed and strongly sustained position of yourself, I yet feel that you will not on this account refuse to accept the heartfelt and sincere expressions of sympathy with the grand movement which, as I have before said, is sure to succeed, if not in the coming campaign, certainly in the near future. Let me beg to suggest that this war is not being waged alone by the lovers of home and country. They have a grand Leader whose presence is never seen but whose mighty power is felt not alone by those who are fighting for, but also by those who are fighting against the cause of temperance and prohibition. The great God of nations, whose all-seeing eye penetrates to the depths of this darkest and foulest crime that ever existed on the face of the earth, has unsheathed the sword of vengeance, and is now only waiting for human hands to grasp it and execute His Divine will. I pray God that the valient heroes who are to "stand for the right and fight against the wrong," in this grand conflict which is but beginning to assume shape may not linger long on the outskirts of the field of action which is ever widening and opening before them.

But let them assume at once the promised "breastplate of righteousness and the shield of faith wherewith they shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Let them take the "helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit," and going forth in the name of the living God, strike down with manly and strong blows the great enemy, not alone of their country, but of their homes, their churches, and, greatest of all, the destroyer of the lives and the happiness of those who are nearest and dearest to their hearts.

In closing allow me to assure you of my deep and earnest appreciation of the work that has already been done, and my entire confidence and faith in the ultimate success of the movement which is now demanding the calm consideration of a large majority of the people of this country, who have its true interests at heart.

Respectfully yours, W. H. H.

THE LUMBERMAN'S MISSION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—For the glory of God we place before you the first annual report of faith work among the lumber camps, mills and new settlements of northern Michigan. These things write we unto you that your joy may be full. That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you that the Lord is not slack concerning His promises. Thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ Jesus. Having heard of the spiritually destitute, yea, lost condition of these people we set out for the camps a year ago without money or the promise of any. The God that feedeth the sparrow cared for me and mine.

The motive was to honor God by proving to the world, the church and ourselves the truth of Mat. 6: 25–34, and kindred promises. At times it has seemed as if, for a time at least, the work must cease, but in due season needed help every time has come. At one time, not daring to look back while a day's bread was at hand, a letter with ten dollars came signed "Servant of the Lord." Is it too much always to presume and claim that God's promises are literally and personally for us unless to our consciences, not our reason, the contrary more plainly harmonizes with the whole teaching and character of God?

In the field all has not been sunshine, though often while traveling on foot through the deep hot sand with papers, singing books and Bibles, very welcome a shadow would have been.

In the camps we have, on the whole, been well received and held a meeting with the assent of the foreman in every camp and mill visited. In camp we have never been charged for bed or meals and with three or four exceptions the best has been cheerfully given. Many little acts and words of kindness have helped cheer us in the work.

An opinion widely prevails that the camps are hopeless. Now while there are bad men among them (and where are there none?) they are not sinners above all others; but Christ came to save sinners, even the chief of sinners. Where is there a mission so hopeful and one that has such claims on us not only as Christians but as patriots and as business men who know that sober, law abiding, honest, industrious, intelligent men are better neighbors, better citizens, help elect better men to office, and as employes do more and better work with less strikes and fires and loss of time, less waste and damage to material used, less injury to teams, machinery and other property they handle?

In camp we find men from nearly every nation in Europe, Canada and the United States. Of foreigners the Scandinavians are the most numerous, also the most respectful, attentive, and appreciative. Religiously inclined they all read their own language in which a number of papers have been sent us by the publishers and we hope for many more the coming year for free distribution. Unfortunately we cannot speak so favorably of others whose characters are perverted by the Police Gazette, the paper almost universally found in camp. Yet very many of these men have formerly been members of Sunday schools, sons of Christian parents and even ministers' sons are found there. The worst class from the cities do not work in camps because the work is hard and life monotonous. They plan to get money easier and faster by begging, tramping, gambling, stealing, saloon keeping, etc., and like beasts of prey they pounce upon the woodsmen after pay day.

The evils of camp life are owing largely to the lack of religious privileges, healthful restraints of society and the positively corrupt reading and filthy conversation of so many men herded together in camp; but chiefly when they come out into the towns where all manner of unclean dens are open for them. But the pure gospel of Christ, and that alone can purify and save these men.

The hopefulness of the work is not visible results (for we walk not by sight, blessed are they that have not seen and believe) but the command, Go teach, and the assurance, "So I am with you," "your labor is not in vain," "ye shall speak." Herein is our hope. Yet the field is not without visible signs of hope. Ten, fifteen, and even twenty years have been spent without a convert in foreign lands. In this the first year we count thirty-three. Do the churches average that number annually gathering in from years of seed sowing by preacher, Sunday school teachers, Christian parents and the Christian press. Again, without asking, fifty-six dollars have been contributed by the men themselves in a dull season. Does any other mission show such results from so small effort? Many rural districts with regular preaching do not show such results. With increased faith and hope and love we go forth another year in the name of the Lord, expecting to endure trials in proportion to the increase of faith. While success is very gratifying to the flesh the Lord has not said Be successful, but "It is required of a steward that he be faithful," "Be thou strong and very courageous." Our motto is "Thy will be done." Pray, dear Christians, that our faith, obedience and love be made perfect. The following is a numerical summary of the year's work ending July 1, 1884: Number of meetings, 214; number in attendance, 7,800; papers and tracts distributed, 55,600 pages; professed conversions, 33; persons reached, 11,000; Sunday schools organized, 5; funeral discourses, 2; Bibles sold and given away, 6; singing books, etc., 100; Sunday school lesson leaves supplied three months, 25. Total receipts for the year unsolicited from camps, $56.13; William F. Davis and wife $172.00; W. C. T. U. ladies at Flint, $7.65; Miss Frances E Willard, $4.00; others, $21.55; total receipts for year, $261.33. Sundry articles of clothing.

Religious, temperance, scientific and illustrated papers are very much needed, either denominational or undenominational, provided Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the all sufficient and only Savior he lifted up to save sinners through faith in His name. With only $261.33 toward the support of a family of nine but little could be spent for tracts and scripture t xts which are needed to sow broadcast in cars, depots, camps and wherever men are found. Anything mailed or shipped will reach me at Reed City, Mich. The Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad will refund any freight we pay for books or papers shipped over their road for the camps. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Most respectfully yours in Christ,

J. D. MCLAULIN.

HIGH LICENSE AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Will you give me space to call the attention of the people to one point in the high license business which I have not so far seen noted by any one. We hear people say, often, that the high license paid by the saloon keeper will make him more careful to keep the regulations concerning the business and not lay himself liable to having his license revoked. Do people forget that "it is a poor rule that will not work both ways?" If the extra amount paid will make the saloon keeper more careful not to have his license revoked, will not the extra amount received make the town less careful to revoke the license when it should? Human nature is human nature and there is just about as much of it in councilmen and mayors as there is in other men.

THE WILL AND THE WAY.

EBEN E. REXFORD.

There's something I'd have you remember, boys,
To help in the battle of life;
'Twill give you strength in the time of need,
And help in the hour of strife.
Whenever there's something that should be done,
Don't be faint-hearted and say,
"What use to try?" Remember, then,
That where there's a will there's a way.

There's many a failure for those who win;
But though at first they fail,
They try again, and the earnest heart
Is sure at last to prevail.
Though the hill is rugged and hard to climb,
You can win the heights, I say,
If you make up your mind to reach the top;
For where there's a will there's a way.

The men who stand at the top are those
Who never could bear defeat;
Their failures only made them strong
For the work they had to meet.
The will to do and the will to dare
Is what we want today;
What has been done can be done again,
For the will finds out the way.

THE TWO PATHS.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

F. M. HOLMES.

CHAPTER I.—WHO WILL WIN?

"Bother the Greek," I say.

"I wish you would keep quiet, Philip; if you cannot study yourself you might let others do so."

"Oh, yes, it is all very well for you to talk. You are sure to get the prize. But it is of no use for me to try, and I shan't any more." And throwing his dictionary against the wall, the lad rose from his seat and rushed to the window.

"That's just like Phil Gregory," said another boy. "He always gives up at the first difficulty."

"Shut up, Jones!" exclaimed Philip, with great ill-temper. "The idea of you setting up to be a judge. You're just as bad."

"No, hanged if he is," cried the second boy, whom Philip had spoken of as being sure to win; "he plods on like a cart horse."

"Cart horse! I wish I had as much perseverance."

"No thanks for your comparison, Somers; but I would give all my perseverance for your quickness and clearness," cried Jones. "Those are the qualities which will win you the prize."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Somers. "Every one has a good chance if they will only work. You remember what Dr. Sowerby said."

"Of course he said so," exclaimed Philip; "but I know I have no chance, and so I shall not worry. Hallo, there goes the tea bell. I am jolly glad." And, hustling his books into his desk, he hastily left the room.

Some of the boys quickly followed his example; but others lingered, and Somers was the last. And as he walked slowly away he pondered over his chances of success. The gaining of this prize would make a great difference to him. It was his last term at school, for his father had recently met with great losses and could not afford to keep him longer from business (for he was now nearly sixteen). The prize was to be in books or money, and the amount would be a great help to him.

After tea Doctor Sowerby commanded them all to remain in their seats as he had something of great importance to say to them.

The boys looked serious at once and became very attentive, for they knew it must be something of great moment to cause the doctor to speak in that manner, and most of them were in great wonder as to what it might be.

The good man did not keep them long in suspense. "Boys," he said, "I regret to say that one at least of your number has been guilty of a very great sin—the sin of drunkenness. I will save him the disgrace of mentioning his name, so that none but a very few of us will know who the guilty one is. But I want to take this opportunity of giving you all a warning. To drink wine or any intoxicating liquor is a dangerous thing—especially for boys—young men who have to fight their own way in life, as most of you will have to do.

"It is bad for your health; doctors tell us this repeatedly, although men may argue otherwise just because they like to drink. It is bad for your pocket, for by bowing to the drinking habits of society you will be called upon to spend much money upon this unhealthy and dangerous so-called luxury; and lastly it is bad as an example, for although you may be able to drink without continually getting drunk, yet there are many who can not do so, and your influence may be able to prevent some of these from falling. Remember, you are boys now, but in a few years many of you will be men, and upon you and your fellows will devolve, in your turn, the great responsibilities of controlling the destinies of this great country.

"Drunkenness is our national curse. It is that which stands in the way of every reform; it is that which lowers our national health and our national wealth, and our well being in every way. Now, which side will you take in this great battle against the drink? I want you to take the right side. I want you to fight it wherever you find it; to be men, and show your moral courage by refusing it in the social circle and in the counting house It may be difficult to stand the ridicule which abstinence may bring upon you, but then you show your courage by disregarding the ridicule. If it were easy where would be your courage? I do not wish to tire you or preach you a sermon, but I wish to warn you. Oh! my boys, my heart yearns for you in the future. Here you are, happy, healthy and contented. What you may be in the future depends largely upon yourselves. In a few years you will be called upon to go forth and play your part in the world. Like fair vessels riding easily at anchor in the harbor, or sailing in a sunlit bay, you have the most difficult part of the voyage before you. Beware, I say, of the sunken rocks ahead! You will find them —many of them—but the greatest and most dangerous is the sunken rock of Drink. The sea may seem smooth and fair above the hidden rocks, even as moderation in drink seems easy and right enough; qut, alas! many are the good ships wrecked on the sunken rocks, and many are the poor souls who thought they could drink moderately and have found a drunkard's grave. Steer clear of that rock, and you will find you have avoided many others.

"As for that poor boy who has so early learned what it is to drink and to suffer from its fell effects, I shall say no more to him than what I have already said in private. He deeply feels his disgrace, and has repented of his sins, and that is enough, for he has promised to abstain. And may the Almighty help him to keep his holy vow! Go now to your tasks. If you heed my words you will never repent taking the pledge, for there was never an abstainer yet who repented taking that step; and there may yet come a time in the far future when you will thank me for what I have said."

That night much whispering went on among the boys concerning the doctor's speech, and many were the guesses as to who the guilty boy could be. But the greater number among the lads did not know and could not guess, and those few who did know kept the secret most profoundly.

But there was one boy who felt the disgrace and bitterness of his sin deep down in his inmost soul, and from the depths cried unto God for help to keep his vow. The wise words and eloquent pleading of the good doctor had made a deep impression upon him, and he shuddered as he thought of the abyss of sin and degradation upon the verge of which he had trembled. And his poor father! Alas! now the boy understood only too well the causes of his father's losses and ill-health—he was a drunkard!

And this was the real reason why, just as the boy was beginning to appreciate the blessings of study, he was to leave school, and relinquish the hope that he had so ardently cherished of working his way to the head of the school, and enjoying a university career, and coming out as Senior Wrangler. It was a noble and laudable ambition, but it had to be abandoned, and he would have instead to earn his own living, and fight for his existence in the first situation he could find, no matter what it might be.

Never mind; he would work his way. He was to finish this term at school, and he had a chance of winning this prize, and win it he would, even if he remained indoors all his playtime and on every half holiday, but never again would he fly to the false friend wine to stimulate his power of working as he had done, unfortunately, on that last holiday. Thank heaven it was on a holiday, so that scarcely anyone knew; but it was getting late, and he wished to be up earl , so good-night to these thoughts. And in a few more minutes Harry Somers was fast asleep.

A FAIR-HAIRED, fresh-faced little fellow, with not a trace of the Arab, the Italian or the Hebrew, in his features, came into our office with a basket of popcorn for sale. As this was something phenomenal in the procession of peddlers and beggars who are permitted to invade business and other offices, the young man was interviewed—his age, past six, his name Harry. But Harry did not come to grant an interview, but to transact business, and he began to move toward the door—but was called back with a suggestion that he might make a trade. "Very well, sir," said Harry, "I would be glad to sell you a paper of popcorn, but I can't waste any more time on you. I can't stay here all day, sir." Harry smiled at the laugh which followed, showing his baby-teeth in the place yet—a mouth which invited a kiss. Thirty years from now, if that boy lives, he will not need an introduction to the public.—Interior.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S MAIL BAG.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I am very glad to have the pleasure of introducing to you the Band of Hope of North Berwick, Maine, who wish to join our group around the Camp Fire, and to bid them for you a hearty welcome.

Now I will let them speak for themselves:

NORTH BERWICK, Abg 18, 1884.

DEAR CAPTAIN DEBORAH: At our last Band of Hope meeting our teacher read a letter from another Band; and so we thought we would like to write one, and perhaps in this way make the acquaintance of other Bands of Hope.

Our Band was organized in November, 1880. There are about 100 names enrolled on the pledge, with an average attendance of thirty-five. We have all taken the triple pledge. We meet once in two weeks on Monday afternoon. At our meetings we have exercises consisting of readings, recitations, singing, blackboard exercises, and also lessons on the effects of alcohol on the human system.

Occasionally we have public meetings. At these we have exercises from the members of the Band, and sometimes the older ones who come in have something to say to interest us.

Last week we had our annual picnic, which was well attended and enjoyed by all.

Hoping to hear from other Bands soon,
I am yours, respectfully,
HELEN M. MANSFIELD.

You have all enjoyed this nice letter, I am sure; and now I am so glad to give you a hymn the little heathen children in India sing, for it tells us that they, too, are joining our grand temperance army:

Yes, I decide I'll never drink
The intoxicating bowl,
The cup by which all drunkards sink
To hell, body and soul.

Why bid a deadly viper choose
My bosom for his nest,
Why run the deadlier risk—to lose
My soul's eternal rest?

Shall I, "Deliver me from evil,"
To my dear Father pray,
And in the same voice call the devil
To tempt me, day by day?

No! rather I, to tempters all,
Will, "Get behind me," say,
And never touch the cup at all,
Whoever give it may.

Jesus, forbid that e'er I break
This vow, that while I live
Never myself the cup I'll take Nor to another give.

"O, I'm glad I'm in this army,
And I'll battle till I die."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES.

179.—Grave, horse, no, youth, cat, hate. Have courage to say no.

180.—Tell my mother, when you see her,
That I fell amid the strife;
And for freedom and my country
I have given up my life.

Tell her that I sent this message
Ere my tongue refused to speak;
And you tell her, comrade won't you?
Tell my mother not to weep.

181.—"Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed."

Answers have been received from Romero and Chas. B. Orendorff.

MARCHING ON.*

Tune: The Battle Hymn of the Republic.

Pass the word along the column now, and sound it with a will,—
"No saloon down in the valley, but a school on every hill,"
Ever let it be our watchword, then, and for it labor still,
As we go marching on.
Chorus:—There's a good time coming, hallelujah!
No saloon in the valley, hallelujah!
But a school on every hilltop, hallelujah!
As we go marching on.

Despair not, weeping mothers, for there still is hope for you,
Hope for the drunkard's starving wife, his ragged children, too;
Cheer up! The clouds are breaking; there are brighter skies in view.
As we go marching on.

Cheer up, ye weak and erring ones, to drink enslaved so long;
Come aid us bind the demon, now, in fetters fast and strong;
For God will ever help us as we battle against the wrong,
As we go marching on.

Guard well your home, your own sweet home,
Where'er that home may be;
Strike telling blows 'gainst all our foes till from the traffic free,
We raise our hallelujahs high in songs of victory,
As we go marching on.

APPETITE BUILDING.

MARY HUBBARD MC'KEE.

In thousands of cases the craving for stimulants is but the cry of hungry nerves for food. The American disease (Neurasthenia, or a privation of nerve force, which prevails to such an alarming extent in this generation,) is largely due to the prevailing habit of eating impure foods, such as mush, hash and minced preparations. Foods so prepared are swallowed without due insalivation—consequently the chemical action of the alkaline saliva and acid gastric juice is not perfect, and while the fermentating mass lies in the stomach it produces an unnatural craving for some stimulant to aid its feeble digestive power. Then as it cannot be properly digested neither can it be assimilated, and while the waste of nerve tissue is constantly going on, through the tremendous draft of nineteenth century intellectual pressure, there is an inadequate supply and exhausted nerves, like the daughter of the horse-leech, are crying, "Give! give! give!" Alcohol will brace them up a little, will stiffen up their walls, and throw what little vital force is left to carry on the natural functions of the machine into the circulation, where it is quickly used up, and the poor abused human system becomes bankrupt in a short time. Temperance workers must study the subject of food supply, and educate the people of America up to the facts that if the nerves be kept well supplied with life-giving aliment, the terrible craving for stimulants will cease.

The women of the W. C. T. U.'s all over the country can do no better work for temperance and the home, than to study this question of food, its constituents, its proper preparation and adaptation to the wants of humanity. Certainly it is not best that we keep on feeding our families with the same fat and muscle forming foods which our grandparents needed, when our work is not of the same nature as theirs and our exhaustion needs a different supply. Where they thought on one subject, we think on twenty, and thinking uses up more nervous tissue than churning or chopping mincemeat. And the child of today, loaded down with piles of school books, working always under pressure, and at the same time expected to practice music, and learn Sunday school lessons, should be fed on more concentrated foods than the little one of fifty years ago who roamed the woods for nuts and fields for butterflies, supplementing that exercise with picking up chips and washing dishes.

If the brandy is not put into the mince pie, as an aid to digestion, better banish the mince pie, for surely anyone who eats the average article concocted after the famous formula, "Put everything under the sun into it, and then add a little more," will have a tremendous craving for some kind of stimulant, to brace him up, until his stomach is again free from the mince pie.

Temperance mothers, if you banish the brandy from mince pies, do go a step further and banish the mince pies. But lest I seem an iconoclast, who breaks the beloved image without giving an equivalent let me recommend a pie which can be given to children as nourishing food. Let the foundation be the homely and much despised carrot, the only vegetable, which supplies plenty of iron and sulphur and other organized substances needed to make rich and pure blood. Boil soft and mash through a colander. For one pie use four large spoonfuls of carrot, two eggs, pint of rich milk, and flavor with nutmeg and sugar. For crust, mix equal quantities of white corn meal and flour, with a little salt, and mix with sweet cream enough to roll out like dough. Bake carefully, eat fresh, and if you are dyspeptic you will make it again.

I hope to see a department in THE UNION SIGNAL filled by the committees on hygiene with articles bearing upon this subject, hence I send my first contribution.

TEDDY.

ANONYMA.

The hot afternoon sun came pouring down upon a little frame house out on the prairie; there were no trees near enough to shade it. Three or four old Lombardy poplars in very frowzy old dresses of green and dead brown leaves and twigs stood off at a distance too great to afford any comfort or relief to the poor thin haired old woman who stood in the door shading her eyes with her right hand and looking down the road which led to the town of Mentor, about five miles off.

"I wish there never was a drop of whisky in the world," she said wearily, turning to go in, an angry look in her faded eyes. "It's half past four an' time he was here two hours ago. Teddy ought to've had that medicine three days back, the poor child, but I couldn't get the money and him spending everything for drink. How is it Teddy? How do you feel now?" she said, going to the bedside in answer to the child's faint call.

His haggard face had been bright with fever but now it was greyish and pale enough. He lay quietly looking toward his grandmother as she came near. "I'm going up to Jimmy Rodgers now, he said I might take his ball. Why don't you get my clothes grandma? I'm tired lying here so long. Is Jim there? I thought he came in. Don't grandpa, don't hit me again, I won't go any more, Oh!"

"There, there, Teddy, he shan't hurt you. I won't let 'im. Why Teddy what ails ye? Don't you know me? Why the child's out of his head."

The old woman had not before noticed the change. She dipped the piece of old toweling in the basin and bathed his face as she had done so often in the last two or three days, but the boy shivered. She asked him if he wasn't hungry and fumbled over him in a helpless, anxious way trying to make him conscious of her presence, but he knew her only a moment at a time, and then his mind wandered.

"I wish there never was a drop of whisky in the world." She seemed to find relief in saying it. She sat down in the rickety old rocking chair close to the bed, her hands knotted and brown and out of shape with hard work, clasping and unclasping nervously.

"What if he's spent the money for drink. If he begins he won't stop till he's used it all. He's so hard with me. I havn't had any comfort of my life in the last fifteen years. Why does the Lord let things go on this way? and here's Teddy sick enough to die and no medicine and no doctor near. Oh Teddy, Teddy, you're the only comfort I have. There, there, cheer up a little, he'll be here before long and bring some medicine or the doctor."

She sat there until dusk watching the life go out of the little freckle-faced, sandy-haired boy whose good temper and big heart had often been a comfort to her along the hard road she had traveled.

By and by the restless child hands were quite still. The moaning and crying and faint broken sentences ceased.

The woman closed the eyes, laying the poor little body straight in the bed and folding the hands upon the breast crying and sobbing all the while as one accustomed to do things whatever her griefs and trials might be.

The room was very quiet. She sat thinking, after she had lighted a candle, thinking of her troubles and the reason for them, so absorbed she did not hear the sound of uneven footsteps up the short walk, until the voice of her husband, whose unpleasant, quarrelsome face, flushed and blear-eyed appeared in the doorway, said,

"Well, what's up?"

She started up half angrily. "Where have you been all this time?" and then fell to crying.

"Stop your whining, will you! Where's the boy?"

"There," said the old woman, pointing to the bed. "Where's the medicine you were to bring? Couldn't you let the drink alone for this one time?"

"You're getting impudent, are you? I'll teach you to twit," and seizing her right wrist with one hand and grasping at the elbow joint with the other he brought it down with all his force breaking it across the edge of the heavy pine table which stood against the wall.

A sacred burden is this life ye bear;
Look on it, lift it, bear it solemnly,
Stand up and walk beneath it steadfastly.
Fail not for sorrow, falter not for sin.
But onward, upward, till the goal ye win.

TOPIC: A SONG OF PRAISE.

LESSON TEXT.—Psalms 103: 1-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Psalms 103: 2.

1. Well does Spurgeon say of this beautiful psalm: "It is as the apple tree among the trees of the wood, and its golden fruit has a flavor such as no fruit ever bears unless it has been ripened in the full sunshine of mercy." From a heart overflowing with gratitude and love as he recounts God's many wonderful works, his thoughts of love and mercy which cannot be reckoned up, but are more than can be numbered, and new every morning, David calls upon his soul, and all that is within him, to render the thanks so manifestly due.

A like gratitude, deep and pure, would seem the natured expression of every heart. A gratitude not alone of the lips but of the life. "Bless the Lord," falls easily and lightly from the lips, too often, becoming not the expression of heart gratitude, but actual profanity.

"True praise comes from the life rather than from the lip; and gratitude is a thing of actions rather than fine phrases."

2. While David does not fail to recognize the rich personal blessings which were his, the chief theme of the psalm is God's general goodness and infinite mercy, beautifully and forcibly set forth in verses 6–18. "The oppressed" include all that suffer at the hands of their fellow men.

The oppressors include as well those that are indifferent to oppression as those that are the active sinners. God executeth that which both fail to execute, judgment and righteousness. Well may the apathetic tremble.

3. To some God makes known his ways. We know not if He might not give us all more knowledge of His law and its operations, provided we were enough in sympathy with Him. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." Moses as a leader had to know much of God's methods; but then Moses kept very close to God, so near that he could hear His whispers.

4. This psalm affords a whole system of blessed comparisons. "As" and "so" mean very much to the soul that is waiting on God, when He uses them to show us by "feeble sense" the great and high truths of His love and mercy. The height of heaven, beyond all computation, shows His mercy. The breadth of the horizon, also immeasurable, guages His forgiving love. The pitying love of the tenderest father—and who shall say that it, too, is not unfathomable?—is like, only like, His whose heart is "very pitiful and full of tender mercy."

5. It is above everything else in the way of assurance to know that God's love and mercy are not only pledged to us, but to our children, for whose sake we could often wish ourselves "accursed" as did Paul in his agonizing desire for his brethren. "A thousand generations" is the only limit scripture sets to this priceless heritage. It ought to make every parent a child of God, just for the interests of their children.

6. The oneness of the Lord's host on earth or in heaven was known to David. "One family we dwell in Him." David could call upon his own soul to praise the Lord in one breath and with the next adjure the cherubim and seraphim to join in the chorus of the church universal. This psalm might be called David's "Magnificat."

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

THE GOVERNMENTAL LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

There is a class of citizens, in which may be found many adherents of the prohibition principle in government not yet alive to see the use and value of national, or, as it is called by some, "federal prohibition." We have in several past issues called attention to the fact that the federal congress can accomplish a great deal of national prohibition. To recapitulate:

1. It can prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the territories and the District of Columbia, thus covering an area of more than one-third of the territory of the United States, and reducing the number of dram shops by something like 10,000.

2. It can prohibit the importation of foreign liquors, thereby cutting off from sale and consumption $11,000,000 worth of such liquors.

3. It can withdraw its protection from the liquor traffic carried on by American citizens in foreign countries.

4. It can abolish the great national distilling and brewing business now carried on by the government.

5. It can submit to the states an amendment to the national constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the United States.

These several items constitute a wide basis for national prohibitory measures, but next in importance to the submission of a national prohibitory amendment, and necessarily prior to such amendment, is the action by which congress could abolish by its own will, the governmental liquor business.

What is this governmental liquor business? It is the more than four-fifths interest of the government in all the spirits distilled in the country. For instance, whisky is quoted at $1.10 per gallon today in the market reports. Of that sum the distiller gets twenty cents and the government ninety cents. It costs the distiller about fourteen cents to manufacture a gallon of whisky, and it will be seen that his profit is less than 50 per cent. It costs the government about six cents per gallon to secure its lion's share of the price per gallon, and it will also be seen that its profit is 1400 per cent. Considered as a partner, the government is a success. Its ability to dictate such terms of partnership rests upon its ability to abolish the business. The government holds the key of every distillery and distilling warehouse in the land. Every gallon of spirits manufactured in the country is made under the strict superintendence and by the cooperation of the government. A man who would engage in the business must first bond over to the government his entire premises, land, building and appurtenances thereto. He must build the distillery in accordance with plans approved by the government and submit it to government control when built. The government weighs every bushel of his grain, and locks it up securely after the distiller has paid for it. The government measures it into the tub, knows how much of the manufactured article it will yield, and takes out its profits not on the exact amount manufactured but upon the capacity of the distillery. The government watches every step of the distilling process, draws off the finished product and stores it away under its own lock and seal until the distiller can find a customer who will pay both partners their profits and take away the goods. Even here the government steps in and says to the buyer, if he be a dealer in such merchandise, "Pay me $200 (if a rectifier of spirits), $150 (if a wholesale dealer), or $25 (if a retail dram seller), or I will seize your property and close out your business." It says to every illicit brewer, distiller or saloon keeper in prohibitory states, "Pay me my profits, no matter what state laws may require." The governmental partnership in the liquor traffic of the country is today the back bone of the traffic. It is worse: its tacit sanction of that by which it benefits so largely, is the benumbing, vice-like grip upon the national conscience, which stifles conviction and smothers the agonizing cries of the nation's victims.

But some will say: Is it not far better to place the restriction of a heavy tax upon liquors and the traffic in them?

Restriction is only good by as much as it restricts. As a general rule no restriction is of much use save as it may be in the direct line of prohibition e. g. the prohibition of sale to minors, to drunkards and on certain days, is restriction which enforced, may be very useful. But a restriction whose active principle is permission, is not and cannot be, in the nature of things, much hindrance to evil.

Levying a tax of 90 cents on every gallon of spirits is a species of permission. It is permission after the tax is paid. It is the government's promise to interfere no further. It is not therefore a real restriction. But does it not restrict? Read the revenue reports for the past twenty years. Note the amount collected in 1863, $5,176,530.60 and then read that with an average tax of 75¼ cents through the twenty years, the revenue from distilled spirits has increased nearly 1500 per cent. in that period, the returns for 1883 being about $75,000,000. Does that look like restriction, and is not that sort of restriction just the sort distillers like? Could the free and untrammelled traffic have been worse?

And now is it not patent that a national movement is necessary to dislodge and destroy a national evil? Is it not moreover clear that the government will not reform itself, that it will not condemn that which fattens it?

The government partnership with the liquor traffic is the great legal and moral (?) scaffolding by which that traffic has reared itself into a national, institution and an institution that will inevitably bankrupt and ruin the nation.

Let the people, to whom only government is amenable, and whose creature it is, decide if the national partnership with evil shall be continued.

It is not generally known that by a recent decision of the supreme court of Kansas, the enforcement of prohibitory law has been greatly crippled, so that in many places the people find themselves powerless before the illicit and illegal dramshop. Previous to this decision, the county attorney had power to file a complaint and prosecute upon information and belief. But now if a county attorney files a complaint, and verifies it upon belief, he must also attach thereto a statement supported by the oath or affirmation of some other person willing to testify of his own knowledge that the facts and allegations stated in the complaint or information are true. If the county attorney has personal knowledge of the matters and things charged in the information, he may support it by his own oath or affirmation. A correspondent writes from Hutchinson: "We are very much discouraged. For two years we have had no saloons and had fought 'wheels' and other contrivances of the whisky men until we thought that prohibition did prohibit. But now we have a number of saloons, and it looks as if we were taking some backward steps. Our union has had a severe struggle during the past few weeks, because we have been trying to arouse the temperance men. The strongest paper we have in the county, while pretending to be a temperance paper, has turned its influence against us and talked about us unmercifully, because we are determined that we will agitate this question until our temperance men, our council, our mayor and our county attorney will do something to abolish this terrible state of things. We think that it is because of this decision and because re-submission is being talked of and worked for by whisky politicians all over the state, that the whisky dealers have become so bold. It seems to us that Kansas needs help just now more than she has ever needed it before, on this question."

These are the times that try men's souls, and women's too. But Kansas will endure the trial and come out the brighter and truer and stronger for it. "Hot grows the fire where wrongs expire."

The Lake Bluff temperance convention wound up with a rousing St. John and Daniel demonstration. Between seven and eight hundred people listened to the presidential candidates on Wednesday of last week. It was a representative national assembly; Missouri, Maryland and South Carolina were side by side with Michigan, Iowa, Indiana, Kansas, Ohio and Illinois. Beside the presidential nominees there were the Prohibition candidates for governor in Illinois and Indiana, Messrs. Hobbs and Dwiggins. There was our own Mrs. Chapin, of South Carolina; Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri, Mrs. McClellan Brown, of Ohio; Mrs. T. B. Carse, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, Mrs. Villars and Miss Hood, of Illinois. There were college presidents and professors, clergymen, capitalists, active business men, working men, all seeking to solve the great question of the abolition of the drink traffic. There was "mine host" Truesdell, with a St. John badge and a radiant face, on "hospitable thoughts intent," presiding over a fine dinner, and the afternoon meeting, with dignity and ease. Gov. St. John was in his best mood. He came to the west full of the enthusiasm of strong Prohibition party rallies in New York and Ohio. His faith rose to the height of prophecy as he answered the query, "Do I think I can be elected? I know I shall be elected if every man in this country votes as he prays."

Mrs. Chapin pictured vividly the revolution of public sentiment at the south, especially among the colored people. Mr. Daniel gave the indications in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, as pointing to a considerable vote in each of those states. Mrs. McClellan Brown, of Cincinnati, made a philosophical argument for the triumph of party prohibition and all were jubilant that principle is so rapidly shaping policy.

The long and painful illness of that dear worker and fully proved evangelist, Lois L. Smith of Rhode Island, is a grief which is shared by thousands who love and honor her for her own, and her work's sake. A constant cough, feverish days and nights, and inability to eat any solid food, have characterized her illness during the six months in which she has been such a patient sufferer. Her loved companion in health and sickness, "Cassie," says of her present state that there is one hopeful indication, a slowly mending appetite. Our hearts cling to this reviving hope, and while we pray for the constant presence of the Comforter in this trial, we remember also the Healer whose touch can make her whole. O, why are we not, as His disciples, able to "realize upon" His promise to those of old, "The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to my Father."

Here is a pen picture of a model W. C. T. U. mass meeting in Maine. Time, present campaign, W. C. T. U. to the fore. President in the chair, Opera House, Miss Willard speaker, 2,500 present, crowds turned away, band playing at outside entrance quarter of an hour before opening, overture by band Dixie, and Maryland, my Maryland side by side with Yankee Doodle and Star Spangled Banner. Elaborate decorations, flags, flowers and national motto arranged by the young ladies of the "Willard Benevolent Society," entire front of stage a bank of golden rod. Choice singing, "Good Ship Prohibition," etc., Crusade Psalm. Prayer, Rev. Mr. Ladd, Mrs. Chas. Green, of Savannah, on Platform.

Mrs. Leavitt says of the women of Olympia, W. T.: These women have actually elected a mayor and part of the council, and they are studying the laws and ways of working under them for the purification of the government. Miss Willard said rightly "This is God's corner."

* * *

The beloved president of the Philadelphia W. C. T. U. and state recording secretary, Mrs. J. R. Jones, has passed through a year of suffering and sorrow whose very record appalls one. Heroic nature and heavenly grace have stood her well in hand and she "mounts up with wings as eagles" as saith the promise.

* * *

The Maine W. C. T. U. held its annual convention at Gardiner, on the second and third days of this month. The Union Signal will no doubt be furnished a full account, so that I need not do more than chronicle a "good time," and the presence of Mrs. Pearson, the English visitor, Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens of California, and the national president.

* * *

Miss I. C. De Velling goes to Arkansas this month to aid the W. C. T. U. of the state in oragnization, agitation and education of temperance sentiment.

* * *

Mrs. Drusilla Wilson has organized thirty unions in Kansas during the last two months.

* * *

So says Our Herald, which is again a weekly, but by no means a weakly. Mrs. Gougar's "thinking for herself" makes a bright paper.

* * *

Mrs. Hobart, president of Minnesota W. C. T. U. keeps the crusade fire still burning. She leads a holy war for the children's sake, against drunken public school teachers and officials. All honor to these mothers of the republic who watch and gurad its highest interests.

The Rev. J. A. Hughes, of Georgia, makes good use of the broad and generous columns of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, (Ga.), to tell the honest truth about the W. C. T. U. He says of it: "It is the only temperance movement that bears the name of the anointed Saviour."

* * *

An invalid W. C. T. U. sympathizer urges a work for the "shut in" sisterhood of the society. It is the careful clipping and pasting on sheets of paper, of all the items in newspapers of crimes and casualties which are traceable to drink. She thinks, and so do I, that a few annual summaries of these items would horrify people into prohibition.

* * *

I told a—I misstated the facts in regard to the Wisconsin state fair and its supposed freedom from the sale of alcoholic liquors. I was misinformed by one I had reason to believe a well-informed person. While Governor St. John addresses the multitude gathered at a great state occasion, the state authorities, by their agents, will be dispensing liquor at so much a glass.

* * *

Do not mistake! I do not say the state authorities will be selling, but the men they have authorized to do that work. Are they not the principals in the transaction, however?

* * *

The people of Wisconsin and its capital are not accessory. They have petitioned and petitioned, and when petition has been scorned they have protested, but all to no purpose.

* * *

Mrs. Merriwether's poem, "She Sails by the Stars," published in a late number of The Union Signal, is winning golden opinions.

* * *

Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, of Brooklyn, N. Y., will give the winter months to the W. C. T. U. lecture field. Her poems in The Union Signal have most happily introdued this gifted woman to a large and waiting audience. Her personal presence will be still more welcome.

I learn that she may be addressed at 433 Ninth street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

On Duty.

News From the Field.

KANSAS.

Eskridge.—I am a constant reader of The Union Signal and feel that I gain much strength and inspiration from its pages, but week by week as the paper comes to hand my eye involuntarily turns to the "News from the Field." I am sorry that I so seldom see anything from our beloved Kansas, while other states almost weekly tell us something of what they are doing, and the glorious results attained. Now dear sisters in Kansas, those in high authority, please let us oftener hear from you. We in the little town of Eskridge feel that we are blest above our fellows. As to location we are lifted high in God's fresh, pure air, and also in a great measure far removed from the distress and sorrow caused by drunkenness; but notwithstanding this we feel that we must not lay down our oars and drift leisurely with the tide. We are trying to keep up a healthy temperance sentiment among the people. This we are trying to do by keeping the subject of temperance constantly before them. We celebrated the evening of May 1, "Prohibition Day," with an able lecture by Hon. Jetmore.

About the first week in May we had the great pleasure of a "chalk talk" by Mrs. Nelly Bayley, of Chicago. After the lecture was over we had no doubt of her divine call to this line of work. In June we held an ice cream and cake social. Sandwiched between the eating and chatting, we had some choice literary exercises. Mr. Mitchell, one of our attorneys, read an original paper entitled, "Eulogy upon Woman and Woman's Work." This was very fine. We also had the brass band in attendance. We had a good time and cleared $24.60.

We have conducted a course of lectures for the past year. The subject of temperance has been presented in as many phases as we have had lectures. Many of these lectures were very fine indeed; and not least among them was the one on "The Physiological Effects of Alcohol on the System," by our home physician, Dr. E. W. Weems. This lecture was published entire in the village papers.

But last week was the supreme week of our lives. We had with us Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Kansas city, Mo. She came to our healthful little town to rest, but her active brain and zeal for the cause would not let her remain idle. Her first lecture was given on the evening of the 10th. The church was filled to overflowing, and more than one hundred persons stood on the outside. Mrs. Hoffman captured her hearers at once, held their closest attention for an hour and a half; the deepest, and most thoughtful interest was manifested in every face. Mrs. Hoffman is a powerful speaker, wonderful in argument, touching in appeal. Nothing but praise of the speaker, and acknowledgment of the truths uttered have been heard since the lecture. But her Wednesday evening lecture was the most wonderful lecture I ever heard. Subject, "Political Aspect of the Nation from a Temperance Standpoint." The speaker seemed inspired from the beginning of her address. Commencing back with the Roman empire, she traced the history of nations down to the present hour. Power, position, place and parties melted before her, as the mists before the rising sun.

She used the language of a statesman, the arguments of a lawyer, the appeal of the minister of the gospel, mixed with the sublime power and pathos that is born in the pent up fire of the soul. In the audience was every phase of character. Whisky Democrats, whisky Republicans, prohibition Republicans, anti third-party Republicans. But she silenced all objections by the wonderful way in which she handled her subject. Not a word of criticism is heard. Mrs. Hoffman is not sarcastic, but her heart is full of love and sympathy that gains your love and confidence at once. Mrs. Hoffman talked to the colored people on Monday evening, and met with our local W. C. T. U. Monday afternoon. Yours for the success of the third party, Mrs. J. W. Sidwell,

Pres. W. C. T. U.

SECOND DISTRICT W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. of the second congressional district held a two days' convention at Garnett, on the 20th and 21st, which was largely attended, fifty-five delegates representing twenty-five unions

Mrs. Drusilla Wilson, district president, presided. The reports of the work were highly encouraging, and the tone of public sentiment may be best understood by the character of the resolutions. The most important are as follows:

Resolved, That while we are of a non-sectarian, non-political body we are uncompromisingly devoted to the cause of Prohibition, but that in the present crisis in our state, as the Republican party has in its platform given its hearty endorsement to the present law, and pledged itself to its faithful and honest enforcement, we will work and pray for the election of its standard bearer, John A. Martin, by such a majority, that the world may understand, that Kansas has no endorsement for the acts and utterances of George Glick, whose influence has been invariably in favor of the saloon and adverse to the home.

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the re-submission of the prohibitory amendment.

Other resolutions were passed favoring a stricter observance of the Christian Sabbath, the necessity of evangelistic work, the organization of Bands of Hope and young ladies' unions and to faithfully work to secure a law for the compulsory education in scientific temperance in the public schools, and then a final resolution was passed denying the statement going the rounds of the press that "the W. C. T. U. of Kansas repudiated the action of St. John, and were violently opposed to him," but they expressed their admiration for his bravery in having the courage of his convictions, and in the speeches many expressed themselves heartily in sympathy with the Pittsburgh ticket.

Thursday evening the mass meeting was addressed by Mrs. Emma Molloy, who is a most persuasive, eloquent and logical speaker.

After a very pathetic appeal to the voters to stand by the mothers, wives, daughters and sisters in their warfare for home protection, she gave a scathing arraignment of the present state administration and counseled the voters to support the state Republican ticket and not to forget in the national ticket to rebuke the action of the Chicago convention.

She not only made a good many votes for Martin, but many were likewise converted to the St. John ticket.

The convention adjourned Friday morning, the delegates going to their different localities strengthened and encouraged to persevere in the work of the W. C. T. U. and grateful for the unbounded hospitality, warm welcome and courtesy of the W. C. T. U. sisters and citizens generally of the plucky little city of Garnett, whose citizens have taught the express companies a wholesome lesson of respect for law and have banished the saloons from their city.

MISSOURI.

FOURTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The fourth congressional district of Missouri held its semi-annual W. C. T. U. convention in Savannah, Andrew county, July 17 and 18. Convention opened at 11 a. m. July 17, with Mrs. Bell Downey, district president, in the chair. The first session was devoted to devotional exercises, led by our grand state president, Mrs. Hoffman.

An essay by Miss Morris, also by Rev. Mr. Stephens, with discussions on juvenile work, formed the program of the afternoon. These exercises were enlivened by the coming of the Savannah Band of Hope, who sang "Our Temperance Band," their bright little faces and voices were a new incentive to effort.

At the evening session addresses of welcome from W. C. T. U., citizens and clergy were given by Mrs. Glazier, Mr. Danford, and Rev. Mr. Hawkins. Response on behalf of delegates by Mrs. Dodds. Mrs. Downey gave an interesting account of W. C. T. U. work in the fourth district since the first union was formed at Rochester in 1882. Mrs. Hoffman then gave us an eloquent address.

Friday's sessions opened at 9 a. m. with devotional exercises. Committee on credentials reported sixteen delegates present from four unions, not including Savannah which was represented by the entire union. The unions present made good reports. The president also reported eight more unions in the district not represented.

Mrs. Downey was re-elected president, Mrs. Montgomery, of Mound City, secretary; Mrs. Glazier, Savannah, treasurer; superintendents of Legislative Work, Press Work, and Scientific Instruction, and presidents for four counties, were also elected.

Committee on plan of work recommended that every effort be made to fully organize the district; that the convention take steps to raise a fund to be held by the treasurer to aid in this work; ($28 was pledged by the unions present) that the unions be urged to follow out the principal lines of work, especially juvenile and gospel temperance work. The resolutions were splendid. From them I quote the following:

Resolved, That we recommend to all unions a more thorough and systematic study of God's word, that they may grow strong and be armed for every good word and work.

Resolved, That we find but one standard of morality in the Bible for man and woman; and that mothers wives and daughters should exact honor for honor, chastity for chastity, and temperance for temperance, teaching our children the same.

Resolved, That we deplore the Downing law. That we believe it is never right to license wrong. We earnestly desire its repeal and will work for it; but while it is a law we believe its enforcement should be sought by all law abiding citizens.

Resolved, That woman's first duty is to protect her home and her children, and as a means to this end she shall persistently seek the ballot until she obtain it.

It would have done "our editor" good to have seen our ladies take a rising vote for woman's suffrage, almost unanimous.

Mrs. Hoffman gave the closing address Friday evening, which was said to be grand.

C. V. Jones, Supt. Press Work.

PRINCETON CAMP MEETING.

This was held Aug. 22 and 24, by the Reform Club, the Good Templars, and the W. C. T. U. Dr. A. M. Collins, of Cameron, Mo., gave two addresses which were well received. Mrs. Ida F. Burr, of Princeton, Mo., delivered a discourse of great power, showing a thorough acquaintance with the question of the day. She is simple, concise and logical in presenting her subject, and possesses a fine, clear, well-cultivated voice. She recited a poem "The Origin of the Crusade," with excellent taste.

Another of Missouri's daughters was invited here to advocate the cause, Mrs. Alice Williams, president of the W. C. T. U. of Cameron, Mo. For one hour the large audience on Sunday morning listened to her arguments with breathless interest. Many a voter resolved to support a prohibition governor in Missouri, while she pictured the cruelty, corruption and lawlessness of liquor parties. Her voice is sweet, clear and strong. I praise God for having sent two such laborers into His harvest-field as Mrs. Burr and Mrs. Williams. They are each willing to serve the cause during the present campaign. All who wish to see a prohibition governor and legislature in Missouri, ought, at once, to secure their services.

Mary M. Clardy.

Brookfield.—I send you a copy of the resolutions adopted by our W. C. T. U. in memory of Nancy J. Cox, wife of Rev. J. H. Cox, who passed out of this life at her home, the M. E. parsonage, in Brookfield, Aug. 3, 1884:

Resolved, That, whereas, our dear sister, Mrs. Cox, has been called away by death, we feel that our society has lost a friend whose presence and prayers were an inspiration, whose heart was love, and whose words and acts were always in the interest of suffering humanity and the cause of Christ

Resolved, That while we recognize also the loss the church, the community, the missionary society of which she was secretary, and the world sustain, we extend our especial sympathies to the family of the departed, while they labor on, remembering her motto, "The world for Christ," and feeling the assurance that she is at rest in the heaven which seemed so near to her in her last moments, and where there comes no sorrow or pain.

Mrs. M. L. Almroth, Cor. Sec.

Kansas City.—Will some reader of The Union Signal give in its columns a recipe for making apple butter, that will keep, without the use of cider, and oblige many temperance housekeepers?

MICHIGAN.

ALLEGAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

I do not think you have heard anything of what we are doing in Allegan county in the temperance work. The county convention that has just closed was held in Martin. About forty-three delegates and visitors from abroad were in attendance. The weather was fine and there seemed nothing to prevent every one who chose getting all the benefit there was to be derived from it. The program was all carried out, every moment of time being filled to overflowing with its burden of instruction, help and encouragement. Owing to the absence of the county president, Mrs. Foster of Otsego, her place was filled by Mrs. Waldo, of Wayland, whose pleasant face and calm and dignified manner in presiding won all hearts. Resolutions were adopted by the convention promising their support to the Prohibition party; also recommending the use of Steele's text book in the public schools.

Well prepared papers were read on "Drifts of Thought," "The Relation of Women in the Rural Districts to Temperance," "What Shall we do with our Youth?" and the "Food Question in its Relation to Intemperance."

Wednesday evening Mrs. Blakeman, of Otsego, gave a spirited and earnest address, showing the failure of moral suasion to effect a cure for intemperance, and the great need of a new party.

Some of the practical results gained were fifty ten weeks subscriptions to The Union Signal and $3.00 of Union Signal stock taken, and eighteen additional members to the Martin W. C. T. U. bringing up our membership to fifty-nine, nine of whom are honorary, and we are only eight months old.

The concluding address of the convention by our Fifth District president, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, was filled with earnest thought and practical suggestion in regard to scientific temperance instruction in the schools, and the dire necessity of prohibition. She was listened to with close attention, and we felt like exclaiming to the convention "Thou hast kept the good wine until now." Some of the immediate results of this convention have been mentioned, but we hope for further benefits to our local unions, and that an increased interest, membership and earnestness will follow in the near future.

Mrs. M. E. Wylie, Sec. Martin W.C.T.U.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Plainfield.—August 19, 1884. This city has been full of triumph and holy joy today. Buildings draped with the flag of our Union, the stars and stripes, and various mottoes expressive of victory over old King Alcohol, were seen along the highway. Even our thirteen saloons, had a bit of bunting over their doors. Delegates from various portions of our state, and the citizens and temperance organizations of Plainfield, all congregated in the old Baptist church, made to look as good as new by skillful and loving hands, to dedicate the house to God and total abstinence. John H. French, president of P. R. club was in the chair. The club choristers and band gave us sweet music, Rev. M. Honeyman was called upon to offer prayer. In doing so he first presented on behalf of the W. C. T. U., a beautiful Bible. "As this work" he said, "had begun in the prayers of these women, so it had been carried on in prayer, and in faith in God's word." He read the scripture lesson from First Kings, chapter 8. After prayer Mayor Maxson delivered an address from which we quote as follows: "Fellow comrades in our war for humanity and home: The dedication of this beautiful temple is the growth and result of the dedication of manhood and manhood's guardian angel, womanhood, to the grandest and holiest cause that ever enlisted the sympathy of woman or the courage of man. Through all times men have erected monuments, buildings, works of art, and dedicated them to the beings of their worship, the objects of their affections, or the memory of the past. * * * This dedication differs from all these, and speaks to symbolize no victory, to perpetuate no event in our history, nor to serve as a silent tribute of regard for departed worth," as those referred to, "but it speaks in mighty tones of a living present, of woman's prayers answered and children's tears dried in happy sunlit smiles; and poor shattered manhood, rescued from a yawning grave and looking into the red leaves, of a changed heart, chanting the glad song, 'I've been redeemed! I've been redeemed!' It tells of devotion to 'God, our country and our homes.'

In some sense representing the power and the integrity of this city, we hail this day as an augury of better days to the people, an event the most important in the history of Plainfield and of promise in the future. We recognize the hand of God in this great work, in sending Mabee and English to us, to lighten up the pathway of duty, and the presence of noble, self sacrificing woman to awaken within us the chivalry and the courage to follow.

To the W. C. T. U. we are bound by every tie of gratitude and loyalty. We have joined hands and hearts with them in this crusade against the destroyer of her peace and our happiness. Brethren of the club, let us meet in this our new temple to tell the old, old story of experience and devotion, and the new stories of newer conquest won."

MAINE.

I feel grateful that Providence directed my vacation steps Maine-ward this season. The very air is charged with prohibition, and truly, "it is good to be here." I am certain that the eyes of all your readers are turned this way, and that all Christian hearts are praying that these voters may realize that they are to cast their ballots not for Maine alone; that the earnestness with which they utter their yes on the 8th of September, will inspire all the other states with the conviction that the time of their "redemption draweth nigh." Eternal vigilance is the price of prohibition, as well as of liberty, and speakers both native and imported are omnipresent. Among these, the eloquence of Hon. John B. Finch, of Nebraska, is carrying conviction to many hearts.

Of course, our dear Miss Willard could not stay away; She will not only speak in various places upon the amendment, but will be present at the state convention of the W. C. T. U. which meets in Gardiner upon September 3 and 4. I have had the pleasure of listening twice to Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of San Francisco, presenting vividly the contrast between the condition of the people in her own wine-cursed California, and in Maine, with its long record of prohibitory law. She makes her audiences realize how reckless and abandoned would be the voters who could let such a heaven sent privilege slip from their hands.

The liquor interest all over the land is doing its most and its worst to defeat the amendment, but I have great faith in the people of Maine, and still greater faith in any movement which can count God on its side.

MRS. H. G. RICE, Asst. Sec. Boston W. C. T. U.

FRYEBURG.—Woman's day has been the banner day of the convention. In the morning Mrs. Wm. H. Stickney conducted a children's meeting at the stand. "Hold the Fort," was sung by the children, led by Miss Hattie Parsons, on the organ. A selection of scripture was read by Mrs. Stickney, and Miss Waterhouse offered prayer. A very interesting program was successfully carried out by the children. The efforts of the small people and their older friends were received with favor.

Before the children's meeting was fairly over, the morning train brought the speakers and musicians. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, state president of the W. C. T. U., opened the meeting with a brief address of welcome, and the introduction of Gen. Neal Dow, who occupied the remainder of the morning with reminiscences of the old times, and predictions of the success of the amendment.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Bent and Mr. S. W. Fife, cornetists, Miss Lelia Waterhouse, organist, conducted a praise service in the afternoon, Mrs. Stevens read an appropriate psalm. Rev. M. B. Greenhaigh offered prayer. Mrs. Stevens then introduced Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens of San Francisco. This has been Mrs. Stevens' first temperance address in Maine. The impression made on the audience was favorable in the extreme. Graceful and winning in manner, her earnest words gained strength from the pleasing utterance. Temperance in general and the constitutional amendment in particular, was the subject of her remarks.

Miss Lucia Kimball, who is too well and favorably known to need other comment than the mention of the name, followed with an interesting account of the work and a ringing appeal for prohibition.

INDIANA.

The Northern Indiana Baptist association passed the following resolutions at its last meeting:

Since it is an indisputable fact that the liquor traffic is the chief cause of at least three-fourths, if not nine-tenths, of the crime that is so common and constantly increasing; and since we regard that traffic as the common enemy of the human race, destroying health, reason, character and life; warring against the home, the church, the state; filling our almshouses with paupers, our prisons with convicts; blighting the fondest hopes of millions, sending up wails from broken hearts from thousands of otherwise happy homes; staying the process of education and moral culture; opposing itself as the greatest obstacle to religious teaching and the spread of the gospel of our blessed Redeemer, thus rendering itself the consummation of all evils, against which all good people should wage an unceasing warfare regardless of denomination, party, or nationality; threrefore

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the enactment of any laws that propose to license, or in any way regulate, the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage—since all such enactments but provide for its continuance, and in no way protect us from its ravages.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the great work being carried on by the National Temperance society, the Indiana State Christian Temperance Union; and that we exhort our members to actively co-operate with any or all of these organizations until a complete legal or constitutional prohibition of the manufacture or traffic in all intoxicating liquors, both malt and distilled, as a beverage, is secured in our beloved state of Indiana.

Resolved, That, to this end we recommend the forming of temperance societies in our Sabbath schools, and that, at least one temperance lesson each quarter be given in our schools; and that the pastors of our churches be urged to preach often and loud against this most gigantic of all evils, and that we cease not our labors until the goal of absolute prohibition be reached.

Resolved, That as a Christian denomination we declare ourselves opposed to any and every form of compromise with that hydra-headed, peace disturbing, law defying, soul destroying monster, the rum traffic; and, that we will be satisfied with nothing less than its complete extermination from our midst, and, that to this end we will pray and work, trusting in God for deliverance from this greatest and worst of all national evils.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CLARION COUNTY.—The interest in the cause of temperance is moving forward with gigantic strides in our county. Thursday, August 21, was "temperance day" at the Clarion district camp meeting. The morning was warm and sultry—nevertheless when a carriage load of us reached the encampment, after a drive of thirteen miles from Edenburg, we found the advocates of prohition engaged in a prayer service, which was well attended for such an early hour. At 10 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Lusher, of Parker City, delivered one of the finest lectures on that subject that it has been our privilege to hear. At two o'clock, the W. C. T. U. held a platform meeting. There was a full attendance of ladies from the different unions in the county. Reports were read, interspersed with choice music. Rockland W. C. T. U. was represented in a very spirited manner by Mrs. Kate Davis Witherup; Lamartine, by Miss May Finley; Victory, by Mrs. Shanas; Clarion, by Miss Clara Rankin; Strattanville, by Mrs. H. L. Young; Elk City, by Mrs. Geo. Guyer; Edenburg, by Miss Hettie A. Keatley.

After reports were read, Miss Carrie Ferrin (whose business at camp meetings was especially to enlist the ladies in the cause of foreign missions) spoke on the subject of temperance in a very pleasant manner, much to the edification of all present. After the ladies had spoken there were short addresses delivered by Revs. Danon, Burns and Pinney.

It was immediately resolved to hold a W. C. T. U. county convention in Clarion in the month of November. Quite a number of places had delegates there asking for an organization. Mrs. Maj. J. B. Maitland was earnest in her department of work, representing the benefits of scientific temperance instruction in our schools.

In the evening we listened to an eloquent discourse on temperance by Rev. J. M. Bray, presiding elder of Franklin district.

Where only two years ago there were but two unions in the county, now there are a number and others being organized. HETTIE A. KEATLEY, Cor. Sec.

MASSACHUSETTS.

SALLIE F. CHAPIN, IN NEW BEDFORD.—It is with a feeling of gratitude and pleasure that I write to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, to inform them that this noble superintendent of southern work has been in our midst, cheering our hopes and encouraging us to action. She spoke to a large audience in New Bedford on her way from Martha's Vineyard, N. W. C. T. U. convocation, and she and her words were intended to unite north and south in one bond of union. Well does she fulfill the motto, "For God and home and native land."

In the morning she spoke in the jail, to a large number of prisoners, who listened with close attention, as she lifted high the loving Christ, explaining to them the hope there is for them, however low they may have fallen.

Mrs. Chapin inherits the self-sacrificing spirit and energy of the Huguenots, from whom she descended, forsaking home and friends, denying self, traveling through summer's heat and winter's cold, paying her own expenses, and all for the emancipation of both white and colored from the accursed rum slavery, which not only destroys body but soul also. Mrs. Chapin has consecrated her life to the cause of temperance, and her highest wish is that when she enters the gate of the heavenly city to hear this welcome sentence, "She hath done what she could." SUSAN V. SPARE.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

The annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held in Milford, Sept. 24 and 25. Miss Lucia Kimball will give the annual address, and also have charge of a children's meeting. It is hoped that Mrs. Mary B. Willard will also be present. Each auxiliary union is entitled to three delegates, and it is earnestly desired that every union in the state shall be represented. Tuesday evening there will be a reception of delegates.

C. R. MENDELL.

WYOMING.

CHEYENNE.—The second annual convention for Wyoming will be held in Cheyenne, September 22, 23, and 24. Our worthy president is making extensive preparations, and our energetic local union of Cheyenne, with the assistance of the corresponding secretary of the territory, are taking hold with a will to make the convention a grand success. A number of fine addresses have been promised, and a number of distinguished visitors are looked for, including Mrs. Sarah Perkins, Cleveland, National organizer; Mrs. M. E. Shields, president of Colorado, and others. The finest church in the city has been placed at the command of the convention, and the best of entertainment will be furnished visiting members. A cordial invitation is extended through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL to any who may wish to meet with us.

MRS. J. F. JENKINS.,
Cor. Sec. of Wyoming Territory.

MONTANA.

REPORT OF ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The first annual meeting of the Montana W. C. T. U. was held in Helena, August 19 and 20, 1884, Mrs. R. H. Howey, presiding. Five of our eight local unions were represented. Though the attendance was small, all manifested deep interest. The thinking women of Montana feel that the foundation is being laid for the state and there is no time to lose. Next November the constitution, now before the people, will be voted upon, and as it has no prohibitory clause the temperance workers can not willingly see it accepted. An appeal to the people of the territory embodying the most important features of our work, and asking co-operation therein, was one result of the convention, and will be published in the papers generally. A meeting was held Tuesday evening, in which the ministers of Helena and others took part. Ringing speeches were made for prohibition, temperance education in the public schools, and the ballot for woman. Mrs. G. B. Morse, of Bozeman, was elected president for the ensuing year, and Mrs. Davis Wilson, Bozeman, corresponding and recording secretary.

MRS. JAMES KIRKPATRICK, Sec. pro tem.

ILLINOIS.

OUR QUINCY GIRLS.

As nothing has been said directly of us, we think it high time to introduce ourselves to you and our other friends, through the columns of our paper, THE UNION SIGNAL. Though silent we have not been idle. Our union was organized one year ago last May, immediately following a series of lectures by Col. G. W. Bain. At its organization four of our churches were represented by vice presidents. The present number of members who have paid dues, etc., excepting honorary members, is about twenty. We decided to take children's work for our specialty, together with entertainments of various kinds, at all of which we would have our beautiful "Pledge Album." In September a lawn party was given which proved quite successful as a beginning. Between this and the first of the present year, parlor meetings were held in different parts of the city at the residences of friends, when there would be a short program of music, and recitation—the remainder of the evening given to social conversation, etc.

On January 20, we were favored with the presence of Mrs. Nellie Bayley, and held a very successful meeting with the little ones. This Sunday afternoon meeting was the beginning of our Band of Hope, which held its first meeting on the following day, seventy-eight strong, not including officers and teachers, of which we had a full corps. From this time until June, we met every Monday after school, and not once did the interest of the children flag—in fact many were very desirous of continuing through the summer, but we deemed it best to take a vacation during the heated months, that we might be all the more ready and earnest to take up our duties for the winter campaign.

This summer we have contributed $15.00 to the state fund; $5.00 as our part of share in THE UNION SIGNAL stock, have no debts, and money enough to reopen our Band of Hope in September. MIRA DUNCAN,
Recording Secretary.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

—The Seventeenth district will hold a convention at Vandalia, October 1 and 2. As it is the last convention of the year we hope for a full attendance and a baptism from our Father to prepare us for future work.

A. V. BOULTER, Pres. 17th Dist.

—Please announce that our convention at Tuscola has been postponed from Sept. 10 and 11 to Sept. 16 and 17. Miss West, Mrs. Willard and Mrs. Bayley will be with us. MRS. F. C. JENKINS, Pres.

—The annual convention of the Eighth district will be held in Ottawa, Sept. 12, 13 and 14. Miss West, Mrs. Willard, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Carse, Miss Hood, and Mrs. Nelly Bayley, will be present, ensuring a feast of good things. A large attendance is expected and desired.

MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Pres.

—The Sixth district will hold its annual convention at Rockford, Sept. 16, 17 and 18. A district executive meeting will be held the 16th, the convention proper opening on the evening of that day. Miss West, Mrs. Rounds, Miss Hood, and other prominent workers are to be present. ADELINE M. GOODRICH, Pres.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Miss West will attend conventions in the Eighteenth district at Richview and Pocahontas this week, and the Fifteenth district convention at Tuscola the coming week.

—Mrs. L. S. Rounds begins a series of meetings under the auspices of Sycamore W. C. T. U. on Wednesday of this week. Mrs. Rounds will attend the convention of the Sixth district, at Rockford, September 16, 17 and 18. Unions desiring her services between last mentioned dates and September 28, can secure them, if application is made at once.

—Unions will please order freely of Leaflet No. 7, "The Story of a Great Conviction," and the 4p. leaflet, "Temperance in the Public Schools." They are sent to the unions in our state for mere price of postage, 10 cents per 100. They should be circulated in every public meeting held by the union, at state fairs and other assemblies.

—A live union was organized by Miss Irene Smith at Ebenezer, Calhoun county, Aug. 7, of twelve members, with Mrs. Candace Cresswell, president; Mrs. Jackson Love, vice president; Miss Anna Eaton, corresponding secretary: Miss Florence Greenba, recording secretary; Mrs. Jennie Andrews, superintendent juvenile work; Miss Lucy Love, superintendent UNION SIGNAL work.

—The following railroads offer reductions of one and one-third fare to those attending the state convention, full fare to be paid going, and the reduction given on the return trip: Illinois Central, Chicago & Northwestern, (from Chicago, Dixon and Freeport), Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago & Alton, (from Washington, Bloomington or Delavan), Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, Indiana, Bloomington & Western, and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. The Illinois Midland, Peoria & Pekin, and Central Iowa, will sell round trip tickets. Delegates and members of the executive committee please report to Mrs. E. G. Hibben, Peoria, for entertainment before October 1.

WEST VIRGINIA.

At the recent session of the Parkesburgh association (Baptist) one evening was devoted to a temperance mass meeting held in the grand arbor auditorium, capable of seating an audience of fifteen hundred, the people bringing in their lamps and lanterns for illumination. The effect of the many lanterns hanging throughout the the arbor was at once pleasing and inspiring to the orators of the evening.

Prof. A. L. Purington, of the committee, submitted the report on temperance, and a vigorous one it is, from which we quote the following:

Resolved, That we declare our belief that intemperance is among the greatest and most destructive of the enemies of God and man, and that the rum traffic is the most stupendous crime of the age.

Resolved, That the laws which foster and protect such an inhuman traffic are altogether inconsistent, idiotic, and diabolical, and ought to be forthwith relegated to the dark chambers of oblivion and the companionship of the outgrown and discarded deviltries of bygone savagery.

Resolved, That laws in keeping with the humanity and enlightenment of this Chrisiian age, ought to be spread upon the statute books of all civilized governments, forbidding this monster crime, and punishing it in like manner, as other crimes of like heinousness, such as murder, theft and arson.

Resolved, That we hereby renew our respectful petition, heretofore urged; that the honorable legislature of West Virginia will, at its next session, submit to a vote of the people a constitutional amendment, forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, within this state.

Resolved, That we will use our utmost influence to secure the election of such a legislature as will grant this, our earnest petition.

The discussion on the report was fully as lively and vigorous as the report itself and, if possible, more so.

It is needless to add that the report was unanimously adopted with all its vigorous English.

At the Teay's Valley association (Baptist also), held the following week, the second and third of the above resolutions were adopted, with others equally strong, with hearty enthusiasm, pledging the active influence and votes of the members of the association, for such candidates for the legislature, and such only as are reliably and avowedly in favor of the submission of the prohibitory amendment, and giving most cordial support to the women of the W. C. T. U.

WISCONSIN.

EUREKA.—THE UNION SIGNAL readers will be glad to know that we are keeping up our temperance work in the Sixth district. We have just had our annual convention at Dartford. A goodly number of delegates were present from different parts of the district and an unusual amount of interest manifested in aggressive temperance work.

At the evening meetings the attendance was large and the lecturers listened to attentively, and enthusiastically received.

The first evening Mrs. Phebe B. Whitfield, of Grand Rapids, Mich., gave a very interesting and practical lecture on "The Coming Woman," a temperance lecture treating the subject from a new standpoint.

The second evening Miss Amy C. Kellogg, of Fort Atkinson, Wis., addressed the people on another phase of the temperance question, prohibition, in an earnest practical manner.

The convention adjourned, all feeling that it had been a good and profitable occasion.

During Mrs. Whitfield's stay in our state she lectured in Eureka, Berlin and Ripon, giving in all five lectures to large, and judging from the close attention given, appreciative audiences. Beside her lecture on "The Coming Woman," which is a very instructive, practical lecture, she gave us one on "Prohibition, or Plain Facts for Temperance People," which was said to be the best, touching all points of the temperance question, that we have ever had here, and we thought we had had some most excellent ones before. Both lectures were enthusiastically received and universally spoken of as just what we needed to further the temperance work.

Mrs. Whitfield's appearance before an audience is pleasing, and her easy delivery and perfect articulation, leaves none in doubt as to a single word spoken.

Resolutions Adopted by W C. T.U. of Salem, Mass.

At a neighborhood meeting of the Woman's C. T. Unions of Salem and vicinity, held in town hall, Salem, August 25, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted. At a subsequent meeting of the Salem union, it was voted to send them to THE UNION SIGNAL for publication. Will you please give them a place in your columns? S. E. DALTON, Sec. pro tem.

WHEREAS, The memorials presented to the late National Republican Convention by Hon. Mr. Blair, of New Hampshire, by Miss Willard, president of the N. W. C. T. U., and by others, asking the convention "to declare in its platform and by its candidates, for the submission to the people, of a constitutional amendment, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors as a drink," were entirely ignored, therefore,

Resolved, That the late National Prohibition convention held at Pittsburgh, July 23, at which women were admitted as delegates, taking part in its deliberations, and voting on all questions equally with the men, is the only party that has any claims upon the women of the country, and the appeal of Mrs. Stanton and Miss Anthony to the National Woman's Suffrage Association, equally with the appeal of Mrs. Livermore, to stand by a party that ignores both these vital questions, is not only inconsistent, but a reproach, and the cause of both temperance and suffrage is, in this way, more than in any other, "wounded in the house of its friends."

Resolved, That the one hundred thousand women composing the N. W. C. T. U., cannot consistently "stand by the Republican party."

Resolved, That the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. at its annual convention held in October last, passed a resolution, "That the Prohibitory party stands for right principles as no other party does; we therefore endorse its position, and bid it God speed;" and the appeal to the women of the country by Mrs. Livermore, president of the state union, to "stand by the Republican party," places the women composing the state union, in a most humiliating and equivocal position before the people.

Resolved, That the unions of Salem and vicinity in convention assembled, reaffirm our allegiance to the Prohibition party, and pledge to it our hearty support. And we appeal to the temperance women of the country, to heed no appeals, coming from what source they may, that would lower their standard, and bring reproach upon the cause of "God and home and native land," but to stand firm upon the rock of principle, against which the waves of party expediency and popularity shall beat in vain.

OHIO.

"JUBILEE SERVICE" OF OHIO CONFERENCE CAMP MEETING.

The Ohio conference camp meeting of the Methodist Episcopal church, held its twelfth annual meeting on their grounds near Lancaster, Ohio, commencing August 14, and closing August 25, 1884.

This association recognizes the obligation of the church to the temperance work, and one day of the series of meetings is devoted to that cause. August 16, was temperance day. A very large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the morning, called the "jubilee service," commemorating the advance made for prohibition in the late second amendment campaign. Hon. Mills Gardner, of Washington court house, made a stirring speech, urging the people to hold the ground already taken, and press forward to the final victory which awaits the people of God.

The afternoon hour was given to the crusaders, all of whom were invited to the large platform. The meeting was led by Mrs. Sargent, of Columbus, Mrs. Burns, of Logan, read the scripture lesson, and Mrs. H. C. Lewis, of Columbus offered the opening prayer.

Mrs. Whitridge, of Cincinnati, a leader of one of the bands which were imprisoned, was present, and related the experiences of that hour. Mrs. Bing, of Delaware, and Mrs. L. O. Robinson, of Indianapolis, also made addresses, which were full of interest.

In order to arrange for meetings, and to further the cause, an organization has been formed, called the "Ohio Conference Camp-meeting Crusade Union," which held its second annual meeting August 25, for the election of officers, and other business. President, Mrs. James Taylor, Columbus; treasurer, Mrs. Kemp, Ironton; secretary, Mrs. H. J. Wylie, Columbus; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. A. Meeker, Circleville. SEC.

WELLINGTON.—The ladies of the Wellington W. C. T. U. conceived the idea of arranging an entertainment for a Sunday evening service, the theme of which should be temperance, and the lecturers boys and girls belonging to our homes and schools, thus utilizing a portion of the local talent among them.

Selections were made by a committee, covering nearly every phase of the subject, and assigned to those adapted to give them creditable utterance. Though the work was done in the hottest season, when many were lingering at summer resorts or away on a vacation, and bassos and tenors were, many of them, in Camp Wade, the concert, with what material was available, came off Sunday evening, August 24th. The large Congregational church was packed, galleries and all, and seats were brought into the aisles. The pulpit rostrum, which a few young people had banked with flowers, was occupied by two of our high school graduates, the gentleman presiding. Another who had since taken his high school diploma, graduated from college and prepared for the ministry, led in prayer. We wished to emphasize the fact that the talent is always at hand if properly encouraged, and directed to make an entertainment worthy of the time of thoughtful men and women, and make a good and lasting impression upon those who take a part, and reaching certainly every family connected with them.

No ordinary Sunday evening service would bring out that kind of an audience or one so large. The truths the children learn becomes a part of their mental furnishing, and whatever their surroundings, they will feel that they are individually committed to the side of temperance, sobriety and virtue. Any sacrifice of time and labor expended by the ladies was more than repaid by the cheerful interest, the hearty co-operation, and the contact with the fresh young natures of dear children and promising young people.

MRS. J. W. HOUGHTON,
Cor. Sec. Wellington W. C. T. U.

GOV. ST. JOHN AT CLEVELAND.

According to previous announcement, the prohibition conventions for Cuyahoga county and the nineteenth and twenty-first districts were held at the People's Tabernacle, corner Ontario and St. Clair streets, Monday Sept. 1st. The day was most auspicious in every respect, and the fact that the presidential candidate was to be present and address the evening meeting called together a large and enthusiastic number. The building was suitably and tastefully decorated with banners, mottoes, wreaths, evergreen, and beautiful flowers. The picture of St. John was swung out over the platform, eliciting rounds of applause. Officers were nominated for county ticket, followed by speeches from Revs. Andrews and Delano, and Messrs. Burwell and Gage, after which the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we declare our patriotic devotion to the Prohibition party and the purposes for which it was organized, as announced in the national platform of the party, and to the realization of which we pledge our time, money, lives and sacred honor.

The business of the district conventions was transacted early in the afternoon, and by the time the wheels were fairly in motion a large assembly had convened at the Tabernacle. Stirring speeches were the order of the afternoon, several being called to the platform, who made strong and urgent pleas in support of the national Prohibition candidates, and the necessity of seperate party action. Strongest of those was the speech of Hon. Gideon Stewart of Norwalk, who was interrupted by the arrival of the Kansas hero who was received with great enthusiasm, and spoke briefly concerning his work during the last two months, the outlook in western New York, his reasons for being a Prohibitionist, and the need of rallying to this standard. The evening meeting was thronged, and St. John was received with a hearty storm of applause, such as was due from the citizens of a drink-cursed state, to the champion of constitutional prohibition, who has proven by unquestioned heroism that it can not only be made a fundamental law of a state, but that prohibition does and will prohibit when true men stand behind it. He showed that total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state was the only ground of safety, that regulation of the traffic was impossible, and laws seeking to remedy the evil by such means were a fraud. He gave the reasons often quoted from his recent speeches why he arrainged the Republican rather than the Democratic party, viz.: that the latter pleaded guilty to the charge of complicity with the liquor interest. His plea was eloquent and earnest, holding the attention of the great audience for more than an hour. Many minds were swayed by his honest, candid presentation of facts and arguments, and wavering ones in considerable numbers accepted his as the true solution of this momentous question.—Amendment Herald.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE W. C. T. U. bazaar and lunch stand on the Iowa state fair grounds is one of the attractions enjoyed by the crowds each day. The bazaar under the direction of Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Mahin was a tastily arranged display of pictures and fancy articles. The lunch stand is the work of the Des Moines unions, and all our women will understand something of what this means for the ladies in charge. They only hope the balance in state treasury, when the fair closes, will in some measure testify their efficiency in the endeavor to lighten the financial burdens of the state union.

THE Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. state convention will be held at Harrisburg, Oct. 15, 16, and 17. Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and Mrs. J. R. Nichols will be the speakers of the occasion.

In view of the 150 new unions organized during the year, and the plans for a vigorous campaign in the interest of the Scientific Temperance Education bill an especially interesting and enthusiastic meeting is expected.

IN Washington territory a strong effort is being made upon the part of the enemy for the repeal of woman's ballot, but the women are easily awakened, and Miss Moore is doing what one woman can to arouse the indifferent. She is urging them to the primaries, and they are in some places receiving appointments as delegates by both Democrats and Republicans.

MRS. H. A. HOBART, president of Minnesota W. C. T. U., recently organized a union in west St. Paul. The officers of the new union: President, Mrs. R. N. Hare; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. S. Matthew; treasurer, Mrs. Strong.

MISS HENRIETTA MOORE reports W. C. T. U. matters in Montana moving on finely. It is thought by some of their best posted workers that the temperance people hold the balance of political power. God grant that they may demonstrate their strength!

NOTE the numerical progression of anti-license towns in Illinois! The law under which they were possible is old. But by the natural coincidence of cause and effect, the first thirty towns to vote against license and put away saloons came to the front in the spring of 1876—six months after the organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Illinois. The moral power of Christian women had begun to execute man's old law. As the local unions of women increased, the towns whose names voted anti-license increased. In the spring of 1877 one hundred and eighty towns stood no license, and in 1878 three hundred and ninety-five came into the galaxy of honor. Now, mark how the next session's harvest yielded just as women had sowed! It was in the spring of 1879, following the winter's active canvass for the great home protection petition. Then six hundred and forty-five towns voted "no license," and nearly two hundred others made the attempt. Has not thithe s look that women hold one end, at least, of the force that executes? Does it seem that brute force has much to do with executing the laws of the land?—D. C. Cook.

ON October 1 we shall have ready for issue our Band of Hope Manual and Text Book. It will contain twenty-four lessons, twelve for pupils of the grammar school grade, and twelve primary lessons. Besides these it will contain songs for the quarter, opening exercises, and notes and anecdotes illustrative of the lessons. In addition to full instructions for organizing Bands of Hope. The lessons have been submitted to and have passed the inspection of a committee of eminent physicians, which ensures their scientific accuracy.

The two grades of lessons have been prepared by Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. Mrs. Crafts is a primary teacher of national reputation, and these lessons are in her best style.

They will be issued quarterly, price 5c. per number. All Bands of Hope should be supplied with them.

TEMPERANCE Lesson Leaf for September 28th will be ready in a few days. Subject: "The Story of Deborah." Price 50 cents per hundred, post paid.

TAKE advantage of our Short Term Offer to circulate THE UNION SIGNAL widely during the campaign. Can you not send us a club of four names with one dollar for which we will send the paper for ten weeks with an extra copy to the person getting up the club? Send your national organ to your friends, pastors, physicians, editors, teachers and leading politicians during the political campaign, and let them know the position taken by the W. C. T. U. on the great questions of today. We can hold this offer open but a short time longer.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land," should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

WE hope all our friends who are in arrear with their subscriptions will respond promptly to the statements just sent out. Should there be any mistake please drop us a note and we will engage to make the matter satisfactory. A glance at the tag on your paper will show up to what date your subscription has been paid. If it has expired please send on your renewal at once so that we may be able to dispense with book accounts.

Miscellaneous Selections.

EX-GOVERNOR ST. JOHN.

The strictures upon Governor St. John so freely made by the Republican press of the state are in a great measure unjust. No Republican within the state, at least no man so prominent, has been truer and more devoted to the Republican party than he. Neither Senators Plumb or Ingalls, United States Marshal Simpson, United States attorney Hallowell, or even prospective governor, John A. Martin (to say nothing of many lesser lights) have been so much so. Few of them, indeed, have accomplished more for the party than he. That he now, in his zeal for the cause of Prohibition, has decided that he cannot sacrifice the higher duty he owes his conscience, is no cause for treating him with contumely. St. John is as devotedly attached to the cause of Prohibition as the great apostles of human freedom were attached to the cause of abolition, and with fully as good, if not better reasons, and in the judgment of the future will stand like them, fully justified and honored for the manly attitude he has always taken in support of his principles. Because we others, for the hope of political or other gain, are seduced from our allegiance in the cause of humanity, it does not follow that the singularity of his integrity disgraces him, but rather us. We know the motive of our cowardice, does it necessarily follow that we shall escape criticism by imputing some motive to him for his courage? The fact that he abandons all prospect of political preferment in Kansas, backed by a strong following, with an absolute certainty of not gaining it elsewhere, stamps his motives as pure and genuine!

That he could abandon the hope of preferment within the Republican party for the sake of some more coveted honor his critics understand, hence their accusations, but they cannot grasp the nobler idea that he can abandon a good cause for a better one.

St. John, thanks to the same critics, stands for a cause. For him to desert it would do it an irreparable injury, hence the chagrin of the men who sought to drive him from the Republican party when he and the party were united in the same cause. We cannot follow St. John in this matter, yet we do not condemn him, but rather honor him, and regret that we are not of sufficient value to the cause to warrant us in standing by his side.—Kansas Herald and Record.

THOWING AWAY A VOTE.

Good men of both the old parties are afraid that to vote for St. John is to throw away their votes. Then what are the minority people always doing? What idiots the Democrats of the nation have been for twenty-five years! What idiots the Republicans in Fulton county have been for forty years! But these men have not thrown away their votes. They have not elected anybody, it is true, but what an influence these votes have exerted upon the party in power! Here is all the time a resolute minority ready to step into power the moment the ascendant party stumbles.

But especially potent are the votes of Prohibitionists. These are the votes of men of courage and lofty moral standing. They are the votes of men who cannot be bribed, who cannot be swayed from the right. These votes constitute a notice served upon cowardly Republican and rascally Democratic leaders: "If you don't choose to protect our homes and our children we will do that job for ourselves!"

So it is that every vote cast for St. John and Hobbs in Fulton county is a bullet sent whistling to the heart of the whisky ring that maintains the damnable groggeries at Havana, Peoria and Galesburg, which are ruining our Fulton county boys by hundreds!

Prohibition votes are not in vain. The arch fiend of hell started the idea that a vote for St. John is a "vote thrown away!"—Fulton County Democrat.

SOME ridicule is being visited upon the Prohibitionists for running their own candidate. Let them do it. They are honest in what they are about, which is more than can be said of some of the organizations which just now yield a greater power in politics. It did no good to throw Elijah Lovejoy's press into the river in 1837—nor to kill the editor himself, for that matter. The seed is under the earth; if it is an acorn, there will be an oak; if it is a thistle seed, there will be a thistle. Let it grow, and see.—Chicago Current.

A PROHIBITION club of sixty or more members has been organized at Galesburg, Ill. It proposes some excellent work.

Signal Notes.

LET US BE PRESIDENT.

Let us suppose a county where there is a Democratic vote of 2,000, a Republican vote of 1,600. For years it has stood just about so; but there has grown up a temperance sentiment in both parties. There can be counted 600 Prohibitionists among the Republicans, and 400 among the Democrats. For years the Democrats have held sway. The saloons were with them. A court-house ring has been formed. All sorts of deviltry have been going on unchecked. The Prohibitionists in both parties say: "We will stand this no longer," and organize a Prohibition club against the vigorous protests of both parties. The club grows until it has drawn say 400 from the Democrats and 600 from the Republicans.

Now this third party is in a position to co-operate with the Republican party, and both together they completely overthrow the liquorites by electing a combination ticket. The ring is broken and a clean temperance county administration inaugurated.—L. C. PITNER in N. W. Christian Advocate.

FOR the benefit of the many Christian gentlemen who honestly believe with Horace Greeley that all Democrats are men who love rum and hate niggers, and that all Republicans are the reverse, the Herald will compare the saloon keeping business in a few of the various states of the Union. If in strong Republican states there are fewer saloons than in strong Democratic states, the inference drawn by Mr. Greeley, and his successors might be justified, but such does not appear to be the fact. The census of 1880 shows that the number of saloon keepers and bartenders in certain states was as follows:

|---|---|
| Georgia | 399 |
| Kentucky | 1,191 |
| Maryland | 1,276 |
| Mississippi | 323 |
| North Carolina | 171 |
| South Carolina | 200 |
| Texas | 1,259 |
| Michigan | 2,197 |
| Iowa | 1,858 |
| Massachusetts | 2,474 |
| Illinois | 5,575 |
| Wisconsin | 2,321 |
| Rhode Island | 445 |
| Delaware | 113 |

Georgia and Kentucky are two staunch Democratic states having the same population as Iowa, an equally staunch Republican state, yet Georgia had but 399 men in the saloon business, and Kentucky but 1,191, while Iowa had 1,858. Massachusetts has always been a good Republican state. Its population is the same as that of the Democratic state of Texas, yet Massachusetts has twice as many saloon keepers as Texas, and so has Michigan, another Republican state of about the same population. Wisconsin, a steady Republican state, has about 1,300,000 inhabitants, and so has North Carolina, a Democratic state. Wisconsin has 2,321 saloon keepers, while North Carolina has 171. Ohio, a Republican state, with only 25 per cent more people than Indiana, a Democratic state, has 50 per cent more saloon keepers, and little Republican Rhode Island has three times as many saloons as little Democratic Delaware.

DR FRENCH, in a recent work, "Nineteen Centuries of Drink in England," says that mead was the intoxicant of the ancient Briton. The Romans introduced wine. Cider was known at an early date, but the Saxons, Danes, and Normans brought in the secret of stronger beverages. Distilled liquors were introduced under the Plantagenets, and clergymen then began to tipple. In the sixth century men of all degrees "slumbered away their time in drunkenness.

BECAUSE saloons are prohibited within a certain distance of a school house, in Tennessee, the liquor-dealers have been instrumental in burning down the school houses in their locacities. The acadamy at Trimble was the laat to meet such a fate.

SIX hundred legal voters of Union County, Dakota, petitioned the Commissioners to grant no more licenses to sell liquor. The petition was granted and thus one more county of Dakota has joined the prohibition ranks.

THE Washington Sentinel, the recognized organ of the brewers, says: "There can no longer be any doubt that the prohibition question will be the great political issue of the day."

THE Prohibition League is a journal devoted to the suppression of the dram shop, and advocates a Sunday every seven days and twenty-four hours long.

HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe.

Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause; the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forwa[illegible] new and vigorous growth. The effec[illegible]le are not transient, like those [illegible] preparations, but remain a long [illegible]akes its use a matter of economy.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 36. CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 18, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in St. Louis, October 22, 23, 24, and 25. Preparatory to this meeting, and in accordance with the usual custom, Tuesday, the 7th of October will be observed as a day of prayer, that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon the convention and attend all its deliberations.

NOTA BENE.—In our Sunday school lesson, page 7, 20th line from the top of third column, read James I., instead of Charles II. Mistakes will occur even in such well-regulated families as THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE five hundred dollars sent from Milwaukee to be distributed among the saloons in Rockford, Ill., for young men, on a recent political occasion, is another evidence of the desperate and bold front put on by the whisky oligarchy. It remains to be seen whether the Christian people of this land are going to sit idly by content simply to watch the encroachments of this unscrupulous and cruel foe.

THE Portland correspondent of the Boston Journal says in reference to the efficiency of the prohibitory law of the state: "So long as it exerts a restraining influence it is not a failure." He then proceeds to show by tables of relative statistics that in the last twenty years, as the prosecutions for liquor offenses have increased, evidencing thereby the increased enforcement of the law, the prosecutions for offenses against morality and chastity have in about the same percentage decreased.

THE Vermont W. C. T. U. is holding its annual convention this week at Middlebury; New Hampshire comes next week at Milford; also Wisconsin at Waukesha, Wyoming at ——, and Minnesota at Winona. Rhode Island W. C. T. U. will meet in annual convention Sept. 30. Of all the pretty programs, the "Souvenir" of Vermont takes the lead; tied with white ribbon, its clear typography, stiff covers, texts and mottoes, and its diversified promises of "fat things" it is a "joy forever."

THE women and children of the cities of Maine entered heartily into the work of election day. All day at the polls, ladies might have been seen offering bouquets and affirmative votes to the men who approached the ballot box. Little children piped up, "Will you cast a 'Yes' vote?" as understandingly as their elders and far more irresistibly. Doubtless the large majority of the Republican ticket is due to the unusual activity of the temperance workers who in their zeal for the amendment persuaded from their retreats, the laggard and indifferent citizens.

THE full text of the constitutional amendment adopted in Maine on the 8th of September is as follows:

The manufacture of intoxicating liquors, not including cider, and the sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, are and shall be forever prohibited. Except, however, that the sale and keeping for sale of such liquors for medical and mechanical purposes and the arts, and the sale and keeping for sale of cider, may be permitted under such regulations as the legislature may provide. The legislature shall enact laws with suitable penalties for the suppression of the manufacture, sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, with the exceptions herein specified.

THE Chicago papers of Monday morning while boiling over with rage at the "fanatics" who dare to endanger Republican triumphs, in their "mad career" for prohibition, yet give much space to the usual Sunday murder caused by whisky. Still later the governor of Illinois declines to interfere in the case of a murderer who is to be executed on Friday, and who on hearing of this last blow to his hope for life says sadly: "I did not know what I was doing; I was drunk." Here are four lives involved in one week's little scene in the great tragedy of drink. If four cases of cholera were in the city, it would be stirred to its foundations. "But cholera spreads," says the cautious citizen. Yea verily, but in its worst ravages it does not exceed the miseries of this constant and constantly increasing epidemic of drink.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE was very much amazed the other day in Maine at a children's meeting when the little folks were being as she thought, delightfully entertained by a charming speaker, to see how listless was the children's demeanor throughout the exercise. On appealing to ex-governor Perham, who sat beside her on the platform, for the reason of their apparent non-interest, she was answered by the governor in action and not in words. As soon as the speaker had finished endeavoring to waken the listless little people, the governor stepped to the front of the platform and asked quickly, "How many children have ever seen a drunken man?" No response. "As many as have seen one, raise their hands." Not a hand was lifted. Such testimony to the prohibiting of prohibition was irresistible, and the situation was at once explained.

ANOTHER bit of testimony comes to us through Mrs. Woodbridge and we feel that it is no more than right that our readers shall have the benefit of it. A prominent citizen of Portland and a "pillar" in one of the Congregational churches of the city gave his declaration publicly to the ticket of St. John and Daniel. On being asked by Mrs. Woodbridge if he was acquainted with Mr. Blaine and if he could substantiate the statement so often credited to Gen. Neal Dow, that Mr. Blaine is a total abstainer, he replied, "He is not a total abstainer in principle. Being in Washington over Sabbath, I was invited to dine with Mr. Blaine at his home. I declined as I do not go out on that day, but friends of my party accepted and had as grand a wine-dinner as can be furnished. Such facts can be furnished ad libitum." We do not believe in circulating gossip of this sort, so long as it is merely gossip, but in reply to the frequently published statements as to Mr. Blaine's vigorous temperance principles, the above has a legitimate place in temperance journalism.

BISHOP SPALDING'S article in the North American Review for September, entitled "The basis of Popular Government," ought to be read by every man who intends to vote in November. "It is manifest" says the bishop, "that our politics have become essentially immoral. Neither party dares to touch any question that is higher or holier than that of tariff or no tariff, looking upon a wretched financial problem as the only vital interest for a people who lack not money, but virtue. The eternal principles of justice and morality are ignored and our electoral contests have degenerated into mere struggles for office; and to suggest that conscience ought again to assert itself in American politics, is to make one's self ridiculous." He says further and with a more encouraging outlook upon national affairs, that "there is still left in the mass of the people a deep moral earnestness, which, if it can be called into action, may yet lift the nation to higher and purer life," and that the welfare of the nation demands that a new party springing from the deep yearning of multitudes for purer and nobler national life and upheld by the enthusiasm inspired by high moral aims and purposes," may take the place of the old parties which now bar the way to noble conquest. It is a notable contribution to the literature of the present campaign.

SAINT OGG.

MRS. LIDE MERIWETHER.

Dedicated to Woman's friend and childhood's lover, Col. John P. St. John.

Ogg, son of Beorl, the legend says,
Was a boatman poor, on the river Floss,
Who patiently spent his toilsome days
In ferrying passengers across;
Rowing, rowing, in calm or storm,
No matter if summer suns glow warm,
Or cold waves moan and toss.

It happened once, when the winds were high,
And the moaning waves rose black and wide,
And dun clouds swept o'er the evening sky,
That a woman came to the river side;
She was clad in rags, she was worn and wild,
And she bore in her arms a little child;
"Who will row me across?" she cried.

"And wherefore dos't thou desire to cross?"
The boatmen question, with wondering eyes;
"The rocks lie thick in the river Floss,
Tarry 'till morning, an thou art wise;
Take shelter here, from the gathering storm."
Her lips grow ashen with wild alarm,
"Nay, row me across!" she cries.

Then Ogg, son of Beorl, rose up and said,
(Not reckoning gain or loss,)
"I hear on the wind the rushing tread
Of the water wraiths of Floss;
The rocks lie thick, and the waves are rough,
But thy heart needs it, that is enough,
I will ferry thee across."

And it came to pass, as she stepped ashore,
That her rags into shining robes were turned,
Her face the beauty of angels wore,
And a halo around it glowed and burned;
And she said, "oh! blessed in thought, and deed!
Thou dids't not wrangle with the heart's need,
But thine own with pity yearned.

"Henceforth, whoever steps into thy boat
Shall be safe from peril, by wind or wave;
Unharmed, it over the rocks shall float,
And the lives of man and beast shall save;"
And the "blessed boat" gained a wondrous fame,
From its thousands saved, when the fierce floods came
From a yawning, watery grave.

And when Ogg, the son of Beorl died,
Behold! in the parting of his soul,
The boat was loosed, with the ebbing tide,
And softly over the waters stole;
Drifting seaward, beyond the swells
That echo back, as the passing bells
Their mournful tidings toll.

But 'tis said, in the floods of all after years,
When the evening star sheds its lambent hue,
St. Ogg, with his "blessed boat" appears,
Far out on the water's deepening blue;
And the blessed virgin sits in the prow,
With a sunbright glory around her brow;
And the weary rowers, who wait their doom,
With slackened oars, in the gathering gloom,
Take heart, and pull anew.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?

PROF. GEO. FOSTER, M. P.

Does Prohibition prohibit? "No," say all the retail sellers of liquor, all the brewers, all the distillers, and all the advocates of the makers and sellers of whisky and beer. And yet they band themselves together to fight Sunday closing in Great Britain, local option and total prohibition whenever an attempt is made to adopt and enforce either of these. In Canada they form themselves into a benevolent (?) association, subscribe $40,000, and hire the best available speakers to curse prohibition. Yet they all stand up and in united chorus declare "Prohibition does not prohibit, more liquor is drunk under it than under license."

If prohibition does not prohibit, what are they afraid of? Why do they spend thousands of dollars to defeat it? Why do they distribute their literature and hire costly speakers? If more liquor will be sold is not that what the brewers and distillers are after?

Their testimony is not trustworthy. They contradict their own assertions. They know their craft is in danger.

Does Prohibition prohibit? "Yes," says the advanced sentiment of the best countries in the world, which have partly embodied it and are rapidly more fully embodying it in their laws. Thirty-five years ago there was no such thing as prohibition in the legislation of Anglo Saxon countries. Today restrictive prohibition forms the chief element in all license laws, limiting the sellers to a very small percentage of the people, limiting the classes of persons to whom they shall sell, the hours and days of sale, and the conditions under which they may sell. Today partial prohibition forbids the traffic on Sunday in Scotland, Ireland and Wales, in all the colonies in the United States. Today local option prohibition shuts up the dramshops in three-fourths of the area of Massachusetts, more than half of Maryland, in ninety counties in Florida, in over ninety counties in Georgia, in one-third of Alabama, in one half of South Carolina, in seventy-five counties in Arkansas, in forty counties of Missouri, in one half of Rhode Island and Connecticut, in five counties of New Jersey, in a large part of Tennessee, and in large areas of New York, Illinois, Wisconsin and other states, and from two cities and twenty-eight counties and in the whole of the North West territory in Canada. Today total prohibition rules in 1,500 parishes in England, in eighty-nine estates in England and Scotland, in Bessbrook, (4,000); Saltaire, (5,000); Low Moor, (1,200); and other small British towns; in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Kansas and Iowa. The principle of prohibition has been affirmed in the British house of commons in 1883 by a majority of eighty-seven, in the Canadian house of commons in 1884 by a vote of 122 to 40, by the legislatures of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Manitoba, and the demand for its embodiment into law is today the advanced question in all Anglo Saxon legislatures.

Now is it possible that all this unexampled and astonishing growth of public sentiment is wrong, and that the liquor sellers and makers only are right?

Does Prohibition prohibit? Yes, says the garnered experience of those who have tried it.

1. The Forbes MacKenzie act.—Passed in 1854. Prohibits the sale of liquors on Sunday in Scotland. Three years before the law came into force the arrests for drunkenness and crime in Glasgow and Edinburg were respectively 71,648 and 28,905. The arrests for the three years succeeding the enforcement of the law were respectively 53,146 and 23,903. Decrease in three years in Glasgow 18,502, in Edinburg 5,002. In thirty-one cities in Scotland the arrests for Sunday drunkenness and crime were, for the year before the law, 11,471, and the year after 4,299 or a decrease of sixty-five per cent. No attempt has been made to repeal the law. When twenty-four years after, a similar measure was proposed for Ireland, forty-three out of forty-eight Scotch members voting in the house of commons warmly supported it.

2. The Irish Sunday closing act.—This was enacted in 1878 and applied to all but the five large cities. The result was a diminution in the Irish liquor bill of £1,576,634 in one year, a reduction in total summary cases of crime of 12,889, in cases of drunkenness of 8,702. The act was introduced in 1878 by a private member, and was enacted for five years. So satisfactorily has it worked that in 1884 it was introduced as a government measure, made perpetual, and to include the five cities formerly exempted.

3. The 1,500 parishes in England and Wales.—These have a population of 250,000 souls; have had for a long time neither public house nor beer shop. In 1869 a report of the house of convocation was presented to the queen in which this testimony is borne:

> Few, it may be believed, are cognizant of the fact, which has been felicited by the present inquiry, that there are at this time, within the province of Canterbury, upward of one thousand parishes in which there is neither public house nor beer shop; and where, in consequence of the absence of these inducements to crime and pauperism, according to the evidence before the committee, the intelligence, morality, and comfort of the people are such as the friends of temperance would have anticipated.

4. Bessbrook, Tyone, Saltaire, and the English estates.—Bessbrook, population 5000. Employs over 3000 hands in linen mills; no beer or spirits are sold, no pawn office, no drunkenness, no pauperism and no police. In Tyone county, an area of 61 square miles, population 10,000, no public houses, no policemen, poor rates half of what they were under license, and the absence of crime is re-remarkable. Saltaire, population 5000, a manufacturing town in Yorkshire, no public house or beer shop, rents promptly paid, morals high, homes comfortable. Low Moor, population 1,200, no public house or beer shop, no police, pawn shop, or lockup, average death rate low, community prosperous.

Of the English estates the Edinburgh Review says:

> We have seen a list of eighty-nine English estates in England and Scotland where the drink traffic has been entirely suppressed, with the very happiest social results. The peasants and fishermen are flourishing.

5. Potter County, Pennsylvania.—Population, 14,000. Thirty years ago it was noted for its drunkenness. No-license judges were elected for five years. The effect was such that at the end of the five years no-license judges were again elected and then the legislature was asked to prohibit licenses in the county. For more than twenty years they have had prohibition. Judge Williams in 1880 writes:

> As to results, I can say that, while the county has been steadily growing in population and business, pauperism and crime have steadily decreased. For the past five years the county jail has been fully one-half the time without any other inmate than the keeper and his family. The effect of this system is felt in many ways; taxes are reduced, the business of the criminal courts greatly diminished, industry and sobriety take the place of idleness and dissipation, and intelligence and morality are advanced.
> But one effort has been made to repeal this local law, and that has failed by reason of the decided protest of a majority of tax payers of the county.

7. Maryland.—More than one-half the state is under prohibition by local option. The first county gained was Worcester, in 1874. The official reports show a remarkable falling off in crime and taxation. For the three terms of court preceding prohibition the presentments made by the grand jury in three counties were as follows: Caroline county, 45; Worcester county, 116; Dorchester county, 100. For the three terms succeeding prohibition the presentments were for three counties, 22, 38, and 57 respectively, a decrease of 60 per cent.

The president of the State Prisoner's Aid Society in 1880 concludes his reports thus:

> The local option law has produced the most favorable results. Of this I have the strongest evidence in the decrease of prisoners, which I noticed in my visitations to certain counties, and in such districts where the law has been enforced. I have examined the prisons, and held special interviews with the sheriffs and other officers, who were expected to know its effects, and am informed that it has produced the most decided and happy changes in promoting peace, safety, and quiet, where formerly riot, noise and disorder prevailed; especially on public days and on Saturday nights after the working men were paid off.

8. Vineland, New Jersey.—Population, 11,000. Founded in 1861. Has had no liquor sold in it. The people vote each year on the question. Not more than thirty or forty out of 1200 voters are found to favor license. In 1880 their police cost $100; $600 was appropriated for deserving poor; they had no paupers or habitual drunkards; one small lock-up for occasional tramps. Twenty-four school houses, one of which cost $30,000; excellent churches, some costing from $20,000 to $30,000; splendid roads: seventeen miles of railroad running through, with six railway stations in the limits; more than one hundred manufacturing establishments, good stores and beautiful homes. The valuation of property is $6,000,000, and the rate of taxation three and a half mills on the dollar.

9. Carroll County, Georgia.—Twenty years ago no county in Georgia had more stills and bar-rooms in proportion to population. Drinking and its attendant evils were terrible. The good people set to work, and after a fight of twelve years secured prohibition. Haywood, of Emery College, in 1880 writes:

> The trade of the town has more than doubled. I do not know of a single merchant who would not vote against the traffic, on purely business grounds. The farmers are nearly all out of debt. Many men who were spending all their money for whisky have quit drinking and are making a support for their families. In a moral point of view the results have been perfectly remarkable. There is less crime in this county than in any other of the circuit. The soberness and quiet which prevail here even on election days and court week strike visitors as being wonderful.

10. Edwards County, Illinois.—The clerk of the circuit court writes:

> There has not been a licensed saloon in this county for over twenty-five years. During that time our jail has not averaged an occupant. This county never sent but one person to the penitentiary, and that man was sent up for killing his wife while drunk, on whisky which he had obtained from a licensed saloon in an adjoining county. We have but very few paupers in our poor house, sometimes only three or four. Our taxes are thirty-two per cent lower than they are in adjoining counties where saloons are licensed. Our people are prosperous, peaceable, and sober, there being very little drinking, except near Grayville, a licensed town of White county, near our border.

11. The State of Maine.—The prohibitory law was enacted in 1851. A license law was substituted for two years, 1856 and 1857, but worked so badly in comparison that it was repealed in 1858, and prohibition has been kept ever since. What are the evidences of its success ?

(a). The testimony of governors, congressmen, senators, and eminent citizens throughout the State, men who have lived in Maine and are thoroughly acquainted with its work, stands published in warm and hearty commendation of the law and its beneficent results. Among them we may mention Governors Chamberlain, Perham, Dingley, Connor, Plaisted, and Robie. Senators Morrill, Blaine and Hamlin, and Hale, Frye, Reed and Powers, members of congress. Judges, attorneys, mayors and clergymen may be added in any number.

(b). The testimony of political parties and legislatures which afford one of the best indications of popular feeling.

No political party now thinks of putting a license plank in its platform. Both parties have accepted prohibition as a settled issue. In 1879 an attempt was made in the legislature to except native wines etc. from the operation of the law but it was rejected and the Maine Law affirmed it in its entirety by a vote of 129 to 17. In July, 1881, an attempt was made to exclude malt liquors from the prohibition of the law. The committee to whom it was referred did not even think fit to report upon it.

In 1882 a vote was passed by an overwhelming majority in both houses to submit a constitutional amendment to the people, by which they will make prohibition a part of the constitution of the state.

(c.) The results attained.—By common consent it is agreed that not more than one twentieth as much liquor is sold in Maine as before prohibition.

In 333 of the 600 cities, towns and villages in Maine there is no place where any one can buy a glass of liquor; in 152 it is merely suspected of being sold secretly, in 15 it is sold more openly, and mostly in Bangor, where the law has been poorly enforced. That is, in three-fourths of the State the liquor traffic has been absolutely banished, in most of the remaining portions it is so far driven out that it is merely suspected, and in a very few places, Bangor and Portland chiefly, it is known to be sold.

(d.) Maine's comparative immunity from crime.—In comparison with Ontario mark the official figures :

| | Ontario. | Maine. |
|---|---|---|
| Commitments for crime 1875 to 1880 | 69,340 | 13,738 |
| " for drunk and disorderly | 22,724 | 4,579 |

which shows that with three times the population Ontario has five times the crime and drunkenness of Maine. Taking Lewiston and Auburn in Maine with 28,000 people and comparing it with Hamilton, Ontario, with 36,000 people we find

| | Hamilton | Lewiston and Auburn |
|---|---|---|
| Arrests for all crimes | 2,543 | 282 |
| " drunk and disorderly | 780 | 80 |

which shows that Hamilton with one-fourth more population had more than nine times the crime and drunkenness.

If we compare Maine under prohibition with Connecticut under license we find for 1880 the following :

| | Conn. | Maine |
|---|---|---|
| Commitments to jail | 4,142 | 2,309 |
| Sentenced to state prison | 134 | 60 |
| Prison population at end of year | 837 | 414 |

So that with less population Connecticut had twice the crime of Maine.

11. The State of Vermont.—A prohibitory law was passed in this State in 1882. It has been amended from time to time, and to-day stands more secure, more beneficial, and more strongly intrenched in the hearts of the people than ever before.

12. The State of Kansas.—Prohibition in the form of a constitutional amendment was passed by popular vote in 1880, and the law enacted in accordance therewith came into force May 1, 1881. Ex-Governor St. John says : "Up to December 1, 1883, embracing 31 months of prohibition, there have been 972 persons tried, and 729 convicted, for violating the prohibitory law. The fines assesssed amounted to $95,200. Prohibition has driven every distillery out of the state, and closed nearly if not all of the 32 breweries that thrived under the old license system. Our population has gained more than 100,000 of intelligent, moral citizens, while the taxable wealth of the State has increased more than $40,000,000, and Kansas was never more prosperous than she is today."

Voter, in the face of all this testimony is there any doubt that prohibition prohibits ? Then vote accordingly.

YOUNG WOMEN TO THE FORE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL, AND STATE AND LOCAL SUPERINTENDENTS:—Sitting in the shadow of a great sorrow and an unutterable loss, the messages received from you of kindly sympathy, accompanied with encouraging news from your fields of labor have been a consolation; the active and efficient efforts of many of you have, in a sense, compensated for my inability to promote the interests of this department during the past year. While the valuable services of the national superintendents of Juvenile, Sabbath School, and Kitchen Garden work, have added largely to our numbers and strength.

We mourn most truly those who have been taken home when we seek to live as they would have us, and like them to have our work done in the day time, hence, although physically unequal to carrying out extended plans and keeping up the needed correspondence, yet the local work both in city and country has not been left undone. Returning to the field at this late hour is like thrusting in my sickle to garner that upon which others have bestowed labor, yet it is needful it should be gathered into our national store house that the sheaves may be counted and each gleaner receive her due reward.

Will all state superintendents of young woman's work, or state organizers who have given attention to this department, please send a concise report of their year's work to the address given below by October 1. We especially desire a complete list of all the Y. W. C. T. Unions, branch societies, and young ladies' committees in your state or territory, with the addresses of presidents and secretaries. We would also like answers to the following questions:

1. Have county (or district) and local superintendents been appointed?

2. Has anything been done in your state to enlist the young people in schools and colleges?

3. Where Y. W. C. T. U.'s have not been formed, are young ladies working with the older unions?

It may be remembered in the floral report given at Louisville, two years ago, that the states were represented by various flowers, and we were obliged to make the selection more with regard to the flowers that could be obtained for our basket than the language of the flowers or their appropriateness to the states, although we attempted to combine all. We now ask that the Y. W. C. T. Unions of the states will choose some flower as their emblem; also some text or motto, and as far as possible inform us of your choice when you send in your report. If any prefer to keep the flower given them two years ago, they are quite free to do so. New York state has concluded to keep the rose, but as there are many kinds of roses that need not interfere with the choice of any other state. The national department will keep the same text, Psalms 144: 12, and has chosen for its emblems a lily of the valley with oak and ivy leaves, indicative of purity and modesty, strength and tenacity. We expect soon to have this at the heading of our stationery and states desiring to have their emblematical flower and motto on their paper by sending designs and quality required to our secretary (whose address is given below) will obtain very reasonable estimates. For information regarding the silver Y. W. C. T. U. pin please address Miss Mary McClees, Yonkers, N. Y. We feel the necessity of a set of leaflets for young women's work and would like to have the state superintendents, in sending their reports tell us what kind they most need.

Last year we sent a personal letter to each state superintendent or state secretary. This year we have addressed you through the columns of our national paper for two reasons, that others beside yourselves may read and become interested in this department, and at the same time by this means to increase the circulation of the paper. Of course we expect every state superintendent takes one or more copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, but during the brief time before the presidential election we should be alive to every opportunity for using our influence for our party of principles, and our men of character, we hope you will be up and doing, getting many subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, and the bright, little campaign paper called THE ISSUE OF TODAY, which comes every week until after election for only 20 cents. Do not fail to enlighten the minds of your young gentlemen friends with clear, earnest arguments for the third party, the true party.

As many states hold conventions this month we hope they will not fail to place over the department of young woman's work an attractive, capable, Christian lady.

The question has been asked if Y. W. C. T. Unions not auxiliary either to the local, county or state W. C. T. Unions are to be reported ? We trust if there are any such unions they will at once become connected with our chain of workers. As we are not expected to report the missing links, but we need them all and are very sure they would be strengthened by becoming auxiliary, may they hasten to do so before their state conventions.

Hoping for an early response, yours sincerely,

FRANCES J. BARNES.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I wish every white ribbon woman could share my joy today. I have just returned from a two weeks' tour, in Illinois, Ohio and New York, and in crossing the Mississippi river, our eastern boundary, I said to my husband, "Let us go into the dining car and see whether prohibition prohibits on the line of the Chicago & North-Western railroad."

We had eaten on the car in Illinois and had seen the wine bottles in tempting display. The sable waiter showed his ivories, and in answer to my inquiries he said, "You'll see in a minute, ma'am." And sure enough, soon an employe of the road came aboard the train and into the car, locked the wine closet, took the key, sealed the door with the tin seal such as is used on express packages. On leaving the car he said, "This closet will not be opened till I open it next Tuesday, five days, on its return to cross the river and through Illinois to Chicago."

Do you wonder that I rejoice in this evidence of my own eyes? Yours, J. ELLEN FOSTER.

A NEEDFUL ELIMINATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL :—Even in such a well-regulated family as ours "mistakes will happen." Please give space for an explanation of one of them which has sorely vexed some righteous souls among us. In the appendix to the first edition of Steele's Hygienic Physiology, under the head of "frost bites," the use of "weak brandy and water" is suggested. This was in the appendix of the original book, "Fourteen Weeks in Physiology," and was marked for omission in the "Hygienic" in common with some other passages. By some unaccountable mistake this passage was retained in spite of marking and proof-reading. Prof. Steele says it is now corrected in the plates, and will give us no trouble in the future editions of the book. ALICE M. GUERNSEY.

GOOD CHEER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—Let me say to the heartsick, disappointed worker who writes in your issue of August 7, as Aunt Hittie (an old colored woman) told a reverend gentleman who called out loud and quick about her pigs being in his field of timothy: "These things are good for us; if our patience did not get exercised it would never get strong; but my pigs shall never trouble you again." Just such a trial of our patience did we have down in Maryland when our legislature was in session ast winter, and the senate passed the bill to introduce scientific temperance instruction in all schools supported by public money and the house voted it down by a small majority; but we would not be discouraged. Feeling that what we had accomplished was a victory we work on and next time we will get all we ask. As our school boards throughout the state have the power to adopt whatever books they see fit, we will not wait for our legislature but petition them separately and "go in and possess the land" whenever we can. W. C. T. U. workers who are called to this state please make a note of this and put in a "plank" for the children, whenever opportunity offers.

Yours for temperance sentiment in every avenue,

Baltimore, Md. Mrs. S. W. Tudor.

LEAD PENCIL LETTER.—NO. IV.

White Ribbon Work in Maine.

Dear Sisters of the Local Unions:—We are spinning along toward the Hub, after eleven days work in eleven different places in Maine with fifteen engagements, including Anna Gordon's four meetings for children. I have spoken in city halls, churches and parks. The people's response has been all we could wish, and I doubt not the three hundred other workers who have been equally busy for weeks past, could give a similar report. Headquarters in Portland prove the interest and activity. Our noble leader, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of Maine W. C. T. U. has generaled the white ribbon force in her quiet but unequalled fashion. The hearts of her sisters do safely trust in her. No figure on Portland streets is more familiar or so much beloved. Letters and telegrams pursue her as the mice did Bishop Hatto in the famous legend of the Rhine. But she never seems flurried though, so rapid in execution that electric force could hardly get ahead of her.

Rev. H. C. Munson, who leads the alliance of temperance men (and whose admirable leaflet on the amendment I enclose), is a noble, gifted minister, and so indefatigable that when I called to see him, confined as he was to his bed, the stenographer was taking his dictations and half a dozen workers were in his room at a time. So far as known not a minister in Maine opposes the amendment, and not a public journal openly, save one in Bangor. The liquor interest if doing anything, is on a still hunt.

The Democratic state convention would not hear for a moment the half dozen who spoke against the amendment, so Mr. Stevens tells me, husband of Maine's president and a temperance Democrat himself, delegate to the convention. The rural districts are solid for it and Portland Christians showed their interest by closing the churches and congregating in the city hall on the evening that I spoke, while to hear John B. Finch the prayer meetings of all the Bangor churches united at Old Norombega hall, on Wednesday evening, giving one hour to prayer, the other to Nebraska's Boanerges. Many workers are here from outside the state, chief among them being Mrs. Pearson, of England, with her ready wit and quenchless zeal, Mary A. Woodbridge, of Ohio, than whom not a woman in the nation is in greater demand as a speaker for our cause; Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, whose pathos and earnestness have so captivated the sturdy people of the Pine Tree state, that she is to remain there for the present, working for the W. C. T. U. Col. Chevis, an ex-confederate officer from Kentucky has spoken admirably and been received with great heartiness. Although strong advocates of St. John and Daniel, we have not deemed it best to divert public opinion from the non-partisan character of the issue, though Iowa's Prohibition party movement which was their most cogent "petition" for the submission of the amendment, has been brought forward as having "millions in it," to be thought about by men and women of independent mind.

The State W. C. T. U. at its convention in Gardiner, yesterday passed the same resolution that our "National" did at Detroit. Mrs. Johnson, of Aroostook connty, the wife of a Blaine elector, being chairman of the committee. By the way, the delegation from this distant county, whose area equals that of Massachusetts, deserve especial mention for their great practicality and "vim". They came four hundred miles to get such suggestions and help as they could, but the marvels wrought by them in the enforcement of law, the naturalizing of 100 Swedes that they might vote for the amendment and inducing even Canadian authorities to suppress sales across the border, entitle this delegation to the place of honor among their noble sisters. A resolution in favor of woman's ballot as a weapon for the enforcement of prohibition was unanimously carried. Mrs. Hunt was officially invited to the state to help secure a compulsory scientific education bill as the true supplement of Maine's present legislation. A request was made of the St. Louis convention to take such action as may furnish our W. C. T. U. workers with a training school; a state organizer was authorized etc. etc. All the officers we reelected unanimously and they are a rare group of women. Mrs. Stevens, president, Miss Sarah C. Lord, corresponding secretary, an accomplished young lady, whose father is the most influential citizen of that town, Miss Clara Farwell, of Rockland, recording secretary, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke and daughter of ex-Senator Farwell, successor of Hannibal Hamlin in United States Senate; Mrs. H. N. Jones, treasurer, a gifted Quaker preacher whose recital of Christian experience in yesterday's devotional meeting was a blessing to us all. Miss Martha Hatheway of Los Angeles, California, was present and spoke to great acceptance. She also is a graduate of Mt. Holyoke, and was a teacher there. We are fortunate to have a woman of her culture and lofty Christian character as president in southern California. Last evening Mary A. Woodbridge gave a masterly address, the mayor of Gardiner presiding by invitation of the convention. (He had just declined to preside at a Republican rally where a drinking Maine congressman named Milliken was to speak). Doubtless the most interesting feature of the convention was the hour devoted to asking questions of Mrs. Woodbridge as to what women should do on election day to help carry the amendment. For the help of our workers elsewhere and because the methods largely apply to other occasions, I will give an abstract of the points brought out: Get churches to give last prayer meeting and Sunday services so far as practicable to the theme of God in government; send a printed address to each voter with "yes" ballot enclosed, asking them to represent their home constituency; have booths, or tents or hired store, near the polling places as possible adorned with mottoes and dispensing freely coffee, ice cream, temperance ballots, papers, etc., with the pledge for any who will sign; let the Bible be prominent, open on a cushion to the marked passage "Woe unto him who justifieth the wicked for a reward." Have children march and give cheers for the amendment; carry banners and sing songs; as a matter of course have an all day prayer meeting with leaders and topics for each hour. Teach the children, months beforehand, Mrs. Foster's "Amendment Catechism," which will do sure execution in the homes—no proselyters being so successful as the little folks. It was pleasant as well as surprising to see that the women of Maine, so many of them, seemed willing to go to the polls and stand at the ballot box pleading for representation through the voters. They explained this by saying, "All our leading men are so hearty for the amendment, and so many of them encourage us to go straight to the box itself, because they say if you give a man a "yes" ballot and do not see him put it in you cannot be absolutely sure of him!"

Anna Gordon's meetings have been of great interest to us. In Bath the cold water army met us at the train with banner and hurrahs; in Bangor they gave our assistant superintendent of juvenile work a Chautauqua salute in scientific style; everywhere their replies to questions showed their happy exemption from the wretched object lesson of the open saloon. A Belfast boy replied to the question, "How many saloons do you suppose we have in Chicago?" with an adventurous, "May be as many as twenty-five!" and a Bangor boy ventured to bound up so high as 100! But it is in the air of Maine, so bracing and so pure, that the liquor traffic is the essence of all that is contemptible and low. We never had meetings more carefully worked up, and, outside of California, none with such choice decorations. Everywhere they cheered me with our national anthem,

"For God and Home and Native Land,
Our motto here we arch it;
There is no foe we'll not withstand,
No battle but we'll fight it."

Drs. Rankin and Bischoff united to do us a grand service in this composition. It is the Marseillaise of our white ribbon army. At Biddeford the charming "Willard Society" of fashionable young ladies, surrounded the stage with a veritable hedge of golden rod, and hired a band to herald the meeting—an excellent idea and one our friends will find worthy of imitation. At Skowhegan they had one of the most elegant ornaments I have seen—our motto in great gilt letters on dark green ground with heavy gilt fringe. At Belfast, among most elaborate floral decorations filling the windows, transforming the pulpit into a bower of beauty, they had a ballot box—a real one with a white dove poised over it—carrying a "yes" ballot in its bill.

At Bangor I had the singular good fortune to meet one whom I had wished to see ever since, in my eleventh year, I had read "The Shoulder Knot." This was my first novel, and came into our Methodist home under cover of the "Ladies Repository," a literary journal now extinct, but then edited by Rev. Dr. B. T. Tefft. My father was of the strictest Puritan habits, and save this story and a surreptitious reading of "Norman Leslie," a religious Scotch novel, and "Jane Eyre," I knew nothing of such literature. How vivid are the characters still, impressed so early in that childish memory which is "wax to receive and marble to retain!" Richelieu, the Duke of Buckingham, Anne of Austria, and the rest. How I thanked the good Doctor of Divinity who gave food to hungry fancy in a fashion that fastened history like a nail in a sure place.

And here I found him, in his old home, Bangor, after seventy years of noble, helpful and scholarly living. It was a surprise, rare and delightful. Dr. Tefft has no superior in culture among the men of distinction whom I have met. He has spent years abroad, having visited Europe six times, once, by appointment of Abraham Lincoln, as our minister to Sweden. He is a trained scholar in the classics and modern languages, and a specialist in Christian apologetics. His work on evolution, the magnum opus of his studious life and result of twenty years' work, is soon to be published by Lee & Shepard. He showed me the introduction to it written by Bishop Simpson, his life long friend. I believe it will be the high water mark of American thought upon that fertile theme. The docter is simple and unpretending as a child, and of such rare sweetness of nature that he can talk to a St. John woman, lover as he is of the "plumed knight," listening to her arguments with perfect good nature and without a single eye-flash or explosive epithet!

Another pleasant episode was our visit yesterday to Brunswick and glance into the elegant memorial building and unique chapel, the last an embodied thought of that exceptional genius, Dr. Leonard Woods. We thought of Longfellow, Hawthorne and other famous "sons of Bowdoin," and coveted for the daughters of Maine the choice advantages of this noble old school, with its rare picture gallery and other delightful belongings.

Entertained at Prof. Chapman's (professor of rhetoric and oratory) we made the acquaintance of his lovely wife and bright boy Larry, an amateur editor, whose well appointed press and printing office in the attic, and whose admirable "Cumberland Monthly," showed what fascinating and elevating recreation cultivated parents can secure for an intelligent son. Prof. Chapman presided at my meeting, and made a brief speech for the amendment, which was a model in language and delivery, and what was best of all, had the ring of a true patriot's heart. But all these pleasant haps (for mishaps are unknown to me) beguile this restless pencil.

Two items and I close: Neal Dow's son-in-law, Mr. Gould, chief banker of Portland, I am told, is a St. John man, as decidedly as the general's son, Fred Dow, is a Republican (collector of the port).

Mary Woodbridge, speaks in the most "select" Congregational church of the city on Sunday next, by Mr. Gould's invitation, and is the first woman admitted.

Anna G., as aid to efficient Mrs. Weston, superintendent of literature, secured $26 worth of subscriptions for The Union Signal at Maine W. C. T. U. convention, by quietly going from one to another during sessions. Why can we not pursue this plan always?

Yours for the amendment,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

IOWA SPEAKS AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As the Quakers say, "I have a concern" in regard to the course of your paper and the impression it seems desirous of creating, as to the actual and active affiliation of the National W. C. T. U. with the National Prohibition party, and I wish to speak my mind in behalf of the women of one state auxiliary to the National Union.

As an individual I could keep quiet, even while I might wish the course of the paper was different, but in behalf of our state union I think it is only simple justice that the strong, true prohibition element that is grieved and distressed by the course of THE UNION SIGNAL, and of our general W. C. T. U. officers should have a chance to be heard.

Iowa may be a laggard in her apprehension of, and devotion to prohibition truth, but Iowa prohibitionists believe they are still true to God and home and native land, even if they do not believe in the wisdom of the National Prohibition party; and the Iowa W. C. T. U. are not yet ready to be carried bodily into that party. Although the National Prohibition party has a large place in the sympathies and the prayers of many of our W. C. T. U. women, yet as an organization, we are united in the conviction that Iowa prohibitionists ought not to support the National Prohibition ticket inasmuch as without a separate prohibition party in Iowa, we have secured in our state the legal prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating beverages, and we can not feel willing in any way to work for the destruction of the instrumentality through which it was gained, and through which it must be maintained. The resolution passed at the Detroit W. C. T. U. convention, as emphasized by THE UNION SIGNAL and interpreted by our National W. C. T. U. president, could not get the affirmative vote of Iowa delegates today, and could not have received such a vote at Detroit with such an explanation of its meaning as found in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 21, had that explanation been given before that vote was taken. Right here I would say that in future I think we shall be and ought to be, more careful about the adoption in convention, of resolutions and of measures, than we have been in the past.

When the resolution was passed at Detroit we all avoided any unnecessary discussion, on account of the shortness of our time, and I don't think there was in the minds of any, (unless of those who were desirous of committing us, as an organization, to the National Prohibition party) the thought of such an interpretation being given to that resolution, for this reason; that the delegates felt unwilling to thus commit themselves. In the discussion the thought was brought out, that in our different states we might be able to give our influence to different political parties, because of their position upon the temperance question.

I remember that in the discussion it was said that it committed us to no one party, for in the south the Democratic party might be that party, and in the north it might be the Republican party that would, in our judgment, furnish the "best embodiment of prohibition principles, and would must surely protect our homes."

We all understood what is so often asserted and conceded that, as states we were free to do as we pleased in regard to any line of work, outlined in any resolution; or, as Miss Willard says in THE UNION SIGNAL of Aug. 21, "This pledge is an expression of our sentiment . . . . but not technically obligatory upon any auxiliary or individual."

Any member of that convention knows that that resolution could not have been adopted if it had been understood as committing our National W. C. T. U. to active co-operation with the National Prohibition party, for while that party may seem to furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, we cannot consider it the one that would "most surely protect our homes," for the reason that the most sanguine national party Prohibitionists do not claim that party has the power at present to do more than simply to lift up a standard round which the growing temperance sentiment of all other parties can rally for future results—for the time being leaving our homes to the mercy of the aggressive liquor interest until the Prohibition party by its majorities can so protect them.

There are a great many who prefer for the present, while they are educating the people, to endure the evils they already have, evils that grow out of the ignorance of the people and the unwillingness of political parties to take up the temperance question, rather than fly to evils they know not of, and which they are confident must grow out of the wrecking of political parties. They believe it wise to so educate the people that make up existing parties, that they can use those parties for the triumph of this temperance reform, and for this reason we are grieved at what seems to us a misrepresentation of the position of the National Union, in the action based upon the adoption of that Detroit resolution under the circumstances of its adoption.

"With malice toward none and with charity for all," believing as one has so sweetly expressed it that "while there are diversities of opinion yet there is unity of spirit," I am, with a firm adherence to what seems to me to be truth and right, in behalf of our W. C. T. U.

Yours sincerely, MARY J. ALDRICH,
Pres. Iowa W. C. T. U.

MISSION WORK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—Since reading, a few weeks since, the suggestion of Mrs. Matson, that the executive committee be asked to give of the thank offering money to send THE UNION SIGNAL to missionary stations, the importance of sending the paper to such fields haunts me continually. But, how to secure the fund necessary, is the great question, it seems to me. Undoubtedly that committee has scores of places and are racking their brains to know which are the most important places, what is the least they can possibly put here and there and how they can possibly make ends meet and do even one half they want to do, with that fund, without thinking of the mission fields. But whether the committee think best to act upon that suggestion or not the advancing of it must surely do good by setting us all to thinking of the importance of having such a work done. I tell you, sisters, I for one feel as if I must sacrifice something that I will feel, for this very purpose. It is Christ's cause. So is all temperance work you say. Yes, I know, but in connection with mission work is it not doubly so? Is it not more sacredly His? Every nook and corner of our globe, needs just such work as the W. C. T. U. with its scores of different plans is doing.

What can more hasten the evangilization of the world than to send this excellent, most excellent paper broad cast to both home and foreign missions? But how raise the money? What shall we sacrifice now in order to give when we feel as if we were already giving all that we can afford? Some of the dear sisters, I see from THE UNION SIGNAL, are giving their glove money for the temperance cause. That is a nice idea and I admire the love that prompts the act, but I think it will come mostly from the ladies with nice hands.

Those of us who do our own work that we may save money for all these good causes would almost feel as if we were breaking the Sabbath if we should go to church without gloves—with our hands of both unnatural size and color. I cannot conscientiously do that, but I pledge to go as far as anyone in giving up any unnecessary article from my table, either food or drink. So to begin I drop that which I do like—that is an abundance of sugar in good coffee. I know I take all the sugar my system needs in other forms, so all I take it in the coffee for is because I like it; and I shall do without it at least until I have saved enough to send this paper to one mission station. So I send $2.00 for one, to the editor, to send it wherever she thinks best. If I have courage to persevere, I shall send more before the year is out. Who will take hold of this plan to "enlarge our borders"—to hasten the day when our W. C. T. U. shall "belt the world," the day when we can see nominated our own beloved president for the international president?

Then, too, there will be a silent untold power in such a sacrifice (when we know to what place one paper goes) for we cannot forget, every time we are tempted to partake of whatever article we give up, to send up a petition that God's blessing will accompany each mission and abundantly bless every eye that beholds and every hand that handles it. M. KENNEDY EAST.

A SPICY TELEGRIP.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A few years ago I wanted to shake hands with Mary Dean, for some bright thing or other she had said in Lippincott's Magazine, and I expressed the wish that Edison would take five minutes and invent a telegrip, or telegrasp, or something, so that I could do so. Now, if he had, I should reach right across from Latrobe, Pa., to Edina, Mo., and say, "Shake, stranger," to Minnie Armstrong!

Her utterance in this week's UNION SIGNAL about young tipplers and their loving, but misguided, woman hero-worshipers, hits the nail on the head, and hits hard.

Oh that I, oh that all women, would take them at their true worth—lessness, until they make a manly, a mighty, and a persistent effort to conquer the drink habit.

But I will ask Miss A. not to give up the "old drunkard" quite so "tee to tally!" I know of more than one "regular old sot" who became a sober man, lived so for years and died so, giving good evidence of being Christians.

I have heard my father tell of a spunky old chap in Massachusetts to whom Medford rum was "eatin' an' drinkin'!" He was fairly soaked in the fiery liquid. The son who took care of him became tired of carrying off an empty jug and bringing home a full one, over and over, so he finally bought a barrel of rum, took it home, set it in the hall just outside the door of the old man's room, and told him, "Now drink just as much as you want to!"

The father took fire at once, and wrathfully told his too liberal son, "I know what you want. You want me to kill myself! I'll never touch it!" He kept his word, and never drank liquor again. If only grit or grace would accomplish the work oftener.

I sometimes wonder if there is not, in Scripture, an equivalent for "Let impatience do her perfect work." It seems we can "be angry and sin not;" I'm going to hunt for a passage which will fortify the position of our Missouri friend, and justify us in being right crisp and generously indignant with these grown-up infants. They play "man;" let them learn to act man, in good earnest, or put on bibs and take to "spoon vittles."

JULIA WILLARD.

THE SOLDIER'S VOTE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I want to give information through your columns to all unions interested in the campaign for St. John and Daniel, that I have prepared a "Voter's Pledge Letter" addressed to my "soldier friends of America"; but really adapted for all voters. It is a campaign document embracing besides the letter, a "Prohibition Rallying Song," set to the tune of "The Battle cry of Freedom," the chorus being "Hurrah for prohibition.

Hurrah, boys, hurrah,
Down with the Demon,
Up with holy Law.
While we rally round the flag, boys,
Rally one and all,
Shouting the battle-cry of Temperance."

Any one wanting a sample, can be supplied by sending me a penny stamp. They will be sold cheap by the hundred.

Will my co-superintendents let me hear from them promptly, giving items for the annual report of the National department of the work for soldiers and sailors.

SARAH A. MCCLEES.
National Superintendent, Yonkers.

TO THE LOCAL UNIONS:—Dear Sisters:—We are to determine at our national convention in St. Louis, Oct. 23, what style of pin shall be the badge with which to fasten the white ribbon of the W. C. T. U. Please see that your delegates bring suggestions and designs that this pin may be "made up of every creature's best."

Yours ever, FRANCES E. WILLARD,

Our Children.

THERE'S DANGER.

Write it on the liquor store,
Write it on the prison door,
Write it on the gin shop fine,
Write—aye, write this truthful line:
" Where there's drink, there's danger."

Write it on the work house gate,
Write it on the school boy's slate,
Write it in the copy book,
That the young may on it look:
" Where there's drink, there's danger."

Write it on the church yard mound,
Where the drink-slain dead are found;
Write it on the gallows high,
Write it for all passers by:
" Where there's drink, there's danger."

Write it underneath your feet,
Up and down the busy street;
Write it for the great and small,
In the mansion, cot and hall;
" Where there's drink, there's danger."

Write it on the ships which sail,
Borne along by storm and gale;
Write it in large letters plain,
O'er our land and past the main:
" Where there's drink, there's danger."

THE TWO PATHS.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

F. M. HOLMES.

CHAPTER II.—YES OR NO.

As the prize day drew on, the excitement grew more intense. Notwithstanding Philip's remark that he should not continue to strive for the prize, he had in truth worked very hard for it. The remarks he had made were but the results of a passing fit of irritability consequent upon his failure to get on as speedily as he wished. Harry Somers, too, had been straining every nerve to ensure success, rising early and sitting up late to study the subject, and to write, re-write, and polish his essay.

He was under some disadvantage with regard to this prize, for he was not so familiar with the subject as some of the other competitors, he having only recently been moved into this class, in which most of the boys were his seniors.

Moreover the subject—Carthage—was not much to his taste, and he was fully aware that others, from their better acquaintance with Virgil and the history of the Punic wars, had a decided advantage over him. Nevertheless, he had pluckily worked hard to overcome the disparity between them. Thus it came about that the struggle lay pretty closely between Jones, Philip Gregory, and himself, and the other boys knew this and speculated largely upon the result.

Each of the three boys had their followers, and the school was pretty equally divided into three parts.

It came to the day before the prizes were to be adjudged. The essays had all been given in, and the boys were idly grouped about the playground discussing the morrow's chances.

Poor Harry Somers felt very dull. This was partly the result of the reaction after his severe overwork, but far more, it was occasioned by the thought that in a few days now he should leave this dear, well remembered playground for ever. His home, by reason of his father's drinking habits, had not been a happy one, and here had been spent some of his happiest hours. But these thoughts fled from his mind when Philip approached him and said,—

" I say, Harry, are you on for a spree to-night?"

" What's up?"

" Well, you know it's 'fair night' in the town. There will be all sorts of fun going on."

" But Dr. Sowerby will never let us out."

" Of course he won't. Who would think of asking him? But we can escape by the window when all the masters are asleep. Do come—it will be such fun. Your last term, too, and the last night, for I'm off to-morrow afternoon. We ought to have a regular jollification."

Harry paused. The project was very tempting and promised well. Tired and depressed by his long spell of hard work, he longed for an inspiriting change, and, as Philip suggested, there would no doubt be plenty of fun going on.

" Come," said Philip, seeing his hesitation, " say you'll go. I want to tell Harpur—he's making up the party. If we are discovered we shan't get into a row; the term is over and we are going home."

Still Harry hesitated. Conscience told him that to yield would be to break his resolve. True he might keep his pledge never to drink wine or strong drink, but it would be going straight into temptation, and he much doubted his power to resist if he went just now. But, apart from all this, it would certainly be wrong to go, for it would break the rules of the school and sadly offend Dr. Sowerby. These thoughts decided him.

" No," he replied abruptly, " I shall not go, Gregory."

" Not go! Why I was certain you would. You must go, for you're a good judge of wine, and we want you to get some good tackle for us."

Harry's face flushed. Did Philip know of his sin the other day? No, apparently not, for he added—

" I mean you have generally brought some first rate wine to school with you, and your father has sent you some. I always envied you and enjoyed your wine mightily. I made my father send me some because yours did."

Harry started. Already, then, his influence on others had been bad. Others had wished to drink and had drunk because he had taken wine. He said eagerly but decidedly—

" Phil, I am not going to drink any more wine. I am an abstainer now and forever. As you have followed me in drinking follow me now in abstinence."

For some moments Philip stared at his friend, in too great surprise to speak; then he said, " But why, Harry? What is the reason of this change?"

" I cannot tell you altogether," replied Harry, shrinking from revealing his own and his father's degradation. " But I may say that Dr. Sowerby's speech to us that day had a great deal to do with my resolution. And now promise me you will not go to this fair. Hang it! don't let us disgrace ourselves the last night."

" Well," said Harpur, coming up at this juncture; " have you decided, Somers?"

" Yes; I am not coming."

" Not coming. Why not?"

" Because he's given up drinking," cried Phil.

" You don't mean to say you are such a milksop as to become a total abstainer?" asked Harpur.

" I am no milksop," replied Harry, stoutly; " but I am a teetotaler, and I am not going to break rules."

" Why, you've turned quite a saint," sneered Harpur.

Harpur was a big lad, nearly at the head of the school, and his opinions were consequently held in high esteem, and Harry bit his lip as he heard Harpur's taunts.

" Come now, no nonsense, Somers? You don't really mean you have been such a weak-minded fool as to sign the pledge. That's all very well for the children in the lower forms, but for us in the upper class, its folly!"

" I see nothing weak-minded in it, Harpur. On the contrary, it appears to me to be courageous to stick to your principles, and I mean to stick to mine, so good-bye." And without further parley, Harry walked off.

" Stupid young fool!" hissed Harpur between his teeth. " Never mind, I s'pose he won't split on us. Come on, Phil. Let us go and arrange with Harris about our getting back."

" I don't think I shall go," said Phil slowly. " I think Harry is right."

" What! are you going to show the white feather, too? Tut, man, don't be such a fool! Why, Harris, here's Somers turned coward and won't go, and Phil wants to follow his example!"

Harris greeted this remark with a shout of derisive laughter, and in the end Philip yielded and agreed to go.

In some sense we might say that the life-battle of those two boys was decided here. For the boy is father of the man, which means that the principles a lad practises at school he will most likely follow out in after days. If a boy can say " No " to temptation at school he will probably say " No " to greater temptation in after days.

It was a hard struggle for Harry to resist—harder than at first sight would appear. It meant entirely cutting himself off from all his old companions, and though as he was about to leave the school, this might not matter much to him, yet he felt their sneers only too keenly, and would have mightily enjoyed a last " bit of fun " with them.

But that solemnly-signed pledge taken in the doctor's study could not be broken, and no longer could he contemplate the idea of infringing the rules of the school as lightly as he had previously done. That total abstinence pledge seemed to have raised him altogether on a higher platform—given him more self-control and a greater sense of personal and moral responsibility. Thus he had said " No " once, and at great cost; the second time would be easier, until at last it would become a fixed habit with him to resist temptation. In the same way Philip had said " Yes," and with him too the habit would increase. But the one path led upward and the other led downward!

Oh! boys and girls, learn when you are young, to say " No " to temptation. It may be that your happiness throughout eternal ages depends upon it. Within that chalice of sin that seems so sweet there lurks a poisonous serpent that may sting you with remorse throughout the infinity beyond the tomb.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Now is the time to begin to do right;
Today, whether skies be dark or bright;
Make others happy by good deeds of love,
Looking to Jesus for help from above;
And thus you'll be happy now,
And as the years pass on.

FOREVER.

A little girl, whom we know, came in her night clothes very early to her mother one morning, saying:

" Which is worse, mamma, to tell a lie or steal?"

The mother taken by surprise, replied that both were so bad she couldn't tell which was the worse.

" Well," said the little one, " I've been thinking a good deal about it, and I've concluded its worse to lie than to steal. If you steal a thing, you can take it back, less you've eaten it; and if you've eaten it, you can pay for it. But'—and there was a look of awe in the little face—" a lie is forever."—Zion's Herald.

A little bit of patience often makes the sunshine come,
And a little bit of love makes a very happy home;
A little bit of hope makes a rainy day look gay,
And a little bit of charity makes glad a weary way.

Dare to be a Daniel,
Dare to stand alone,
Dare to have a purpose firm,
Dare to make it known.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—Nowadays men are holding political meetings and getting up great processions. They call them " rallies ". I suppose they do them great good, for in this way they encourage each other and help to accomplish what they feel they ought to do. But it was not a political " rally " that I saw in Bloomington, Ill., last week, it was a Band of Hope " rally," a Prevention Army division drill. From Bloomington, Normal and Lexington, the crowd of little folks flocked into the Second Presbyterian church where the W. C. T. U. was holding a convention, marching in good army fashion with banners flying. The Bloomington Band had its banner inscribed with the motto, " Keep thyself pure." Lexington Band marched under a St. John and Daniel banner, and the portraits of these gentlemen looked down upon these little soldiers. The boys of this Band carried this legend, " We shall be voters by and by," and right behind them came the girls with their banner saying, " So shall we." Then such singing, O, 'twas glorious! If these boys and girls fight alcohol with as much " vim " as they sing, we shall have him destroyed before very long, sure. Then, too, the recitations, they would have done your heart good, and Miss Hood, of Chicago, and Mrs. Reid, of Normal, each made speeches that the children applauded with feet, hands, lips and eyes, and then stored away in good and honest hearts.

The Bloomington W. C. T. U. gave them all a substantial lunch supper and they went home as happy as when they came, which can't be said of children at all " rallies " you know. I've seen some Sunday picnics in this great and wicked city, when the company went out so gay and bright in the morning, children jumping and singing and laughing, forgetting, if they ever knew, that it was God's holy day, and then at night coming home all soiled and weary and crying, with drunken fathers and sore-hearted mothers and looking so dreary and unhappy that my heart ached for them. King Alcohol never trembled a bit when such a procession files past his throne, but when you fling out your banners of purity and truth, dear children, he almost tumbles off his throne.

Captain Deborah.

A Minnesota Huzza.

Dear Captain Deborah:—The temperance school of Sleepy Eye wish to inform you that a small detachment of troops have enlisted under your banner in this place. As yet we are raw recruits, and have not been drilled nor disciplined. But we are storing up useful knowledge which we expect will serve well our purpose when the time comes to display our strength. We number thirty-five, and we wonder how many soldiers there are in our honored captain's army, we wonder if she knows. If she does, what a pleasant vision must be hers, when in her mind's eye she reviews her troops. And we think King Alcohol would tremble if he could view it, especially if he knew our opinion of beer. The first work that we have undertaken is to add members to our school. The object of this letter was to tell you of a picnic that we had a few weeks ago, and we have almost finished without speaking of it. But we wish that our captain could have been here and that all the temperance children in America could have as good a time as we did.

Find first, which means "since" or "because";
And mayhap they will deem it pat,
To find "toward" or "by reason that."

For second, now, the solvers bold,
Should look or hunt for "to grow old."
The whole is neither wise nor good,
And means "to rove in search of food;"
You'll also find with little toil,

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.—No. VII.

September 28.

BY MRS. MARY B. WILLARD.

TOPIC: THE STORY OF DEBORAH.

LESSON TEXT: Judges iv: 4-24.

4. And Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, she judged Israel at that time.
5. And she dwelt under the palm tree of Deborah, between Ramah and Bethel in Mount Ephraim: and the children of Israel came up to her for judgment.
6. And she sent and called Barak the son of Abinoam out of Kedesh-naph'tali, and said unto him Hath not the Lord God of Israel commanded, saying, Go and draw toward Mount Tabor, and take with thee ten thousand men of the children of Naphtali and of the children of Zebulun?
7. And I will draw unto thee, to the river Kishon, Si-era the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitude; and I will deliver him into thine hand.
8. And Barak said unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then I will go: but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.
9. And she said, I will surely go with thee: notwithstanding the journey that thou takest shall not be for thine honor; for the Lord shall sell Sisera into the hand of a woman. And Deborah arose, and went with Barak to Kedesh.
10. And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedesh; and he went up with ten thousand men at his feet: and Deborah went up with him.
11. Now Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of Hbeab the father-in-law of Moses, had severed himself from the Kenites, and pitched his tent unto the plain of Zaanaim, which is by Kedesh.
12. And they shewed Sisera that Barak the son of Abinoam was gone up to Mount Tabor.
13. And Sisera gathered together all his chariots even nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth of the Gentiles unto the river of Kishon
14. And Deborah said unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hand: is not the Lord gone out before thee? So Barak went down from Mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him.
15. And the Lord discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword before Barak; so that Sisera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.
16. But Barak pursued after the chariots, and after the host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles: and all the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword; and there was not a man left.
17. Howbeit Sisera fled away on his feet to the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor and the house of Heber the Kenite.
18. And Jael went out to meet Sisera, and said unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not. And when he had turned in unto her into the tent, she covered him with a mantle.
19. And he said unto her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink; for I am thirsty. And she opened a bottle of milk, and gave him drink, and covered him.
20. Again he said unto her, Stand in the door of the tent, and it shall be, when any man doth come and inquire of thee, and say, Is there any man here? that thou shalt say, No.
21. Then Jael Heber's wife took a nail of the tent, and took a hammer in her hand, and went softly unto him, and smote the nail into his temples, and fastened it into the ground; for he was fast asleep and weary. So he died.
22. And, behold, as Barak pursued Sisera, Jael came out to meet him, and said unto him, Come, and I will shew thee the man whom thou seekest. And when he came into her tent, behold, Sisera lay dead, and the nail was in his temples.
23. So God subdued on that day Jabin the king of Canaan before the children of Israel.
24. And the hand of the children of Israel prospered, and prevailed against Jabin the king of Canaan, until they had destroyed Jabin king of Canaan.

THE LESSON STORY.

The Israelites had been in the land of Canaan for many, many years. They had disobeyed God's command and had not driven out the Canaanites, but settled down among them and intermarried with them. This was very displeasing to God, and as they had chosen to live with their enemies instead of conquering them in God's name and strength, He often left them to the mercy of these enemies.

At the time of this lesson the Israelites were suffering under the terrible oppression of the king of Canaan. His family name was Jabin, just as the family name of the Egyptian oppressor was Pharaoh. He had a large army and nine hundred chariots of iron with which he went to war.

Deborah, the Judge. Deborah was a woman who lived in Mt. Ephraim and the people came to her for judgment—i. e., for direction. God revealed His will to her and told her what He would have the people do. He gave her the command to Barak, who was a sort of general among the Israelites, that now was the time when Israel should be delivered from the hand of Jabin and of Sisera, the general of his army.

Deborah, the Leader of Armies. Barak said that he would not do as God commanded him through Deborah, unless she, herself, would go with him to battle. He forgot that God had said that He would be with them at Kishon and that He would deliver Sisera into his hand. Deborah agreed to go, but told him that for his faithlessness and cowardice, God would honor a woman with the victory and not him.

There were certain tribes who went cheerfully with Deborah and Barak, and others who would not help to throw off the oppressor's yoke. Zebulun and Naphtali whose territory was nearest the capital of Canaan, and consequently was most troubled and oppressed by them, were foremost in the battle. The tribe of Issachar, too, was represented by their princes. The tribes of Gad and Asher and Dan and Reuben stood aloof and let their brethren fight alone. They had their sheep to look after, their ships to sail, and their business to attend to. The Canaanites who so sadly oppressed their brethren, were their customers and their creditors, and they feared to offend or fight them, especially as they controled their cities and did not persecute them very much. Their selfishness and their cowardice was remembered, and it is said that no hero ever descended from these families, and that they were almost forgotten in the later periods of Jewish history. Meroz also was "cursed" for not coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, while Zebulun and Naphtali were honored of God through many generations.

The Lord fought with Deborah and Barak. He told them to lead their army of ten thousand men up on the mountain from which they could fight to great advantage, and then as Sisera's host advanced down the valley, He sent a great rain storm which beat right in their faces so that they were blinded and could not see where to attack the Israelites. Thus Barak discomfited them and put them to flight.

Deborah the Victor. Sisera was separated somehow from his soldiers and fled. He ran into a tent where lived a man by the name of Heber, and Jael his wife. These people were not Israelites, and yet they did not like Sisera nor Jabin, the king. Heber was descended from the father-in-law of Moses, and his sympathies were largely with the Israelites. Jael, his wife, received Sisera kindly but deceitfully, and taking a large tent pin, used for holding down the tent, she drove it through Sisera's head while he was sleeping. And so the last enemy was conquered and the land had rest again. Then Deborah sang one of the most wonderful psalms of victory that the Bible records. She gave God all the glory and showed how truly all her dependence was upon Him. She says in this psalm two things that you are to remember specially. One is this: That God avenged the enemies of Israel when the people willingly offered themselves to obey His command.

The other is this: That God has resources in battle which we know not of. "They fought from heaven, the stars in their courses fought against Sisera." If God be for us, all heaven is pledged to our victory. It was the storm of rain and wind from heaven that defeated Sisera, and not Barak's small army.

THE LESSON APPLIED.

The people of our own country are very much like the Israelites in Canaan. Our nation was founded by those who wanted to serve God in a free country, where kings would not oppress them. But the Mayflower which brought the Pilgrims to America brought a worse king with them than Charles II. had been to them in England. King Alcohol came over in the hold of the vessel, in the shape of rum, beer, etc.

King Alcohol's chariots are strangely enough of the same number as Sisera's, only his were of iron, while King Alcohol's chariots are the nine hundred millions of gold that make up the nation's drink bill, and these are much more powerful than chariots of iron.

All through the history of our country attempts have been made to deliver the nation or parts of it, from this oppressive king, but the people have never been willing to dethrone him entirely; to destroy him as God commanded the Canaanites should be destroyed. Instead of destroying him they have permitted him to rule if only he would pay to the people so much money. At last a Deborah appears, who calls upon the men of the land to go up against this dreadful foe and to forever abolish and exterminate him.

It is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union whose motto is, "For God, and Home, and Native Land." Like Deborah, its members are "mothers in Israel," and they work, and pray, and wait for God to overthrow the enemy who makes prisoners and slaves of their husbands and sons. They teach the children in the Sunday school and the day school the Biblical and the scientific truth about drink; they reclaim the poor drunkard; they go out into all the world to preach the temperance gospel; they strive to get prohibition made the law of the land. The people of today are very much divided upon the temperance question just as the Israelites were of old. But this will not hinder God's battle if enough willingly offer themselves. Those who go out most cheerfully to the war against King Alcohol are like the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali, those who have suffered most by him. But the people who are afraid of injuring their business, or alienating their friends, stay quiet in their "ships" and "sheep folds" as did Gilead or Gad, and Asher, and Dan. Those who feel afraid and have not quite made up their minds are like halting Reuben, for whose "divisions there were great searchings of heart." It is to be feared that like the old tribes which went into obscurity, these people by slighting God's command will lose a great opportunity, and when He shall call them to account at his judgment seat, He will say: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren ye did it not unto me."

The battle is pressing upon us, we must take sides one way or the other, for God and His kingdom, or against it. Let us offer ourselves "willingly," and by total abstinence on our own part help those who need such an example. Let us work for prohibition so that no man can lay a stumbling block in his brother's path by offering to give or sell intoxicating drink to him. The victory will come. The stars in their courses, and all heaven will fight against King Alcohol. We shall sing the song of triumph over the defeat of King Alcohol if we are true soldiers.

"There's a part in that chorus for you and for me."

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON STORY.

In what country is the scene of the lesson? Who were the inhabitants? Why were not the Canaanites driven out? Who was the ruler of this country? Who was Deborah? What were her duties? Who was Barak? What was the cause of war? Was it the fault of the Israelites that they were obliged to fight? Why? On what condition would Barak lead the army of Israel? Who was the general of the opposing army? How many chariots had he? Who went to the fight with Barak and Deborah? Why did Zebulun and Naphtali go so willingly? Why did Asher and Dan and Gad refuse to go? Who was Jael? Who fought for Barak and the children of Israel? How can fighting be done from heaven? How complete was the victory? How did Jael complete the defeat and rout of the enemy? Can you give anything from Deborah's song of victory?

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON APPLIED.

Has our own country an oppressor like Jabin? Who is it? When did he gain his foothold? What are his chariots made of? How have the people dealt with this foe hitherto? Have we a Deborah among us? What is her work? Do the people of the country enlist as soldiers willingly, as did some of the tribes of Israel? Who are the most willing? Who stand aloof? Will God honor those who do not come up to His help in this war? What will He say to such at the judgment? What can we do to push the war?

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

A CITIZEN AT LARGE.

It seems then that the depositing of Mr. Blaine's ballot on the prohibitory amendment in Maine the other day must be classed with Disraeli's "Events that never took place!" His friends when bantered about it next day were inclined to doubt the report; because, they claimed it was so entirely unlike the brave boldness of the plumed knight. The report however was confirmed; and more, he made a speech to his Augusta neighbors about it. He had refrained from voting on that question, pro or con, intelligently and for a purpose. One can imagine the eagerness with which that audience waited for his explanation when informed he had one to offer. It must have been similar to the hushed Mormon expectancy in the Salt Lake tabernacle when John Taylor is going to make known some important revelation just received the night before. The case was a simple one: A question was submitted to the people of his state for their decision; he, a suffragist of that state did not vote on that question, and why? Had Mr. Blaine, in allowing his name to be placed at the head of a party ticket ceased to be one of the people, so as not to have the responsibility of voting yes or no, devolving on him like the rest? Does the fact that one is a candidate for the highest office in the nation, and even during the time of his candidacy, lift him so high that he is exonerated from the duties of a citizen of the commonwealth? Such queries are so absurd, and so plainly involve their own contradiction, that hardly any one in that expectant though somewhat puzzled audience would harbor them among their ruminations. And yet such is the revelation which the august citizen and ex-senator makes! This valiant son of the Pine Tree state excuses himself for not voting on the question as to whether his own state, through its constitution, should prohibit or sanction the sale of rum, on the ground that this was entirely a state matter! And had not his own state in deciding that important issue any claim on him? Oh, no! he was the chosen leader of a great national party, and hence could not with propriety touch that ballot with his (to be perhaps) presidential fingers!

What an astounding discovery this was! and what an anomalous position, if this be the true doctrine, a presidential nominee is placed in! It makes one think of the colored man's description of the difference between a railroad accident and a shipwreck. "Ef you git caught in a railroad bust," said he, "dare you am; but ef you go down in a shipwreck, whar am ye?" Mr. Blaine is caught somewhere into some kind of an intermediate cyclone that makes us echo Sambo's query, and say to him, "Whar am ye?" He seems to be a kind of a knight errant citizen at large, unhitched from state relations and obligations through the wizardry of a presidential nomination!

The situation was an embarrassing one we acknowledge, with the eyes of tens of thousands of prohibitionists, on one hand, and of beer loving Germans on the other, directing their searching blaze on that amendment ballot. How welcome, just in that nick of time, before he took that last step to the polls, to have that gleam of light, "light that never was on sea or shore" in connection with that subject before, flash upon him at once, so that he knew what to do, and how to explain it, viz., that it was simply a state affair, and hence required none of his attention! Desperate indeed must be the emergency when principle is remanded to the rear and policy steps to the front and commands a great captain in apologizing to the nation for the neglect of a solemn duty, to stultify his conscience by resorting to a subterfuge so glaringly shallow and base as this, and he obeys!

As to the prohibitory amendment in Maine, fortunately, the grand old state, without his help arose in her might on the morning of that election day, and with a solemn brow and an eye of fire put her speaking trumpet to her lips, and using her time honored motto, spake to all her sons, "Dirigo!" (I direct,) "I direct the doom of rum!" And from mountain and valley, from hill and gorge, from every hamlet and town, the voters came, and like the voice of many waters responded, "Aye!" seventy thousand more than enough.

MRS. FOSTER'S UTTERANCE AT THE DETROIT CONVENTION.

Taken from her Annual Report as Superintendent of the Department of Legislation.

The desired prohibitory amendment to the federal constitution still awaits the action of congress; it has many strong champions; with a little more "back-fire" from prohibitory states it will before long be submitted for ratification by state legislatures. Let it always be remembered that senators and members of congress will not often rise higher than their constituences at home; the best way to secure national prohibition is to make prohibitory sentiment in the states.

I shall cause to be presented to the next congress petitions already circulated by our union for this consummation of our desires in respect to legislation. * * * * I ask temperance women throughout the country to study well the political situation, to scrutinize the position and the action of party leaders. Political parties are not known to the constitution, but they are a recognized and potent factor in our American life. They are voluntary associations of voters about accepted constructions of the constitution. Where the constitution is so plainly expressed that no differing construction is possible, then no political issues can be made. The early discussions of the question involved in national unity and state sovereignty all turned upon the question, What is the real spirit and intent of the constitution? In the present and more vital question, What shall be done with the liquor traffic? Prohibitionists have always claimed, and they have been sustained in their claim by state and national supreme courts, that the spirit of constitutions guaranteeing "protection to life, liberty, and property" justifies the absolute putting away of the liquor traffic; license advocates have claimed that restriction is allowed, as well as prohibition, and this construction also is sustained by the courts. It has been a very general belief among politicians of all parties that this question does not come within the domain of political action; the Prohibition party, in state and nation,—more recently named "The Prohibition Home Protection Party,"—has clearly set forth that the whole question is the proper subject of political action. The Republican party in Maine and Vermont has adopted prohibition as its settled policy. More recently that party in Kansas and Iowa has boldly taken the same position, but not until the people through the constitution had compelled such action. I know of no instance in which the Democratic party, as a party, has in state or national convention, endorsed the principle or policy of prohibition. The Greenback party has done this in several instances.

Please notice, I speak of these parties as acting in their representative gatherings. Individual instances of prohibition Democrats and license Republicans are so numerous as to greatly modify the effect of party records. The movement for constitutional prohibition is being recognized by all parties, and is an admirable means of coercing their action. Every temperance woman ought to oppose, by voice and influence, the action of any party in which it ignores or refuses to submit this question to the votes of the people. She ought also to support the action of any party wherein it commands its representatives to thus aid the people in the expression of their will. In some instances this will lead women contrary to their otherwise political preferences; but since we believe the prohibition of the liquor traffic to be the subject of paramount importance, we are justified in so doing. We do not thus give ourselves to the support of any party as a party, but we do follow wherever we see the white banner of prohibition.

Do not be afraid of the charge of partisanship. A grand manifesto for principle will be of no avail unless the living personality of human effort makes it effective. The grand chorus of majorities, as in unison they cry "The saloon must go," shall possess no coercive force unless that unison, merged into legislative, judicial, executive harmony, and guided by the baton of a political party, shall take up the strain and still sing on, "The saloon must go, the saloon shall go, and by our hand its power is broken." God forbid that any temperance woman should with doubt or discord weaken the strain or cause the time to drag.

The force of the material world is applied by machinery; the cause of God among men is advanced by human hands; the Christian church conserves its interests through denominations; any great principle of governmental science which seeks recognition of legislation must be championed by some political party. The temperance reform is of full age: it has met an honest recognition from science, from philanthrophy, from Christianity, and now espoused by the dominant thought of a Christian nation, it waits in the temple of our civilization for the solemn rites which shall forever enthrone it in the hearts and homes of our people.

The italics of the above are our own, but it would be difficult not to emphasize instructions so plain, and so exactly fulfilled.

In the first paragraph quoted, it will be seen that Mrs. Foster speaks of national prohibition as the consummation of our desires, and favorably of the petition to congress therefor.

---

The press dispatches say that Maine has given 15,000 majority for the Republican state ticket and 50,000 majority for the prohibitory constitutional amendment. A statement affording food for thought, and involving several considerations worth noting.

1. In the estimation of the voters of the Pine Tree state, where prohibition has been tried for over thirty years, prohibition does prohibit; and they say so by 50,000 majority. Mr. Croaker over the "failure of prohibition in Maine," do you hear that?

2. Some prohibitionists are not Republicans. With 15,000 majority for Robie and 50,000 majority for the amendment, it is evident 35,000 of the votes must have been Democrats or something else than Republicans. But Mr. Blaine says, "some Republicans voted against the amendment," and some others may have followed the example of Mr. Blaine and his son Walker, and "dodged" the amendment. By just this unknown quantity must we add to the Democratic 35,000 votes for prohibition.

3. Mr. Blaine no longer appears as the ideal "plumed knight." In a speech from the entrance of his house Monday evening, he said: "Party discipline is powerless against the consciences of men," and in the same speech said, "For myself I decided not to vote at all on the question. I took this position because I am chosen by the Republican party as the representative of national issues." Would Mr. Blaine have it understood that he has no convictions on this supreme issue of the hour; no convictions on the great moral and economic question of this nation, or for the home as against the saloon? Out of his own mouth let him be condemned. Either he has no such convictions or he stands self-accused of the most contemptible cowardice.

4. A majority of the Democrats in Maine voted for the prohibitory amendment. The total Democratic vote was nearly 64,000. It is certain from the returns that 35,000 Democrats voted for the amendment and according to Mr. Blaine, "some Republicans voted against it." If we estimate that negative Republican vote at only one in ten, then fully 43,000 Democrats voted for the amendment, representing a majority of 11,000 on their total party vote.

The following explanation from the national officers explains itself:

163, 14th St., New York, Sept. 10, 1884.

Dear Editor:—Please make this statement by way of explanation: We forwarded the "address of national officers" (in your number dated Aug. 28) in great haste. We were careful to separate by our official signatures the statement of facts from the suggestion of methods. In our haste the latter article was also signed officially but by next mail we sent a postal requesting that a distinction might be observed by striking off the official designation, but we learn that you did not receive this until the paper had gone to press.

If our W. C. T. Unions will review the address they will see the importance of this discrimination inasmuch as the first part was an official communication, while the latter was made up of practical suggestions and was not intended to be official. Yours for St. John and Daniel,

Frances E. Willard.

Strickland's Price Current, the advertising sheet of a wholesale liquor firm of this city, gives special notice to the trade in temperance towns as follows:

We put no marks or brands on boxes, and (except barrel goods) no one can tell that you get liquors when ordering from us. We use plain envelopes so that no one can tell with whom you correspond.

* * *

The same circular says that the firm has a United States permit, authorizing that its "Wine of Life" be classed as a proprietary medicine, and consequently it may be sold by dealers without paying U. S. internal revenue special tax as retail liquor dealer, and without a saloon license.

* * *

These are the good law-abiding citizens who propose to run the country for us, voting for no man for any office who is not favorable to their traffic.

* * *

Says the Chancellor of Chautauqua: "A woman who cannot train boys, and influence brothers and husbands to vote in the interest of mothers, sisters, wives and daughters, is neither worthy or competent to vote herself." Whereupon Dr. Bayliss, the live editor of the Western Christian Advocate, trips up the chancellor neatly by asking how he would like to be deprived of his own franchise, because he could not influence half a dozen votes in the direction of his personal interests.

* * *

There is a class of people mentioned in scripture who lade other men (or women) with burdens heavy to be borne, but will not themselves touch them with so much as one of their fingers.

* * *

Some women do have influence enough to turn votes and the tide of business, too, though even this ought not to enfranchise them according to Dr. Vincent. I have just seen the signature of one who influenced her husband to root up his wine vineyard and set it out to table grapes.

News From the Field.

NEW YORK.

Yonkers.—The Union Signal has just come and as usual brought so much good cheer to us. The news from Y. W. C. T. Unions is always eagerly looked for by me and I was especially interested this evening in the account by Miss McDowell of the recently organized union in Evanston, and of the novel entertainment given to the children. As I read, I wished we might hear the summer experiences of our young ladies, and concluded to "open the meeting" with my own brief one. During July and August the meetings of our Y. W. C. T. U. were adjourned, but in July Mrs. Lasher, one of our members who has a lovely home surrounded by handsome grounds, proposed giving a lawn party or afternoon tea for the advanced class of kitchen-garden maids. Accordingly we began to plan for it, driving about to invite the girls, who, of course, were most happy to accept. The appointed day was a perfect one, and the girls came dressed in fresh ginghams or cambrics (some having been made for the occasion) and a number brought their aprons, seeming to forget they would not be marked for the omission of them, as at school.

Well, we gave them something to eat, of course, not watermelons, but lemonade and cake, prepared by the teachers; and we reversed the usual order of things, the little maids being seated while the young ladies served. Then we played games on the lawn, such as we enjoyed in our own childish days. Finally some one proposed we should take seats under a wide-spreading elm and play stage-coach. This we all joined in heartily, and our hostess who was called upon to tell the story made a pointed temperance lesson in relating the misfortunes of that stage-ride. She gave a chapter of sad disasters all due to the intemperate stage driver, who found many wayside inns where he could stop to take "just one glass," until having lost all self-control, he could no longer manage his unruly horses; and thus the result of the upsetting of the coach. I have since asked her if she had not read what Dr. S. I. Prime said about stage coach accidents, but she had not. Perhaps some of our readers have not. Dr. Prime says in going through the mountains he inquired of a driver the cause of so many disasters, and the man replied, "There are two reasons; self conceit and rum, but the most and worst come from rum." "I have been driving a coach since I was fourteen and am now nearly fifty, yet I have never had an upset in my life." "But" he continued, "I was never the worse for liquor and never tasted tobacco." "Good for you" responded Dr. Prime, "we are of the same persuasion."

The summer vacation is over now, and we have resumed our Y. W. C. T. U. meetings. We met yesterday and discussed methods for raising funds to furnish our new kitchen-garden rooms in the new temperance hall, and we think our future prospects bright and hopeful.

M. C. McClees.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Nashua.—Our W. C. T. U., was organized in 1876; numbers this year about sixty members. During the fall and winter of 1882-83 we had a brilliant course of six lectures in the city hall which netted us a small sum. The lecturers were Mrs. Livermore, Mrs. Foster, Dr. Boole of Brooklyn, Col. Russell H. Conwell, Judge A. W. Tourgee, and Lieut. John W. Danenhower. During the last year and a half we have had a series of union meetings in the churches on Sabbath evenings. In this series we have had Mrs. McLaughlin, Miss Kimball, Mrs. Barney, Miss Greenwood and Mrs. Livermore. We also had Miss Willard one evening in December in the Opera House. These meetings have been free to all and expenses have been paid by generous collections taken at the close of each lecture. We secured a large number of names to the petition presented to our last legislature for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. The school board was reminded by our union of the passage of the law and the teachers were examined in accordance with it.

A year ago prizes were offered in the high and grammar schools for the best essays on the effects of the use of alcohol and tobacco. In the high school Miss Mattie DeWolfe won the first prize, $5.00; Miss Bessie Dodge the second, $3.00. In the grammar school, Master Charles Mills and Miss Ida Otis were the successful competitors, the former winning the first prize of $5.00, the latter the second prize of $3.00.

A fully attended and most interesting prayer meeting was held by our union last election day; the 27th of May was also observed as a day of prayer.

Last spring a small Y. W. C. T. U. was formed, the first in the state, which we sincerely hope will gird on its armor in the fall and prove itself worthy to be numbered among the white ribbon sisterhood.

June 14, we opened a pleasant reading room which has been well patronized by young and old. At present it is open only on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, but we hope to have means to keep it open every evening before long. Surely we have no reason to be ashamed of our work or discouraged because we have not accomplished more. Will not the good women of Nashua who may chance to read this stop and think before they criticise our work and say we are not doing anything. That hinders our progress a great deal. Won't you come in and help us and then we shall be able to do more?

NEBRASKA.

Clear Water.—I have thought perhaps you would be interested to hear from northern Nebraska, and of the good work being done in this part of God's vineyard. We live in the beautiful Elkhorn valley, in this new country, where people are flocking from all parts, settling up the broad and fertile prairies; making homes for many who have never owned a home before. Schools and churches are springing up all over the country and good strong temperance men and women are here working for God and humanity.

In our little village we have a Band of Hope numbering 70. Have meetings every Sabbath p. m. and monthly concert. The dear little ones can hardly wait for the concert, so anxious are they to recite the pieces they have learned and to sing their sweet temperance songs. The parents are interested and much good is being done.

At Neligh, our county seat, the last saloon has gone, and instead of saloons to curse the people, they have a fine Christian college, which is doing much to educate and Christianize this part of Nebraska.

God grant that the good work may go on all over our land.

Mrs. J. H. Kelsey.

INDIANA.

WARREN COUNTY W. C. T. U.

A county convention was held at Williamsport, Ind., August 14, for the purpose of organizing a county W. C. T. U. so that the women of the county might work more effectually for the welfare of humanity. The following officers were elected: President, Sadie B. Whistler, Marshfield, Ind.; vice president, Mrs. Ann Fleming, West Lebanon; secretary, Emma Pitcher, Williamsport; treasurer, Mrs. J. Whitten, Marshfield. The services of Mrs. Anna B. Campbell were the light and sunshine of the convention. Besides assisting greatly in the perfection of a county organization, she delivered in the afternoon of the same day, an impressive speech to the convention and Normal students of the city, showing the importance of temperance education being taught to the children of our land.

Another address was delivered in the evening by Mrs. Campbell to a well filled hall. Her ideas on "The Necessity of Woman's Labor in the cause of Temperance;" and this as a means of true prohibition were clearly and accurately presented.

Among the resolutions adopted we note the following:

Whereas, We, as a union of ladies struggling to uphold the sacredness of the home, believe the liquor traffic to be the greatest enemy of our homes; therefore be it

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to discourage the liquor traffic by all means within our power, and that we protest against all revenue to be derived therefrom, and that we demand the privilege of saying whether or no this monster evil shall flourish in our midst.

Resolved, That, as the teachers of Warren county are an important factor in the education of her people, we ask their assistance in our work for humanity by instilling into the minds of their pupils temperance principles, and by teaching them the pernicious effects of alcohol and tobacco upon the human system.

Resolved, That, we will work unceasingly for prohibition in such ways and avenues as promise sure soucses.

MRS. NICHOLS AT UNITED PRESBYTERIAN ASSOCIATION.

The United Presbyterian Missionary Association of Indiana Presbytery, in session at Spring Hill, August 20 and 21, devoted the evening of the 20th to a temperance meeting, at which Mrs. Nichols delivered her lecture, "Evil recoils upon itself." At the close a resolution was unanimously passed endorsing the work for a scientific temperance instruction law. Also the following:

Resolved, That this Missionary Association of the Presbytery of Indiana recognize the need of earnest prayer and work to put down this great evil, that we give our hearty co-operation and best efforts to aid in the progress of temperance work in our State, and that we will urge our brothers, fathers and husbands to vote as they pray.

INDIANAPOLIS.—COLORED PEOPLE'S WORK.

A more earnest, energetic set of girls we have never met than belong to the Indianapolis Y. W. C. T. U. No. 4. Though few in numbers, inexperienced in such work, and with little time of their own,—most of them being employed in work for others,—they were not daunted by these difficulties when it was proposed that they hold a paper fair, but fixed the date and went to work with such a will that all things were in readiness August 13—just a month and two days after their organization—and a most delightful entertainment crowned their efforts with deserved success.

The U. B. hall never looked fairer than with its walls adorned and tables filled with the many pretty and useful articles made of paper, and the bouquets and plants so natural that one involuntarily stopped to breathe their fragrance before discovering they were only paper. Then when one knew that the girls had learned this dainty craft, by which at so little cost they might tastefully adorn their homes, within the three weeks, and realized how great a step it was in their development, the articles became doubly attractive.

The gentleness and grace with which Miss Bell Harvey, the president, Miss Ella Hill, Miss Bell Fields and other young ladies received and entertained the guests soon relieved of any such idea those who came feeling that because it was a temperance affair it would be "poky." Two of the young gentlemen who came were so pleased that they became members of the union, and others avowed themselves as favorably impressed though not quite ready to sign the pledge and join the union.

Among those present were Rev. Alexander, of the Ninth Presbyterian church, and his accomplished wife; Mrs. M. E. Balch, vice president at large of the state; Mrs. J. F. Hall, who so kindly gave the assistance in making articles which her knowledge of kindergarten work enabled her to do; and Mrs. Hill rejoicing over the great success which the Lord had given; for not only did they see that their main object—the creation of temperance sentiment socially—was being accomplished but financial success was given them, and a very creditable sum would be realized from this first effort.

The secret of the success—was it the earnest work alone? Was is not partly due to the noon-day meeting for prayer and consecration?—Organizer.

WAYSIDE GLEANINGS.

MRS. S. M. PERKINS, NATIONAL ORGANIZER.

So far apart are all my appointments! One Sabbath, two weeks ago, in Hartwick Seminary, Otsego county, New York. The next Sunday evening in Sharpsville, Pa. A little story is connected with the latter place.

Among the residents of Sharpsville is a Mrs. Chloe Pierce, a large minded, and a wealthy woman, who gave Buchtel College, Ohio, a donation of eleven thousand dollars a few years ago. I wanted to interest her in the work of the National W. C. T. U. In her own beautiful home I told her of the different departments of the work and hoped to awaken an interest.

"No, no!" she exclaimed, "let others work for that I am not at all in sympathy with the cause."

"Go with me to Chautauqua," I urged, "we are to have two days of temperance there."

"Yes, I will go, I want to see the place."

All temperance conversation was then dropped and we were soon speeding away to this Mecca of reform. It was interesting to watch the countenance of this woman as one speaker after another so ably presented the cause.

"I am converted," she exclaimed, at the close of the Friday meeting. On Saturday she returned to her home and I went to Cooperstown to revisit my early home. A letter came from her, saying, "Come to Sharpsville and give us a lecture next Sunday night."

I found a large audience and organized a W. C. T. U. with this same Mrs. Pierce for president. She is a worker and I know that she will succeed and that her influence will be a help in all that region for she never does anything by the halves. It was worth a little time and effort to make such a convert to the cause.

The next Sunday evening finds me in Leavenworth, Kansas. Had a full house, the Methodist minister presiding. This union supports a reading room and library and sixteen hundred dollars are raised each year to defray the expense of the local work.

Mrs. Fields and Mrs. North do not know the meaning of the word fail, and great good is being accomplished by the indefatigable workers. Kansas has doubled her unions during the past year. I am now in Atchison, a city set on a hill, and have a meeting this evening.

FLORIDA.

Waldo.—While sending subscribers for The Union Signal, I thought I would just add a word or two to let its readers know that we were alive here in Waldo on the temperance question. Last week we had a Democratic meeting, and the W. C. T. U. raised a tent and furnished hot coffee and dinner to all who were interested enough in our endeavors to give us a call. Our Band of Hope was invited on the stand to sing America, and a temperance song. "When we are old enough to vote, we'll sweep the land of whisky clear." The last named song was heartily cheered. I have heard of several who will vote for St. John, and may the number increase who will vote for just and righteous principles, until we have men in office who love God and hate covetousness.

We are in correspondence with Mrs. Sallie Chapin, hoping to have her here sometime in the near future.

Mrs. L. A. Hallock.

MISSOURI.

Thirteenth District Convention.—The second semi-annual convention of the Thirteenth Congressional District of the W. C. T. U. of Missouri, will convene at Springfield, Greene county, Mo., on Wednesday and Thursday, September 24 and 25, 1884. The program of the day sessions will include ladies who are identified with the work. For evening addresses we shall secure some of the ablest women in the state.

Mrs. S. A. Case, Dist. Sec.

Harrisonville.—We celebrated our first anniversary July 23d, with music and essays by the W. C. T. U., and short addresses by the ministers and other temperance gentlemen. The exercises were well attended and highly spoken of, considering the cause grows slowly in our town, but we have no such words as "give up" in our society. With the loving Master for our captain we expect to march straight on to victory. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Mrs. M. A. Deane, president; Mrs. G. E. Shanklin, corresponding and recording secretary; Mrs. Maggie Brison, treasurer. MRS. G. E. SHANKLIN.

TEXAS.

SUNDAY, August 24.—The Baptist association met at Old Shilch, a large audience present. I lectured in the afternoon on "Do the Scriptures Sanction the moderate use of Intoxicating Liquors?" It was the first time that body ever asked or permitted a woman to appear before them. I occupied the pulpit, many gentlemen came forward and sanctioned the lecture, etc. I had a very interesting and successful trip south. We will begin our young woman's work at the state meeting. Beginning at Paris, I have a string of appointments from Sunday homeward. JENNY B. BEAUCHAMP.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CIRCULAR LETTER FROM THE SUPERINTENDENT DEPARTMENT OF UNFERMENTED WINE.

Will THE UNION SIGNAL please say to local unions in Pennsylvania that at my earnest request Mrs. Hunt, national superintendent, has kindly extended the time and I will receive reports up to October 8, for state report, but will be glad to have all sent in by September 18, in order to formulate a report for National? Please report your town or county so that Pennsylvania may not be behind other states as we feel sure much has been accomplished in this line of work. MRS. A. P. HAMILTON.

NEW JERSEY.

STATE CONVENTION ANNOUNCEMENT.

The tenth annual meeting of the W. C. T. U., of New Jersey will be held in Newark Oct. 8, 9 and 10, 1884.

Meeting of executive committee on the 7th, in the rooms of the W. C. T. U., corner of Mulberry and Market streets. As this meeting completes our ten years in the work, we hope to make it an occasion of unusual interest. S. J. C. DOWNS, Pres.

ILLINOIS.

TEMPERANCE CAMPMEETINGS.

The Illinois circuit of temperance camp meetings, seven in number, which opened so auspiciously with the Franklin Grove meeting (already reported) August 9 and 10, included meetings at Lake Bluff, Watseka, Eureka, Lena, and Oak Hill, closing with the meeting at New Lennox, August 29.

Their object has been to bring our work, especially the gospel phase of it, before our country people who otherwise would know little of it. They have been held on Methodist camp grounds, on days just preceding the opening or following the close of the regular camp meeting, that we might have the benefit of tents, boarding arrangements, etc. Held thus in close connection with religious meetings, they have given prominence to our gospel work. Temperance in public schools, our legislative work and prohibition (on grounds where it was not prohibited), have also received much attention.

The LAKE BLUFF meeting, August 17, was held in connection with the Institute of Heredity and Hygiene, under the auspices of the Central union of Chicago.

Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, our "elect lady," presided over the services.

Mrs. Jennie F. Willing delivered the sermon, taking for her text Hebrews, 11, 24–26. "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, estimating the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt." She said in effect: Every life is a succession of choices. The student chooses books. The business man forsakes study and sacred life, and chooses money. Moses' flawless choice of divine will brought all his choices into harmony with the divine authority. Spoke of what Moses gave up; of what he took in exchange for this giving up: how he came to make the choice, and what he gained. At this time Egypt was the proudest nation on the globe, and Moses, as the adopted son of a childless princess, was heir to its throne; yet he gave up this brilliant prospect. He had from his cradle been accustomed to the care of refined attendants; yet he took himself among a degraded people. He was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and to a man of Moses' cast of mind, it was doubtless hard to forego that association with the philosophers of his time; but he gave up all his opportunities for acquiring knowledge. He gave up his desire for power. It was no slight thing for a soul like his to step down and out and see the world go on without him, forgetful of his existence. Lastly he gave up self. This choice took Moses from the position of prince, philosopher and statesman to be fer a third of his life a simple Arab shepherd. He left the library and the palace for the shepherd's hut. He gave up all, and took in exchange what seemed utter wreck and loss. How did Moses come to make this choice? He had good blood, the blood of a monotheistic race in his veins, and this was fired by the confidence of his God. Appropriately the speaker expanded upon the subject of heredity, mentioning the notorious criminal woman among whose descendants are numbered 1,200 criminals.

At 3 p. m. Mr. Edward Murphy delivered an address. He devoted the greater part of his address to tracing the history of reforms, and pointing out the analogies to the temperance reform which may be found in them. Touching upon the reforms of Solon, William Tell, of Cleisthenes, of Luther, of Washington, of Wilberforce, and Clarkson, and the abolition of slavery in England and America, the speaker showed that all these were advocated by the minority, and dwelt upon the importance of the minority. All these reforms were in the interest of physical, intellectual and religious liberty. The speaker dwelt on the necessity of personal abstinence, showed the fallacy of moderation, and touched slightly upon the question of medicinal use. He then addressed himself to the young men, showing clearly the advantage in a business light, which the young man who is a total abstainer has over one who is not.

After a powerful appeal for individual effort in this work the lecturer invited the people to sign the pledge and put on the blue ribbon. Many responded to his appeal. A mass meeting was held in the evening, at which addresses were made by Mary Allen West in the interest of scientific temperance, and by Mr. Murphy.

LENA.—The Lena camp-ground, beautiful indeed for situation, was at its best at the opening session of this the first camp meeting of the Sixth district, on Saturday afternoon, September 22d. Miss West gave an interesting and helpful [Bible reading] at this first session, and the president of the district, Miss Goodrich, followed in a brief, earnest talk. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry conducted a gospel temperance service in the evening, reading and commenting upon the account of the man with an unclean spirit, whom no man could tame, as given in Mark 5, 1-16, and enforcing her remarks with incidents connected with her work in Rockford.

At 2:30 on Sunday a large crowd gathered for the children's meeting, despite the threatening clouds. Miss West read and commented upon the story of Daniel. Mrs. Rounds followed with a talk that held both children and adults, although the rain was falling and umbrellas were in great demand.

Mr. Edward Murphy gave the closing talk to the children, when it was found necessary to adjourn to the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. At the former, Miss West presented the subject of Scientific Temperance, to a small but very appreciative audience, while Mrs. Henry gave her address, "The Unanswered Prayer," at the Methodist church.

The rain continuing, services were held at both churches in the evening, Mrs. L. S. Rounds speaking at the Presbyterian church, and Thomas Edward Murphy at the Methodist church. Both addresses were spoken of in the highest terms. Mrs. Rounds presented various lines of W. C. T. U. work, giving especial prominence to that of Gospel temperance. Her strong words, her earnest appeals were received with cordial response and hearty enthusiasm.

Monday morning the clouds disappeared and the day was as lovely as heart could wish. The morning session was devoted to a discussion of "The Gospel in Temperance;" Mrs. Henry presented "Gospel Work;" Mrs. Rounds, "Temperance in the Sunday school," and Miss West "The Flower Mission."

At the afternoon session, Miss West presented our legislative work, dwelling particularly upon scientific temperance. The arguments and facts presented were clear and convincing, and must tell favorably for the bill that will be presented the coming winter.

A talk upon young woman's work followed. Miss Kittie Waugh, of Rockford, set forth most attractively the work that girls can do, giving the work done by the Rockford Y. W. C. T. U. in illustration.

The closing session Monday evening was a grand success. Mrs. Rounds presented strong reasons for hating the liquor traffic, solid arguments for total abstinence and prohibition, closing with an earnest appeal to voters, especially those casting their first vote, to see to it that their votes were cast in the interest of the home.

WATSEKA.—Two days were given to the W. C. T. U. right in the heart of a grand camp meeting. The blessing and baptising which had fallen upon the camp ground was shared with our society without making any the poorer, for the blessing of the Lord maketh everybody richer. Mrs. Willard and Mrs. Rounds were the speakers of the first day, the former outlining "the faith and aims of the W. C. T. U.," and the latter winding up the day with a ringing prohibition speech of rare convincing power. She read the tenth psalm as her text, showing its perfect adaptation as the portrait of a saloon keeper, and then went on to show why our faces should be set against his business.

On the morning of the second day a consecration meeting opened the exercises, and a season of deep spiritual enjoyment it was to all who participated in it. Mrs. Willard followed with a talk on the legislative work of Illinois W. C. T. U., showing along what line of experience the women of Illinois had been led to ask for the ballot. At the close, Rev. Dr. Gue, the presiding elder, asked for a rising vote of all women who would like to vote or would vote if the opportunity were given. Four-fifths of the women present rose. He then asked for an expression of the sentiment of the men present which was most cordially answered, only two or three remaining seated.

The afternoon meeting was given to Mrs. Rounds and Mr. Edward Murphy, both of whom delighted the people. Mr. Murphy made a very eloquent address in the evening and won a place in the hearts of central Illinois people which will make him a welcome visitor and worker in that part of the state always.

EUREKA.—This was a joint meeting of the Ninth and Fourteenth districts, opening Friday, August 15 and continuing four days.

Mrs. M. B. Willard, Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Miss M. A. West, Mrs. E. G. Hibben, and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster were in attendance with other well known ladies of the two districts, furnishing a strong force of workers and such an able and varied array of talent as necessarily made the meeting a power for good. Unfortunately, the presiding elder of the district, who had most cordially and generously assumed the financial responsibility of the meeting, was ill and unable to be present. The ladies were not allowed to take the meeting in charge as on the other grounds, which was a great embarassment and detriment to their perfect success. A regular report of this meeting has not been received, consequently but little can be said of it.

NEW LENNOX.—This meeting followed closely upon the regular campmeeting, and was in charge of the efficient district president, Mrs. L. A. Hagans. About fifteen hundred people were in attendance. Miss Helen L. Hood was the first speaker of the day, giving her attention to temperance literature as a necessity in the work. Miss Hood forcibly set forth the need of earnest work in the cause and encouraged her hearers and sympathisers by reporting a large increase of the work force throughout the state and greater enthusiasm all along the line.

Professor Adolph Schmitz, of Chicago, now principal of the leading schools in Elgin, was next introduced and he delivered an excellent address. His subject was "German Work." He spoke of the similarity between the temperance movements and all great reforms of the past. Long after they were conceived did the final fruition of success appear. Only after patient labor and faithful promulgation did any great ethical revolution take place, and so it was with this work. Progress was being rapidly made, people were beginning to see its truth and the glad dawn of success was near at hand.

He spoke on the matter of personal liberty, so much discussed, and stated that the cry of "taking away our personal liberty," should not be made against the advocates of temperance, but against the liquor dealers and the liquor interests. He claimed that they were the ones who were taking away men's personal liberty by so debauching them that they hadn't mind enough to do anything and even sending men to fill drunkards' graves whose liberty and reason had been taken from them because of drink.

He showed that drink was at the bottom of all imprisonment and that thus it was most clearly demonstrated that drink was the destroyer of men's personal liberty because it was the cause of all liberty being taken from them.

He defined personal liberty as advocated by the enemies of temperance, as "the right to do all one pleases and all one can do," illustrating it by speaking of a traveling companion who wanted his watch but which he refused to give him, thus restraining his liberty.

Mrs. Carse, "the silver tongued," then asked that $75 be raised at once to help defray the expenses of the camp-meeting work. Father Hardy thought a hundred dollars should be raised and free will offerings were called for. The response was generous and in a few moments over $100 was in while the hats were still being passed.

The afternoon session opened promptly at 1:30. Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, wife of the gubernatorial candidate of the Prohibition party, reading the scripture lesson. Rev. Mr. Haley followed with prayer.

Thomas Murphy, son of the well known Francis Murphy, followed with a telling speech. The Joliet Daily News says of him, "Thomas is his father's superior as a temperance orator and equally as ready with wit and anecdote." He gave graphic descriptions of some of his experiences in the work with his father, exciting laughter and tears by turns. He believed that if whisky could be taken out of Ireland her troubles could be peaceably adjudicated and thought if prohibition could be effected in America hard times would cease and the land become a perfect El Dorado for the oppressed and afflicted.

After music, Mrs Mary B. Willard, editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, addressed the meeting. She spoke of "Home," of its tender influence and of the chords of love by which all were bound to it. She spoke of it as the foundation upon which the superstructure of this free nation was built, and declared that as the home instructed, so eventually would the life of the nation be conformed. Everything centered about the home. Home is the motive of every work. The perpetuation of homes of love, the building up homes of beauty out of squalor and filth should be the motive of all the workers ethically, politically, or commercially.

The old parties are losing sight of this fact; are forgetting that the home interest is paramount to all others. They are allowing self-interest to take the place of the broad patriotism which once characterized them, and so a new party which has the home, its perpetuation and its elevation as its first principle, was necessary, and was being pushed forward under the name of the "Prohibition Home Protection Party."

Mrs. Carse then spoke of the official paper of the W. C. T. U., THE UNION SIGNAL. She told of its aims and purposes, its efficient work in the temperance cause, and asked for it the support of all sympathisers with the movement "for God and home and native land."—Joliet Daily News.

OAK HILL.—Elder Luckey, presiding elder of Peoria district, had the grounds at Oak Hill in charge, and did all in his power to make our meetings a success; in this he was warmly seconded by all the other ministers on the grounds. Nowhere have we been more warmly welcomed. The accommodations were exceptionally good, there being a large tabernacle with a shingle roof, a thing greatly appreciated during the pouring rain of Wednesday afternoon and evening. At Lena, under similar circumstances, the services were broken up, for there was no cover over the people's heads except the oak trees.

Mrs. Elizabeth G. Hibben, of Peoria, took charge of the meetings. The opening exercises were very impressive, the key note being that our bodies are the temples of the living God, hence should be kept pure as fit dwelling places for Him.

This was followed by an illustrated lecture by Mrs. Clara H. Smith, of Elmwood, our efficient district organizer. By the way, she has organized fifteen new unions during the past three months in this district, trebling our numbers.

The last thing of the morning was an address by Mr. Sedgwick, a clear-headed lawyer of Peoria, who has the courage of his convictions and dares to stand by them.

In the afternoon Miss West presented the subject of temperance in public schools to an unusually attentive audience. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, of Chicago, followed, taking up the gospel work. She had charge of the three o'clock meetings in Farwell Hall for many years, and held her audience spell-bound as she recounted the triumphs of the gospel in that field.

The evening was spent in a prayer and experience meeting under the leadership of Mrs. Hibben. Topic, Faith. Elder Luckey and many ministers took part as well as several ladies and laymen. So deep was the interest aroused that the pouring rain, the thunder and the lightning were unheeded.

Thursday morning's exercises opened with a consecration meeting from eight till nine, conducted by Mrs. Emma Kirkpatrick, of Monmouth. All who have heard her on similar occasions do not need to be told that this meeting was an exceedingly interesting and helpful one.

At half-past 9 Miss West conducted a worker's experience meeting, introducing it by an exposition of the Lord's prayer, as especially adapted to our work.

Mrs. Hibben followed with touching experiences in the line of our Flower Mission department. Mrs. Davidson, Lewiston, told of jail work. Mrs. Kirkpatrick told of their industrial school, and other ladies and gentlemen, at the request of Miss West, recounted facts from their experience which might be helpful to other workers.

Mr. Francis Murphy was to have spoken at half-past 10 o'clock, but as he failed to appear, and the interest in the experience meeting was so great, it was continued until noon. We have seldom seen a more helpful meeting. Questions were asked and answered regarding the best methods of doing various kinds of temperance work, especially reformatory work, and discussions took a most practical form. Some reformed men were present who gave their experience. Valuable facts and suggestions were given by Elder Luckey, Elder Hunter, of Galesburgh, Mrs. Rounds, Rev. George, of Lewiston, Rev. Dow, of Peoria, William Reynolds and others.

The afternoon's exercises were opened by prayer by Elder Grier of Peoria. Mr. Wm. Reynolds presided, and introduced first Mrs. Rounds, who for an hour held the closest attention of the audience by her clear cut and logical eloquence. While ahe was speaking Mr. Murphy arrived, he having overslept in Peoria, after traveling most of the night, and missing the morning train came out on a freight. He followed Mrs. Rounds in a speech of over an hour, in his usual style, so well known to us here nine years ago. At the conclusion of his address, devotional exercises closed the services of this temperance grove meeting, the first held in our district, but we trust, not the last one.—Ex.

A REQUEST FROM THE STATE SUPERINTENDENT OF JUVENILE WORK.

Will the district presidents please write to me at once, answering the following questions? How many children in Bands of Hope in your district? How many Bands organized this year? Have you tried the military drill, and with what success? What about industrial schools and kindergartens? Have you a district superintendent of juvenile work?

Please answer these questions at once and give what other information you can unless you want your superintendent to go to the state convention without a report. Address Mrs. Laura A. Gwin, Carlinville, Ill.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Mr. Thomas Murphy is ready for active work.

—Rev. W. P. Stowe is preparing a lecture on "Temperance Instruction in Public Schools."

—Captain Linscott visited at headquarters last week and is ready for work.

—Unions will note that only about three weeks remain before our state meeting. Will they see to it that delegates are elected, dues collected and forwarded, before that time?

—A convention of the Ninth district will be held in Fairbury, Sept. 24. As this will be the last convention of the year a full delegation is earnestly desired that the business of the district may be finished satisfactorily, and plans laid for the coming year.

—Miss West has visited this month conventions at Pittsfield, Bloomington, Richview, Pocahontas, Ottawa, Rockford and Tuscola. She will fill no more engagements after the 15th of this month, as she sadly needs rest, as well as to prepare for the coming state meeing.

—Unions will please order freely of Leaflet No. 7, "The Story of a Great Conviction," and the 4p. leaflet, "Temperance in the Public Schools." They are sent to the unions in our state for mere price of postage, 10 cts. per 100. They should be circulated in every public meeting held by the union, at state fairs and other assemblies.

—The following partial list of speakers are announced as ready to fill engagements the coming fall and winter: Geo. Woodford, Miss M. A. West, Mr. Thomas Murphy, Mrs. Jane Zimmerman, Rev. W. P. Stowe, (except Sundays), Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Capt. J. F. Linscott, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Engagements made by sending to Helen L. Hood, 161 La Salle street.

—Many letters have been sent out concerning legislative candidates to which answers have not been received. Please let there be "no tarrying." October is near at hand and a report must be ready for state meeting. Our state plan of work pledges us to do all we can to elect a legislature that can be relied upon to give us the important aids to our cause which we seek. Interviewing the nominees is one of the most important means of securing this legislature, and loyalty to her state union demands this service of each woman who has it in her power to perform it.

—The following railroads offer reductions of one and one-third fare to those attending the state convention, full fare to be paid going, and the reduction given on the return trip: Illinois Central, Chicago & Northwestern, (from Chicago, Dixon and Freeport), Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago & Alton, (from Washington, Bloomington or Delavan), Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, Indiana, Bloomington & Western, and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. The Illinois Midland, Peoria & Pekin, and Central Iowa, will sell round trip tickets. Delegates and members of the executive committee please report to Mrs. E. G. Hibben, Peoria, for entertainment before October 1.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN LUIS OBISPO.—Mrs. Skelton has been with us and has banded us together into a union. I am recording secretary. She has appointed me as agent to get subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL. We never had a union, and want to learn. Mrs. Skelton tells us we cannot do good work without THE UNION SIGNAL. Please send me sample copies and terms and I will see that our women all take it. ### ORLEANS COUNTY CONVENTION.

The first annual convention of the Orleans county W. C. T. U. was held at the M. E. church in Hulberton, N. Y., Thursday, September 4, at 10 a. m., Mrs. J. H. Ruggles, our president, presiding. We have held quarterly meetings during the year. Report nine unions in one county with a membership of 348; five temperance schools, with an attendance of 195 pupils, besides a Band of Hope at Medina not connected with the W. C. T. U., organized in 1867, which has a membership of over 300. Gospel temperance meetings are held every Sabbath afternoon in Medina and Albion. In every way the work in "little Orleans" looks gratifying and encouraging in temperance reform.

In the evening the convention was addressed by Mrs. St. John, of Colorado, who held her large, closely packed audience an hour and a half, with the thermometer up in the nineties, each one feeling more than repaid for personal inconvenience and sacrifice. As a result of this meeting we are hoping great benefits to our local unions in increase of interest and membership.

MRS. H. J. PARTRIDGE, Cor. Sec.

TEMPERANCE DAY AT SALEM CAMP MEETING.

Our worthy presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Hiller, granted our W. C. T. U. one day, Aug. 29th, at Salem camp meeting, for temperance work. The day was unpleasant, the rain falling until about 2 p. m. But with cheerful hearts, steady purpose, and unwavering trust in God, we commenced our work. At 9 a. m. we had a devotional meeting, led by Miss Underhill of N. Y., which was a season of great spiritual power; at 10 a. m. a workers' conference, led by Mrs. E. L. Stephens. This was followed by a very fine address, delivered by Mrs. J. T. Rodman, of Hawley, on Scientific Temperance Instruction. Literature on this subject was distributed, and all went from the chapel feeling that it had been a pleasant and profitable meeting.

At 1:30 p. m. a children's meeting was held in the chapel, led by Mrs. S. A. Brown, of Ariel. Mrs. Brown gave a very interesting object-lesson, using a chain made of paper for the purpose. This was followed by some recitations and readings by children and young ladies, which were very telling, and brought hearty applause from the audience.

At this time we found the rain had ceased, and it was sufficiently dry to hold the remaining services in the auditorium. Having adjourned to the auditorium, we were greeted by a large and appreciative audience, who listened with intense interest for over an hour to an address by Miss Emilie E. Underhill, of New York. After her address she organized Wayne county, with the following officers: Mrs. E. L. Stephens, of Hawley, president; Mrs. W. H. Dimmock, of Honesdale, recording secretary; Mrs. Dr. Niles, of Waymart, treasurer.

In the evening Miss Underhill favored us with another of her eloquent addresses, holding this large audience for one hour and forty minutes, spell bound. The only complaint heard was, "Why did she stop so soon? I could have listened all night." As a public speaker Miss Underhill has but few equals.

The high tone of spirituality running through the entire day was remarked by a number of ministers.

Thus ended one of the most profitable days ever enjoyed by the temperance people of Wayne county. It has already resulted in a county union, four new local unions, and others waiting to be organized.

We were also enabled to push the work of circulating petitions for scientific temperance instruction throughout the county. Dear sisters, let us push the temperance work in every possible way. Earnest work will bring speedy victory. Let us work and pray, pray and work. Don't pray and then leave all the work for God. Remember He uses instrumentalities. May He use us. MRS. E. L. STEPHENS,

MICHIGAN.

GRATIOT COUNTY.

Our work is progressive, and as the county president I want to say we are hard at work, have organized six new unions during the past spring and summer. Last winter I wrote to Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, our state president, telling her that Gratiot county needed her, then I waited, and after a number of weeks she wrote me saying she would come. The second week in April she came. first to Ithaca, the county seat, then to other points, giving us five evenings in the county. I went with her, and gathered much for future use, and it did the unions much good. Then I wrote to Mrs. Benjamin, of Portland, Ionia county, and secured her for five places in the month of May.

At the state convention I met Mrs. Marian Baxter; she told me she was doing missionary work for two months during the summer, and she was engaged, and spoke in the county thirteen times. She did good talking, but does not stand as squarely on the Prohibition platform as we would wish. Mrs. E. T. Freeman, our district president, has visited the county twice by request, first at our county convention, held March 26, at St. Louis, and again August 19, at a county temperance meeting, held at Ithaca.

At this meeting we had Geo. R. Malone and A. O. Crozier. Both gave us grand prohibition talk. We also put out our St. John and Daniel flag and did a little convention work, electing delegates to state prohibition convention held at Lansing, Aug. 27. As W.C.T. unions, we feel that David Preston, the nominee for governor, is the right man in the right place, (by the way why not have a ballot box for the women this fall, I do not want to vote for Mrs. Lockwood, but I would like to know how many women would cast a ballot if they had the opportunity, and how many of them would vote a prohibition ticket; to say the least it would be a good schooling.)

Just now I am in communication with the local union to put a speaker in the county through October for prohibition. We have eleven unions and think each can do a little for the paying of a speaker, and plan for two or three meetings in rural districts near them; this we think will help our cause. Ithaca W. C. T. U. has just secured rooms; we expect to have a formal opening about the 20th. We held a prayer meeting Sabbath, September 14, in connection with the Prohibition club that was organized September 8. The club are to use the W. C. T. U. rooms as well as the Good Templars, and altogether we expect the cause of temperance to take long steps this fall. MRS. T. H. THEYER,
Pres. Gratiot Co. W. C. T. U.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THROUGH the efforts of the W. C. T. U. of Grand Rapids, Mich., no intoxicating liquors will be allowed on the grounds of the Northwestern Michigan fair, to convene next week.

THE new officers of the Charles City, Iowa, union for the coming year, are: President, Mrs. R. J. Huir; secretary, Mrs. S. E. Cobb; treasurer, Mrs. Sarah Bolton.

THE Plainfield (N. J.) Reform Club and their visitors, were given a collation by the W. C. T. U. on the occasion of the dedication of their new building. Three thousand persons were royally served, and $126.03 balance left from contributions in money received after paying expenses, was voted the club to assist in fitting up the basement of their new building.

ONE year's work has just closed with the W. C. T. U. of Wolcottville, Ind., and they are assured that they have not worked in vain. They have raised a Prohibition pole and, rooted out one saloon, thus convincing the citizens that they "meant business."

ATCHISON, Kansas, has recently had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. S. M. Perkins, of Ohio. Her address is spoken of in the highest terms. The Atchison Union is now in a prosperous condition. The ladies have been working very faithfully, are out of debt and are planning to do more and better work in the future.

THE W. C. T. U. of Marshfield, Ind., are rejoicing that at last their efforts have been crowned with success, and liquor, gambling, and all kindred evils have been banished forever from their county fair ground. They have rented the dining hall at the fair and are also to have a speaker during the fair.

THE W. C. T. U. of Wellsburg, West Virginia, were given an afternoon service at the Belleview camp meeting on Friday, August 29. The meeting was largely attended, being the first of the kind ever held in that section. The address was given by Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, of Ohio. The camp meeting association were so well pleased with the service as to promise the union an entire day next year.

THE W. C. T. U. of Atlanta, Ill., are enjoying a series of "Health Talks" from Dr. Dunn, a resident physician. They are given the second Friday in each month and are free to all who are willing to come and listen to them. The Dr. has already given four of these lessons with blackboard illustrations and practical experiments showing the action of different kinds of foods and drinks in the process of digestion, explaining in simple, and easily to be understood terms, the action of alcohol when taken into the human system.

OF the W. C. T. U. ladies of Macomb, Ill., who had in charge a lunch stand at the fair recently held there, the Prairie City Transcript says: "While the inner man was being renewed, we were treated to a pleasant chat with the ladies who were managing the lunch stand. We need not say that they proved to be intelligent and cultured, as well as enthusiasts in the magnificent moral enterprise for which they worked. Never you fear for the results of their labors—prohibition can but be successful pushed on as it is by an army of earnest Christian women led by the noblest of their sex. We began to speak about the fair, but perhaps it is not unfair to devote a paragraph to the fair ones who identify themselves with the great living issue of the age.

THE FLOWER MISSION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Our national superintendent of Flower Mission has been delaying this communication, hoping to gain strength sufficient to write you herself, but the peremptory order of her physician, as well as her own physical inability, deny her the pleasure, and devolve upon me the necessity of speaking for her. She says she has been so near the "valley of the shadow" this summer, that she thought her work here was ended perhaps, but the little spark of vitality is kindling again, and though reviving so slowly hope is inspired and we may have her yet many years to extend the beautiful mission over which she presides. She desires that the work shall not discontinue though the season for the flowers is at an end, for it is eminently a work of practical benevolence and not a mere sentiment, as some of the uninitiated insinuate occasionally. In the city mission here, which she originated, her plan is to have the workers assemble once a week at their headquarters and ascertain first what contributions have been sent; then make purchases of groceries, etc., if needed to supply any deficiencies. After arranging any flowers they may have for the sick and aged, and setting aside any delicacies they may have for the same, devotional exercises are held and then dividing into companies of two each, they go forth on their errands of love. This is a mere suggestion, not intended as a model.

Inasmuch as there have been so many reports of the work "Prison Day," and they are necessarily very much the same, there will be no more published; but every state superintendent is requested by Miss Casseday to send her annual report to me by the third week in September so that her report for the national convention may be prepared. It is quite necessary they should be sent as early as practicable. It was her intention to have had blanks furnished the superintendents for making out their reports but she was unable even to think of it, far less to direct their being prepared, so this year they will do as best they can without them.

TEMPERANCE Lesson Leaf for September 28th now ready. Subject: "The Story of Deborah." Price 50 cents per hundred, post paid.

THE National W. C. T. U. seal can be printed on stationery, programs, envelopes, etc., at this office. State reports, blanks, leaflets, and all kinds of printing carefully attended to. Estimates furnished.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD has written an article entitled "The National Prohibition Party, or St. John vs. the Demijohn," which ought to be widely circulated by all friends of the third party movement. In leaflet form price 50c. per hundred, post paid. Address this office.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land," should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

NEW PLEDGE CARD.—We have issued a new and very handsome pledge card, printed in two colors, price 60c. per hundred postpaid. Just the thing for W. C. T. U. workers to carry. In single and triple form. We also keep in stock Murphy pledge cards and ribbons, Band of Hope Badges, sample 10c. National Drink Chart, price 10c. Leaflets, etc., for distribution. Handsome lithographs of the Prohibition candidates, price 25c. each, the two for 40c. postpaid.

ON October 1 we shall have ready for issue our Band of Hope Manual and Text Book. It will contain twenty-four lessons, twelve for pupils of the grammar school grade, and twelve primary lessons. Besides these it will contain songs for the quarter, opening exercises, and notes and anecdotes illustrative of the lessons, in addition to full instructions for organizing Bands of Hope. The lessons have been submitted to and have passed the inspection of a committee of eminent physicians, which ensures their scientific accuracy.

The two grades of lessons have been prepared by Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. Mrs. Crafts is a primary teacher of national reputation, and these lessons are in her best style.

They will be issued quarterly, price 5c. per number. All Bands of Hope should be supplied with them.

AFTER DINNER.

Persons who suffer from Indigestion can arrest the progress of that painful malady by the use of an after-dinner pill, so composed that it will give tone to the stomach, prevent heartburn, rouse the liver to healthful action, invigorate the kidneys, and thus, through the activity of these organs, promote the natural movement of the stomach and bowels. AYER'S PILLS are so compounded that their action, though mild, effectually produces the above results. They also, in curing Constipation, remove the cause of Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Rheumatism, and many other serious ailments.

AYER'S PILLS

contain no mineral nor poisonous substance, and do not gripe unless the bowels are irritated, and even then their influence is healing. To continue their effect in constipated or chronic cases, they need only be taken in diminishing instead of increasing doses. For seamen, and inhabitants or travelers in sparsely settled countries where physicians are not at hand, they are of inestimable value. There is hardly a sickness they will not alleviate, and in most cases cure, if taken promptly. To young girls just entering upon womanhood, and to women whose period of maternity is drawing to a close, Ayer's Pills, in moderate doses, merely sufficient to ensure regular action of the bowels, will be found of

Signal Notes.

THE Wisconsin Prohibitionists met in state convention, September 4; New Hampshire, Sept. 10.

G. R. HADDEN, Lockport, N. Y.: Niagara county can be set down for 600 votes for St. John and Daniel.

THERE are forty voters in Boston, Allegheny county, Penn.; of these thirty-four are pledged to St. John and Daniel.

PRESIDENT Filmore signed the fugitive slave law because he thought he must stick to his party. His party died soon after.

EVEN in Keokuk the saloonist is convicted! John H. Wolf, after a three days' trial was found guilty of violating the prohibitory law. One of the convicting jurors was a German.

OLEAN, N. Y., has a St. John and Daniel club of 70 members, increasing daily. Four years ago one vote was cast for Neal Dow; this year there will be over 200 for St. John and Daniel.

J. B. GARDNER, Boston, Mass.: As to the Prohibitionists, their chief leader in the state, whose political predictions have seldom failed, told me the other day that St. John would poll 20,000 votes in Massachusetts.

IT is said that if the present "boom" continues until election day, the vote for St. John and Daniel in Bradford, the "wickedest town" in the Pennsylvania oil regions, will be equal to that cast for either Blaine or Cleveland.

THE New York Tribune, which is by no means a fanatical temperance paper, recently stated that "one in twenty of the inhabitants of this country are rendered idle and incapacitated for work through the liquor traffic; and these, if not idle, would, at ordinary wages, earn $200,000,000 annually."

IN all our missionary fields, distinct efforts are made in relation to temperance. Each people has its peculiar narcotic or stimulant to which it is addicted. A catechism for young children, recently issued in Harpoot, contains a temperance hymn, which compares favorably in respect to thought with our own Sunday school hymns.

HERKIMER (N. Y.) Democrat, August 13: Major C. B. Cotten, of Dun's Mercantile Agency, of New York, is spending a few weeks at his home in this village. The major seems to be in splendid condition morally, physically, religiously and financially. We regret to say, he has gone back on his Democratic record, and declares his intention of voting for John P. St. John and the Prohibition ticket generally.

THE Brooklyn Eagle publishes a brief note from Roscoe Conkling, addressed to W. R. Nichols, Esq., secretary of the "Plumed Knights" of Albany, declining to permit his name to be used as an honorary member of that organization, and adds editorially * * * "We are assured that on the 4th of November next he will deposit a ballot for the Hon John P. St. John.

THE Prohibitionists of Dubuque, under the guise of the Law and Order league, have inaugurated a new deal on the liquor interest, enjoining them to quit the business, by serving an original notice upon forty saloon keepers to appear in the district court, September 16, to defend an injunction restraining them from continuing the beer and liquor traffic. In case an extension is granted, the cases will be set for the January term of the district court. The saloon men are worked up over the summons, and have employed able counsel to defend their interest.

AS the semi-annual convention of the Mass. W. C. T. U., held in Holyoke, Mass., April 23d and 24th, 1884, the following resolution was passed unanimously:

Resolved, "That the Mass. W. C. T. U. endorse the Hygienic Physiology, by Joel Dorman Steele, Ph. D., published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, and edited by Mrs Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of scientific instruction of the national W. C. T. U., as a standard work on the action of alcoholic stimulants and narcotics, and recommend it to the school board of the state as a text book."

VOTERS will do well to remember 1st, That to choose the least of two evils when sin is involved in both, is to commit sin.

2nd. That the servant is not greater than his lord, and if we vote for the servant, we endorse the principles of his lord.

3rd. If we vote for the right, our vote is not thrown away. If we vote for the wrong, it is worse than thrown away.

4th. The paramount political evil of our country, is just the one we should oppose by our vote.

5th. The real issue in the coming election is protection to our homes, or to our saloons, which?

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

For maps, descriptive circulars and summer resort papers, or other information not obtainable at your local ticket office, write to the

Miscellaneous Selections.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

THE following, from the New York Tribune, shows high standard in the moral sentiment of one of the foremost political journals of the day: "The saloon is an institution which makes the poor poorer continually. If only half the annual expenditures of the wage-earning classes upon drink were saved, the elevation of those classes would proceed by leaps and bounds. The saloon, however, is ever lying in wait for the weak or the social wage earner. In this great city, on any of the main avenues, he cannot walk a block without passing a manufactory of misery. At every turn the purveyor of drink entices him, gets between him and his family, between him and his manhood, between him and his happiness. The pervading influence of rum pursues the slaves of appetite unceasingly, and makes their lives a constant struggle or a succession of disastrous falls. This subtle, prevalent influence is the bitterest curse that rests upon modern civilization, and it will destroy civilization if it is not itself destroyed. For the discontent, the anarchic tendencies, the seditious doctrines, the dangerous dispositions that are manifesting in centres of population, together with the vices of administration which alarm the thoughtful, and the difficulties in the way of reform which are due to the intractability of the material dealt with —all have their spring and origin in the habit of drinking, that potent drink influence, which baffles the enthusiasm of the reformer and laughs to scorn the appeals of religion, of reason, of self respect. This evil influence is degrading and brutalizing society, and progress will be slow and unsatisfactory until a public opinion is formed which refuses to palter with the abuse longer."

PARTIES are not made to order, like a wagon turned out at a shop. They grow, and can grow to national proportions only from great demands as wide as humanity. Prohibition is one of those demands. As an evil, pressing like an incubus on the country, alcoholism is the peer of slavery, if it does not rank it. As a financial and moral question, a question of public policy, it stands head and shoulders above every other before the people. That cowardly and time-serving politicians should ignore it, deceives nobody who is not willing to be deceived. The only cure for alcoholism is Prohibition. The Republican fiction that Prohibition can be attained by a license system, may be very plausible in theory, but it is not sustained by facts, and this the people are coming to know.

All which means that with many a throe of pain a new party is born, whose manly hands shall hold the sceptre.—Ex.

Over five thousand barrels of whisky have been shipped to Europe within the past three months for storage by Pittsburgh distillers, and it is expected that during the fall and winter enough more will follow to swell the aggregate to ten thousand barrels. The distillers are doing this to escape paying the tax which they will be compelled to pay soon, owing to the refusal of congress to extend the time of whisky in bond. The three-year limit is now expiring, and the time has come when the owners of the stocks must either get it out of the country or pay the revenue tax, which amounts to about $3,600 per 100 barrels.

IT is stated that France is compelled to import wines for home consumption, but that makes no difference in the exports of wine from France to the United States, and the inference is that if France should cease to export wine entirely, French brands of the sparkling beverage would be quite as plentiful as when the product was at its height. It is the bottle and the label which make the French wines nowadays.—Christian at Work.

—BY—

J DORMAN STEELE, PH. D.

EDITED AND ENDORSED by the W. C. T. U. under direction of Mrs. MARY H. HUNT.

This work contains all the excellent and popular features that have given D. Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Physiology so wide a circulation; with carefully-prepared sections upon the Physiological Action of Alcohol, Tobacco, Opium, etc. These are scattered through the book as each organ is treated. This subject is examined from a purely scientific standpoint, and represents the latest teachings at home and abroad. While there is no attempt to incorporate a temperance lecture in a school book, yet the terrible effects of these "Stimulants and Narcotics," especially upon the young, are set forth all the more impressively, since the lesson is taught merely by the presentation of facts that lean toward no one's prejudices, and admit of no answer or escape. In this edition unusual space is given to the subject of Ventilation, which is now attracting so much attention throughout the country. 300 pages, 12mo., half bound, illustrated. Specimen Copy, postage prepaid, $1.00.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 37. CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 25, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in St. Louis, October 22, 23. 24, and 25. Preparatory to this meeting, and in accordance with the usual custom, Tuesday, the 7th of October, will be observed as a day of prayer, that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon the convention and attend all its deliberations.

THE subscriber in possession of a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL of April 26, 1883, who will kindly send us the same, will receive the thanks of the editor.

"THE practice of social drinking brings a cheerful temper into society," say the Swiss councillors. Temper, not so cheerful also, as is attested by the murder of young Clay.

BANGOR, the wickedest city in Maine, from a temperance point of view, gave the amendment more of a majority by 100 votes than the majority of the Republican ticket in the same locality.

JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE says: "No historic event is so important as the advent of a conviction of a new truth. These convictions of the human soul build up institutions, change the course of events and alter the tendencies of human affairs."

THE Sunday murders that fill the papers of a Monday morning are as reliable as the sun. This week, among many other victims, is a youth of noble name, Harry Clay, a young Kentuckian, shot by a saloon keeper of Louisville. He was a grandson of the great Henry Clay, but he is "my poor boy" to a heart-broken mother.

THE Champion, the liquor dealers' organ of the northwest, places in double columns the letter of Neal Dow pledging the vote of James G. Blaine to the constitutional amendment, side by side with the speech of James G. Blaine on election day, in which he states why he would not as a presidential nominee deposit his ballot upon a state, or "local issue."

IN connection with Mrs. Livermore's letter on 4th page, we think it well to refer to the action of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. convention last fall, of which she was chairman by virtue of her office as president of the state society, and which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Prohibition party stands for right principles as no other party does; we therefore endorse its position and bid it God speed.

THE Maine W. C. T. U. convention at Gardiner, endorsed the Detroit resolution concerning "that party by whatever name called, which shall give us the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect our homes." Kentucky is said to have done the same, and Vermont in its annual meeting last week, took up the strain and sang it clear through to the end.

MRS. B. PEARSON, of Nottingham, England, vice president of British Woman's Temperance League said in an address at Round Lake, Saratoga county, N. Y., July 5, "Though millions flow in" (as revenue from license), "yet they flow out to remedy the evil wrought. When I was a little girl my mother told me that "a sixpence saved is a sixpence earned." Here is a lesson in political economy that some of our high license men would do well to consider, and put in practice. The same speaker says, also, what all must admit as truth, "God's blessing can never rest upon any revenue received from the work of the devil."

THE Independent as a Christian journal advises the people to organize, work and vote for Governor St. John, in case the Republican party shall neglect or refuse to withdraw the name of James G. Blaine. It also expresses strong hope that the faithful pushing of Gen. Butler's candidacy may secure the defeat of Grover Cleveland. Of our candidate this paper says: "Governor St. John is a sound, intelligent, conscientious, patriotic citizen. He is a man who can be trusted, and is the kind of timber now specially wanted in a national ruler. He would fearlessly administer the laws in New York, California, or Utah, and would be a terror to evil doers everywhere. Such a man very likely might not suit the wire pullers and secret managers of any party, but he would surely 'turn the rascals out' of office, and try to put good men in their places."

THE "fruit of the vine" in Palestine is not always the harmful drink which so often fills the sacramental cup of today. The Rev. Chalil Jamal, a native missionary in Salt, a city supposed to be one of the three cities of refuge east of the Jordan, writes to an English missionary periodical that in that locality there are upwards of 2,500 vineyards, and yet intoxicating wine is not known to the natives. The grapes that are not consumed fresh are either made into raisins or pressed, and the juice made into dibs, (a kind of honey) and milban, (a kind of sweetmeat), which are stored up for winter use. They are used also to make the madcoca of raisins, which is composed of crushed and mashed raisins made into a good sized lump, which also is stored against the winter. Salt is famous for its grapes, which are very fine indeed, and their deliciousness and beauty are known only to those who have seen and tasted them.

THE opposition to prohibition springs often from a sense of its invasion of certain personal, inalienable rights. In all cases, the thought of personal right eclipses the equally self-evident society right. If every man, woman, and child is endowed by the Creator with certain liberties that no person or government may abridge, so is society endowed by the conditions of its existence with as certain, inalienable rights as is the individual, and the right of society, not even the rights of the individuals may contravene. As says James G. Blaine, "The rights of the individual ceases when the rights of society begin." The right of society to protect itself covers, we believe, the duty to prohibit that which takes away all power of self protection on the part of the individual; that which destroys the citizen; that which wastes the resources of society; that which murders the innocent. The right of the individual to drink, ceases where the rights of his family, his neighbors, and his country begin.

AT the recent meeting of the British Medical Association in Belfast, considerable time and consideration were given to the topic, "Alcholism in Childhood and Youth." Dr. More Madden, of St. Joseph's hospital for children in Dublin, stated that several cases of juvenile alcoholism had come under his care, one of which was that of a child eight years old admitted for delirium tremens, he having been tippling for nearly two years previously. Another boy about the same age was also brought in for alcoholism at the same time. In other instances children were admitted for disease or accident resulting either directly or indirectly from their parents' alcoholism, and themselves exhibiting unmistakable evidence of its inherited influence. In the great majority of these and the many other similar cases which the speaker had met with in his long experience in connection with the children's hospital, the tendency to alcoholism seemed to be of hereditary origin, and was most marked in children whose mothers were inebriates. He said further that the period of childhood had of late years become so abridged by the necessity of entering on the struggle of existence before the moral, mental or physical powers were sufficiently developed, that a premature breakdown in any of these was no longer exceptional.

ST. JOHN.*

MRS. GEORGE PORTER.

Breaking across the mountain tops,
I see the glimmer of the dawn;
Brave leader of the new crusade,
Our loyal-hearted, true St. John,
To victory lead on.

From out the furnace of defeat,
Thy courage shines as pure as gold;
All dross of self refined away,
True hearts with thee enrolled,
To victory march on.

"For God, for home and native land";
Like lilies shining on thy shield,
Those mottoes blaze; the lance of truth
Thy trusty fingers still shall wield,
To victory march on.

Hands that have placed sweet flowers,
Alike above the blue and gray,
Hands far too weak to bear a sword,
Souls that are strong in faith to pray,
To victory point on.

Through the dense wilderness of wrong,
How broad and fair the path of right;
And woman's prayers shall compass thee,
Like angels in the thickest fight,
Her faith shall lead thee on.

The banners of the Lord of Hosts,
Are waving in the sunlit air;
The billows of a grand reform
Are sweeping forward everywhere,
Our cause is marching on.

God's bow of promise spans the clouds,
Bright symbol of a day most fair;
Rise, champion of the people's wrongs,
Rise up to do, rise up to dare.
Lead on, true heart, lead on.

MAINE VINDICATA.

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

I borrow the text of Bishop Hurst's article on Iowa in the New York Independent of March 20, for this reason. Again and again it has been affirmed in the west by the opponents of temperance that Maine was tired of her prohibitory law and would gladly be rid of the same.

But Maine has spoken and by the verdict of at least between forty and fifty thousand majority of her people has silenced forever these lying tongues, and proved her own vindicator. After thirty years trial she certainly has a right to speak and ought to be heard from ocean to ocean, as she will be.

Laus Deo is on my lips and in my heart as after the blessed victory at Louisville. And the one occasion calls for such praise as truly as the other. This was God's battle and the song of Deborah is ours once more. "They fought from heaven; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera."

The Portland Daily Press of September 9 gave the following:

The Amendment Carried.—The advocates of the constitutional amendment were in jubilant spirits last evening over the the result of the vote. It was stated at the temperance headquarters that 200 towns polled 74,500 ballots marked "yes" and 20,595 marked "no," making a majority of 53,906.

Returns from the smaller places are not in and of course there can be no certain figures except that we are sure at least of between forty and fifty thousand majority.

I wish all our weary workers could have been at the state headquarters in Portland, Monday evening, as the returns came in. Song after song echoed through the rooms from Rev. H. C. Munson's "Gospel and Maine Law Temperance Hymn Book," prepared for the campaign. When the telegraph flashed the good news that Bangor gave three for the amendment to one against it, we rose and sung "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Portland gave five hundred majority. Deering, including the suburbs of Stroudwater, the home of Mrs. Stevens, and Woodfords, my own summer home, gave nearly five for to one against. Aroostook county gave a unanimous "Yes" on the amendment, and those who know the good work of its W. C. T. U. are not surprised. Indeed it is generally conceded that the efforts of the W. C. T. U. throughout the state, both preceeding the day of voting and on that occasion, in the meetings of prayer and at the polls, were most powerful agencies in this glorious issue. Many feared Portland would go against the amendment, as money and whisky for free distribution were sent in large quantities to buy votes, but the white tent of the W. C. T. U. and the persuasion of the women elsewhere was a banner of protection to the home for which the contest was being urged. The daily paper spoke of their efforts after this fashion:

At the polls there was little or no excitement to take the attention from the voting except the unusual sight of ladies distributing the ballots on the constitutional amendment. In front of Ward 4 wardroom a neat tent had been erected, and inside were placed large blocks of ice, hollowed out, from whence draughts of ice water were distributed to the thirsty. Beautiful boutonnieres were also placed on the gentlemen's coats by the ladies in attendance and "Yes" ballots placed in their hands. The tent was prettily draped with flags, and bore placards in aid of the object.

Dear sisters at the west, if you could know what a cross it was to the conservative women of the east to make this "new departure," and how in some places they shrunk from it till it became a matter between their own conscience and God, and then remember that all over the state they did "go to the polls," not "near by" but into the very midst of the fray, you will give them large and generous praise. And it was found by them, as it always is, that womanly women are respected by the rudest class. The story of Iowa and Ohio was lived over again. Above all and inspiring all were the meetings of prayer, where the appeal for suffering humanity was taken from the court of earth to the court of heaven. As I left the women of Winthrop, where I spoke Sunday, after an hour with them Monday morning in their blessed meeting from 9 o'clock to 12 and in the afternoon came into the all day meeting at Portland and caught its kindred glow of spiritual fervor, I felt the leader's words presaging certain victory were already fulfilled, and Iowa's motto came swiftly to mind, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of the state W. C. T. U. of Maine, and her part in this victory we can truly say in the dear old Scripture words: "Give her of the fruit of her hands and let her own words praise her in the gates." This result, which shall bless our entire land, was not born of a day—but is the white blossom of years of hard, patient, heroic sowing and waiting and watching. Added the faithful toil of the men and women of the state in the generous volunteer service of Miss Willard, Mrs. Woodbridge, Stevens, of California, Pearson of England, Washington of New Jersey, and others. I never heard Miss Willard speak more grandly than in City Hall, Portland, to an immense audience who came to hear her despite the dreary evening and went home I am sure, from the expressions I heard, repaid a thousand fold for the coming.

Rev. H. C. Munson, secretary of the state campaign committee, and his lovely wife have been most faithful and efficient in their work and the speakers under their auspices have done great service for the cause. The W. C. T. U. shared the expense of headquarters in Portland with them and from this has gone out the magnetic and compelling power of organized efforts. It is quite impossible for those unfamiliar with the peculiar environment of this question in Maine to rightly estimate the magnitude of the victory. Many were opposed to the constitutional amendment, declaring that "the prohibitory law was good enough," and more failed to realize that the result would be taken as the verdict of Maine, not simply upon the constitutional amendment but upon her prohibitory law as such. This was the very class that could not be reached by public meetings or the printed page. A still larger class were lulled into inactivity because there was no open opposition on the part of the non-temperance element, and there was therefore, "nothing to fear." One of the most gifted pastors of Portland, and an earnest temperance worker said to me last year, "If the amendment is defeated it will be because of indifference and lack of information concerning the question at issue." There was no leading secular paper like the Iowa State Register pouring its hot shell of facts and arguments into the enemy's ranks. There was no leading religious paper like the Northwestern Christian Advocate of Chicago, stirring the conscience and faith by its thrilling appeals.

But the victory is won and by an unprecedented majority so far as any former state amendment in Maine is concerned. To the ministers who aided so nobly in this work, to the Sunday school children who distributed "Yes" ballots and added their sweet persuasions, to Dr. McDonald, who gave the much needed $500, and to the many all over the land who prayed, "God speed the right," manifold thanks are due.

It is another great moral victory and will hasten the day, whose dawning already flushes the sky, when we shall rejoice in a national prohibitory law, and an education sufficient to secure its enforcement.

Woodfords, Me., September, 1884.

OUR DUTY.—A WORD ON THE COMING ELECTION.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

When election day comes this autumn there will probably be hundreds and thousands of voters, north, south, east and west, who will want to vote the Prohibition ticket, but who will find themselves unable to do so for want of ballots. It is very likely that in some of the states there will be no Prohibition electoral ticket nominated, and in such states it will be absolutely impossible to vote for St. John. In other states a Prohibition ticket may be nominated, but there may be no systematic arrangement made for putting the ballots within easy reach of the voters on election day, and so voters who wish to vote for St. John, being unable to get any ballot, will be driven to vote for their second choice, Blaine, Cleveland or Butler, as the case may be.

Any effort to call out the temperance vote on any occasion, national, state or municipal, is entirely idle, unless systematic arrangements are made for supplying the ballots at every voting place on the day of election, and all day.

There are in the city of Philadelphia, for instance, about 700 voting places. In the whole United States there are probably about 100,000. At each voting place throughout the country there will be stationed a man with a Blaine placard on his breast, and a full supply of Blaine tickets, which he will be ready and anxious to force upon every voter willing to take one and vote it. There will also be a Cleveland man similarly equipped. There should also be a St. John man, or woman, but there will not.

There are many voters in both the old parties, who are anxious to be connected with a pure party, and who will gladly vote the St. John ticket if they have a chance. And the large vote some states may roll up for him will be evidence, not so much of the greater temperance sentiment therein, as compared with other states, but of the systematic and thorough arrangements adopted for having a full supply of ballots on hand at every voting place all day. It seems as though a rather remarkable and unlooked for set of circumstances had made the coming election an unusually propitious time for securing a very large temperance vote. But it will avail nothing if the voters cannot get the ballots on election day.

If the south could only be thoroughly organized so that at each voting place there should be an assured supply of St. John ballots, a very large southern vote might be cast for temperance. Entirely apart from all other considerations, it would be an unmixed good if the temperance vote in the south should be the means of enabling us to say good-bye forever to the old Mason and Dixon line in politics. It seems indeed as though, in the providence of God, the time had come for the breaking up of the old, and the formation of new parties, and it behooves the temperance people to make sure of being well up to the front.

A few practical suggestions may be helpful.

The constitution of the United States provides for the election of president as follows: "Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state may be entitled in the congress; but no senator or representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector."

In printing the ballots the utmost care is required to have the name of every elector correctly spelt, as a single mistake vitiates the vote. Great care must be taken of the ballots up to the hour of opening the polls on election morning, and throughout the day. If there is any neglect in guarding them, they may fall into the hands of designing parties, who may destroy them when it is too late to procure a fresh supply, and thus there could be no temperance vote cast in such localities.

If people are hired to stand at the polls and offer the St. John ballots to the voters, they must be carefully selected as being entirely reliable, since vigorous efforts will doubtless be made to buy them off. In many places it will be wise to have relays of men or women to supply the place, in order that the labor of standing all day and offering the ballots to voters may not fall too heavily upon any one individual. Whoever assumes the duty should have the following placard displayed conspicuously: "Prohibition ticket for St. John and Daniel. Ballots given here."

For full information concerning the St. John and Daniel movement, address the corresponding secretary of the Prohibition executive committee, A. J. Jutkins, 87 Washington street, Chicago, Illinois.

We commend this subject to the prayerful consideration of every Christian man and woman whose sympathies are with the Prohibition party; and would especially urge members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to do all they can for this party, which embodies so many of their highest ideals, and which is foremost in the battle "For God, and Home, and Native Land."

Of course it will be understood that no criticism of those who endorse either of the other parties is here implied.

Copies of this circular and of the St. John placard can be had free by application to Hannah Whitall Smith, 4653 Main St., Germantown, Pa.

"COME, LET US LIVE FOR OUR CHILDREN."

MRS. P. R. STOWELL.

I have been reading Miss Burnett's talk on "Juvenile Work in the Sunday School" and am moved to say a few words upon a pet project of mine in regard to our day schools. I have long thought about the ignorance of our school children. Even after years of schooling they have but little knowledge of the world of literature outside of text books, and we all know that our reading goes more to build character than instruction from teachers who confine themselves to the three "R's." There is really a deep felt need on the part of adults for a higher instruction than schools and colleges can give under the present system. And Dr. Vincent is truly a benefactor, in that he stimulates our youth to a greater desire for knowledge by devising the reading union. I have just received the first issue of the Chautauqua Young Folk's Journal, and the thought occurred to me that it could be made available in our public schools as a means of inducting the scholars into that vast realm peopled by poets, scientists and historians. The course for the ensuing year is all one could wish. Just read the promised treat. Rose G. Kingsley writes charmingly about "The Children of Westminster Abbey." What an insight into English history these twelve illustrated papers will give; a teacher using them would have no difficulty in interesting her class, and pupils would not complain that "history is so dull."

What more fascinating recreation than reading Mrs. Fremont's "Souvenirs of my Time"? I was charmed with an article of hers that appeared in Wide Awake last year and only wished I could read more from her pen. Then all temperance workers will be interested in "The Temperance Teachings of Science," twelve articles by able authors. The first number contains an introduction by Mrs. Livermore and bears the suggestive title, "The Need of Knowing theFacts." This would be our opportunity to open the door for instruction on the vital issue of the day, and if this were supplemented by the charts showing the effect of alcohol upon the system our children would be as ably instructed on this subject as the most earnest advocate could desire.

Edward Everett Hale writes of "Boys' Heroes," the first paper telling of Hector, with extracts from the "Iliad," and an illustration of Thorwaldsen's Bas-Relief Hector and Andromache. I think many a boy would be eager to know more of that grand old story after enjoying this short sketch.

"Ways to do Things," treats of practical handiwork for young folks. This department will be of great interest to each and every scholar, while "The Entertainments in Chemistry" will entertain the curious youth and arouse a desire for a better understanding of a science that should be taught in every grade of school-life.

Art is not neglected in this feast of good things. Mrs. Sarah W. Whitman contributed twelve papers treating of the artist's ways and means and the various mediums of pictorial expression.

"Days and Nights in the Tropics," by Felix Oswald, is a series of papers giving one glimpses of a wonderland. The "Search Questions in American Literature," conducted by Oscar Fay Adams, will stimulate all readers to know more of our eminent writers. A unique feature in the journal is the "Ethnological Bureau," for the answer of questions about foreign people and countries. This is in the charge of Mr. Yan Phon Lee, of China, now of Yale college.

This journal in the high school and grammar department would enliven the routine of study and could be effectively used in the preparation of essays, a task arduous and uninteresting because the pupils have nothing but their imagination to draw upon; while the range of subjects is such as to suit all minds. We must be educators of the children, broadening their views, enlarging their ideas and stimulating them to study and investigation aside from the curriculum of text-books in the school room, else we fail in forming independent, cultured men and women. We have different lines of work for the training of the young, as the Sunday school and the various temperance organizations, but in these we fail to reach a large class that might be helped in the daily school-life, since there the instruction is more frequent. "Line upon line, precept upon precept," five days in the week would accomplish more for intellectual and ethical culture than the weekly meetings where one especial subject is taught. While we are waiting for school suffrage we can be laying a broad foundation upon which to rear the beautiful superstructure of a liberal education.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe says: "By taking an active interest in the condition of our schools, we can add to the moral and intellectual wealth of the community." Let every woman of the W. C. T. U. consider this opportunity of good her especial work, and every local union take action upon the introduction of supplementary reading in the schools. Gain the sympathy and co-operation of the teachers, canvass the town and interview the families; then apply to the directors to carry out the wishes of the patrons of the schools. It is our religious duty and the most imperative duty, second to none other, that we provide for our children.

Miss Abby W. May, in an address at a school suffrage meeting said: "The schools are the source not only of the intellectual but also of the moral training of our children." Here is a field where all can work; every mother will be a volunteer in the service of her children, and will give her mite or lend her aid to make the school perfect in its appointments and environments. We too often neglect the immediate and constant opportunities of doing good; the mental vision accustomed to telescopic objects sees not the microscopic; adoring the sunflower we tread on the violet. We have in our unions committees on foreign work, committees on flower missions to penitentiaries, committees on this and that, but where are committees on schools? Who visits little ones shut up within cheerless walls during the fairest hours of the day? who gives prizes to faithful scholars? who encourages teachers and aids in lightening the work of instruction? what band of women works at entertainments to procure books, maps and charts wherewith to furnish school-rooms? Our teachers have commenced their work, let us begin ours and fall not behind them in our enthusiasm.

A PASTOR'S OPINION OF THE W. C. T. U.

[At the recent Hartford convention, Rev. Graham Taylor, a prominent Congregational pastor, made the following introductory address. The animus of our work seemed so clearly comprehended by him and was so felicitously expressed that I begged his speech for publication. F. E. W.]

There is one place in the world of our vision that God has reserved for Himself. Wherever the lifeless becomes the living there God is, and is ever to be found.

Men may come very close to the Life-giver's place as observers or the agents of His power, but they cannot occupy it, they cannot give life. Wherever that perpetual miracle is observed the same phenomena are to be seen.

Whether star eyed science watches the origin of the forms of physical or social life, it sees first the drawing of the constituent elements to the life center, then the formation of the organization or body about the vital germ, and last the impulse from within which makes the whole a thing of life and motion. So moral sentiments and spiritual principles are embodied.

Ideas and feelings exist apart in individuals and are grouped and formulated in societies, and their tenets, but to become one organism of life and power God must breath upon them. For God is the only master of assemblies.

Now every observer of our social life has seen the drawing together of the temperance sentiments which have long, if not always, existed somewhere among the people. Organizations and organized efforts have also constantly and vastly multiplied. But if I do not greatly misjudge the facts, we stand here in this Woman's Christian Temperance Union nearer the point of attraction, nearer the source of divine power than is any other standpoint within this whole reform. Here as nowhere else that I know of is the temperance sentiment a living thing, which lives, and moves and has a being always and everywhere.

Where else are all the social, industrial, economic, scientific, legal, political, educational, moral and religious elements of this reform so combined and unified, made to live and constantly brought to bear every where and upon every one?

Not one of your unions exists any where, however small in numbers or humble in membership, or lonely in its work, that has not a far greater influence than it is aware of or than the community recognizes.

The fact of its being, and praying and waiting and working is felt in the pastor's study and pulpit, in the editorial room, in the court of justice in the legislative hall, in the school house, the home and the church.

Nowhere can the awful facts of the liquor curse and the personal responsibilities and obligations it imposes upon all be entirely unfelt, or easily disregarded, or readily set aside where such a band of Christian women are praying and singing, gently pleading and patiently, effectively working. They are to be congratulated therefore in being chosen by God to be the generators of this His quickening power.

If hidden away from public notice, they are hidden as the heart is in the body, to be the vital center of all the members, binding each to the others as it holds all to it; and supplying to every part, from head to foot, what it must have to live and do its work. However great may be the direct and visible results of your efficient efforts, I venture to suggest that the indirect and uncredited effects of your influence upon and through others are still greater, and that to wield this influence and produce these effects may be the highest calling and the best work of your union.

Standing as you do, within the church of Christ, and so near to God Himself, and so highly honored and mightily used by Him in this His holy cause, every one who loves our Lord, and the lives He died to save, bids you welcome and Godspeed.

"GIVE US ST. JOHN BALLOTS."

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The "vest pocket vote" will tell in the campaign of St. John and Daniel, as no other vote ever told before.

If the national committee of the Prohibition party will see that electors are chosen in each state and territory, and will print tickets suited to each, the W. C. T. U., Good Templars and others will help to send them by mail, or house to house visitation, to tens of thousands who would not otherwise receive them. These votes could be quietly cast, in many cases, by men who might not care to say just how they voted. Let the executive committee with Brother John B. Finch at its head, look well to this and get some of our wealthy men to invest a sum of money in the printing of millions of ballots which may be sent in good season to every part of the United States where a temperance society or a faithful individual worker can be found. There is an immense possibility in this suggestion, simple as it may appear. To what an amount of temperance argumentation this canvass gives occasion! The people love issues incarnated in men. Nothing rouses them like that. It is the charm of the concrete over the abstract. The war of words is waging at this hour at the point of a million tongues. In shop and street, in field and home they still wag on. A good white ribbon woman said to me the other day, "It fairly tires my husband out, the amount of talking he does to convince our minister that he ought to vote for the only clean candidate in the field. They begin the argument over again every time they meet, and I can see plainly that our pastor is under conviction." Let the war go on!

MISSOURI REPLIES TO MRS. FOSTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have read with interest and no little amazement the letter you published (Sept. 11), from Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, superintendent of legislative work and petitions in the N. W. C. T. U.

So utterly illogical and inconsistent is the whole article I should unhesitatingly deny her authorship of the same, but for the signature of her name.

She says: "I believe our National organization should maintain a non-partisan attitude toward the political questions of the day." If the National should maintain this attitude, then logically the states must maintain it too, because they constitute the National union. Every intelligent woman in the W. C. T. U. knows that such an attitude is not now, and never has been in accordance with the purpose and principle of our organization. The women of our white ribbon host know well that votes have influence; and always and everywhere have they allied themselves to that party promising their homes and their children protection from the liquor traffic. They have done this in state, and county, and municipal elections. Sometimes the party to which they gave their aid and influence was Democratic, sometimes Republican, sometimes Independent.

Mrs. Foster seems to forget that in the interest of a third party candidate for governor of the state of Iowa she spoke in every county and principal town of the state.

By the action of this third party party the Iowa Republicans were compelled to promise a submission of the question to the people.

Then what attitude did the W. C. T. U. of Iowa including our able superintendent of legislative work, assume?

Every agency that could be devised by Iowa's most cultured and most Christian women was brought to bear. And wherefore? To elect the party that promised prohibition. Was this non-partisan?

In a letter to Rev. E. K. Young, (Aug. 27) Mrs. Foster declares that "having been chosen by the National union, superintendent of the department of legislative work and petitions I must keep myself free from partisanship." Yet before she closes the paragraph she gives the strongest possible endorsement to the presidential candidate who dared not vote for prohibition in his own state. Here the special pleader crops out and the true client—the Republican party is revealed.

She "deplores the attempt on the part of some of our ladies to ally our National union with the National prohibition party and says, "that the resolution passed at our National convention last November was never intended to thus commit us," "that the convention would have laid the resolution on the table if it had supposed any such construction would be put upon it." This resolution, the reader will find at the head of the editorial page of THE UNION SIGNAL. It was passed by a full convention of representatives from states and territories—passed without a dissenting vote after a second careful reading of the resolution.

Mrs. Foster says: "It was an expression of our purpose to give individual personal influence in favor of political action embodying the principle of prohibition, so dear to all our hearts."

Did Mrs. Foster require any action of the National convention to express or strengthen her "individual personal influence" in any direction she pleased to exert it? As a member of that convention I protest against this interpretation of the spirit and intent of this resolution. No woman in that convention needed any resolution passed concerning her "individual personal influence."

In the letter addressed to Rev. E. K. Young, Mrs. Foster says: "I believe the larger part of our membership, and our best advisers deplore what they consider an unwarranted and untenable position." Mrs. Foster and her "advisers may deplore" but I must believe her statement to be "unwarranted and untenable" with regard to the greater part of our membership. Missouri is largely Democratic, and intensely conservative—sensitive in localities over the woman suffrage question, yet I do not hesitate to say that the women of her W. C. T. U. with few exceptions, do favor the National Prohibition party, and the endorsement of it, by our society.

Mrs. Foster surely knows that from the very first inception of our work, the largest liberty has been accorded to the individual, the union, and the state. Manifestoes have always been advisory—never mandatory.

Neither has any state been regarded disloyal in letter or spirit because failing to adopt plans proposed by the National union. Then why this mournful foreboding concerning the "coercion of love as against the conviction of conscience." This implied condition of things, "disastrous within its operations as 'boss rule' in politics."

Mrs. Foster is, with every other woman of our society, entitled to her views and the fullest expression of the same; she, with every other woman, is at liberty to choose her own course of action, though that course is sometimes mysteriously changed. At Clear Lake, Iowa, in July last, Mrs. Foster assured the writer that were she in any other state save Iowa, she would advocate the National Prohibition party; that she did not wonder that states like Illinois, Ohio, New York, should have become disgusted with the Republican party.

But I cannot consent that she shall speak for me, and for the thousands of women all over our land who daily offer earnest prayer to God for the success of the Prohibition party. Nor can I remain silent while the action of our national union is misconstrued.

Again, if congress is powerless in the matter of prohibition, what child's play is it for our National union to petition congress in the matter. Yet Mrs. Foster says, "I approved these measures as a means of education and agitation; only that and nothing more. This is all a disfranchised class, as women are, can do. Methods which are permissible, or even advisable in a great popular, moral movement, may be futile or positively injurious in the field of party politics."

The methods that Mrs. Foster approves, "education and agitation" have only been transferred from congress to the people, and why a "disfranchised class" may not "educate and agitate" among the people as properly as among legislators is hard to see. The watchword of the W. C. T. U. has always been "Prohibition;" and while the movement may no longer be "popular" in certain circles, and for certain reasons, it has lost not a whit of its morality, although its methods may be "positively injurious" to some party in the field of politics.

We are warned against the "sin of presumption." Wherein have we presumed sinfully? We have not forgotten that we are still disfranchised. We have no intention of making an attack upon the ballot box on election day. We have not "run before we were sent." First, we were called, invited, urged to attend the Pittsburgh convention. Second, we were "sent" by our constituents, the women of the W. C. T. U.

CLARA HOFFMAN, Pres: W. C. T. U. of Mo.

WAYS THAT ARE DARK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL: I copy below a campaign document which was effectively issued in the recent state election in Oregon. I was told by a prominent citizen of that state after the election was over, that the supreme judge, and every district judge in the state were elected at the dictation of the Liquor Dealer's Union of Oregon. The words "strictly confidential," were printed in large capitals:

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

PORTLAND, OREGON, May 24, 1884.

The Liquor Dealer's Union of Oregon, by a unanimous vote hereby invites your co-operation, and through you all your friends in your vicinity, engaged or interested in the liquor business, toward securing the election of W. W. Thayer, and the defeat of L. Flynn, for the position of judge of the supreme court of Oregon, for the reasons: First, because of Mr. Flynn's well known prejudice against the liquor traffic; secondly, he is a strict prohibitionist, and as such his prejudices must necessarily affect his judicial opinions on the bench should questions involving the liquor interest come before him.

You are also asked to exercise your best indeavors to defeat nominees for legislature in your county who are prohibitionists, irrespective of party.

It is only by a timely exercise of our power that we can prevent our enemies from absolutely destroying our business by which we honestly support our families, and which is taxed more heavily and unjustly than any other business in the Union. Yours truly,

HENRY FLEKENSTEIN, JOHN BERRY, BEN. L. NORDEN, } Corresponding Committee Liquor Dealer's Union of Oregon.

It is hoped that every member of the W. C. T. U. who intends to support by her influence the Republican party or the Democratic party in the coming national struggle will note that liquor men are voting for their candidates, "irrespective of party." Is it not quite time that Prohibitionists vote for the only man before the people as candidate, who believes in prohibition, John P. St. John?

I have just received a most interesting letter from Miss Carrie M. White, of Fidalgo, Skagit county, West Washington territory. Miss White was elected to the position of organizer in that jurisdiction, at the annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of West Washington territory last June. I quote from Miss White's letter as follows:

It seems the liquor element is angered and frightened by the way the women of the territory have used their influence and ballot as voters, and they propose to elect to the next legislature such men as will repeal the suffrage bill. Hobelling & Co., a wealthy and influential wholesale liquor firm of San Francisco, have supplied the larger part of the saloons on Puget Sound, as well as in other parts of the territory, and they agree to furnish money by such men as will strengthen the opposition to the suffrage bill. They have agents and runners all through the country, and are working very, very quietly.

Then Miss White recounts the wise and prompt steps taken by her and Mrs. Price, of Seattle, to put the W. C. T. U.'s on their guard, and set them to work to save the bill.

At the Republican primary at La Conner, about twenty ladies were in attendance. I think some of them will attend the Skagit county convention. I hope they will at least, for I am delegate to that convention from our precinct, and am the only woman among the county delegates. I shall attend, and I shall try to do my duty as a voter.

MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT.

MRS. LIVERMORE'S POSITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—I am in a worse plight than Mrs. Foster. She is in receipt of many inquiries concerning "pending political questions" only. I am burdened with letters of inquiry concerning myself, and, "my (supposed) apostasies." For THE UNION SIGNAL'S paragraph concerning what it was pleased to call my "political manifesto" has brought down on me a little avalanche of letters. "Have you abandoned the temperance cause?" I am asked. "What was your manifesto?" "Send me a copy of what you wrote!" And a jolly friend and old-time neighbor of Chicago, writes, "What on earth have you been doing, in the immaturity and verdancy of your sixty summers, that compels THE UNION SIGNAL to sit down on you with all its might?"

I shall never find time to reply individually to the inquiries heaping my table, chiefly from the west, and so solicit the courtesy of making answer, once for all, through THE UNION SIGNAL.

I am sorry to read in a late number of our official paper that "there is not much suavity about duty," but that it is "blunt and brusque." For the same authority that commands us "to do with all our might, what our hand findeth to do," bids us "be courteous." It is not impossible to obey the two commands at the same time. Workers for a common cause should be slow to accuse each other of moral obliquity, when they are unable to agree on methods of work. For people may differ as to methods, and be unable to pronounce the "shibboleth," of the same organization, and yet neither party be wrong.

So much of my "Word to Women," as criticised the National Prohibitory party for not placing woman suffrage in its platform, on the same broad footing as Prohibition, I here retract. For seven letters lie before me from long-time members of the old Prohibitory party, all affirming that their organization has always advocated full suffrage for woman, on the broadest ground, until this year, when they were compelled to take a narrower position, by the temperance women who joined their ranks. One gentleman writes me as follows:

I was a member of the Pittsburgh Prohibitory convention, and personally objected to the clause of the woman suffrage resolution which relegates the settlement of the question to the several states. But when it was made clear to us, that the entire delegation of ladies present would have nothing broader, that Miss Willard herself wrote the clause to which you object, and desired nothing more of the convention, what could we men do, but accept her proposition and keep silence? Please understand that the male portion of the convention was willing, with scarcely an exception, to advocate constitutional woman suffrage, as broadly as constitutional prohibition.

My criticism of the Prohibitory party would not have been written had I known these circumstances, which I had no means of knowing. I cannot but regard the action of the women who declined the large opportunity offered them as very unfortunate. They will regard it a mistake themselves, eventually.

Ever since the days of "John and Jessie," in 1856, I have been a Republican, and in many of its earlier years I put to the service of the Republican party my pen, my voice, my influence and my purse. I have never yet seen it my duty to advocate a third party, in furtherance of either woman suffrage or prohibition. What I might do were I a man, with a vote to execute my will, I cannot tell. But as a disfranchised woman, with only ability to agitate, and to help shape public opinion, having very deeply at heart both the woman suffrage and the temperance reforms, and seeing that there must be a greatly enlarged public sentiment before any decisive gain can come to either, I am sure it is not wise for either, as an organization, to enter into an alliance with any political party.

It is, perhaps, impossible for us, as individuals, not to have a preference for one party or the other. That is each one's right. But to put the American Woman Suffrage Association, or still more, the N. W. C. T. U., with its grand organization, its perfect machinery, and its large resources at the service of a political party is another and very different thing. It ought not to be done, even under the pretext of the Detroit resolution, unless by the unanimous consent of the state and territorial unions.

My "Word to Women," not especially to temperance women, was given over my individual signature. I was very careful not to add to my signature any official weight. It was my individual advice, given to individual women, possessing such value as may inhere in the character I bear, and in my forty years' large experience.

Either Mr. Blaine or Gov. Cleveland will be president. The time has not yet come when it is possible to elect the candidate of the Prohibitory party, although that candidate be Gov. St. John, spotless and stainless, a "Chevalier Bayard, without fear, and without reproach." As between the two, one of whom will be elected, I prefer the former and his party, to the latter. For the uplifting of woman, that has glorified the last thirty-five years, has come through the Republican party. Under its administration and influence, most of the unjust and tyrannical laws relating to women, that defaced the statute book thirty years ago, have been repealed.

About the time that Republicanism began its career, there were not a dozen employments open to women, now there are nearly three hundred. Only one college was open to women, and that was grand old Oberlin, now there are one hundred and fifty-three. Women have full suffrage in three territories, and partial suffrage in twelve states. The medical, legal, and to a large extent, the clerical professions are open to them. So also is the lecture platform, and they are serving in post offices, on boards of health, charity and lunacy, on boards of prison commissioners, and filling various appointments under government. All this has come about through Republican influence.

The same is true of the cause of prohibition. Whatever gain has been made in temperance legislation, and it has not been insignificant, has been the work of Republicans. That both reforms have moved too slowly, and received too little help from the Republican party to suit our righteous demands, and ardent desires, I admit. That the evils of intemperance are so vast and dire that we should welcome any agency that may deal them a death-blow, is my creed. And it is because I fear that alliance with any political party will, in the present stage of our progress, hinder rather than help our work, that I counsel caution, deliberation, and common sense.

There is a day after today. The fourth of November will soon be past and the political madness that now rules the hour, will then be spent. Again, we shall turn to legislatures for aid in obtaining constitutional state prohibition, compulsory education in the physiological effects of alcohol, local prohibition, and other like enactments. Shall we stand a better chance of obtaining these needed measures, which will give us wonderful advantage, if we work for the defeat of the Republican candidate, as we shall this year if we work for the success of the prohibitory candidate? Is it a light thing for women to propose to aid in the defeat of the Republican candidate, knowing that his competitor, who will then be elected, is a man who has committed flagrant sins against woman, which are admitted by his friends, and condoned as "little irregularities," and the "natural sowing of wild oats?"

Not more widely and certainly does intemperance blast the nation, poison the home, and curse woman than licentiousness. They are twin evils, which have dug the graves of nations, buried in the highway of the past. They are the joint foes of governments, the perpetual menace of woman and the home.

The motto of the great jurist, Sir Matthew Hale, was "Festina lente!" "Make haste slowly!" Goaded by the memories and suffering of the past, spurred on by the mighty anxieties concerning the future, impelled to work for the world's salvation by the great motherly heart that beats in every woman's bosom, let us take the motto of Sir Matthew Hale, as ours—"MAKE HASTE SLOWLY!"

MARY A. LIVERMORE.

ANOTHER W. H. H.

In THE UNION SIGNAL of September 11, appears an earnest, warm-hearted article entitled "A Kindly Difference," and signed W. H. H. The writer expresses hearty sympathy for the prohibition cause, admiration for its standard bearers, and confesses that after the Pittsburgh convention he was inclined to support "the noble patriots to whose care," that "dignified, "straightforward," convention, "entrusted the safety of their standards in the coming campaign." That he "wavered in his devotion and loyalty to party," and was "almost tempted to cast his vote on the side of prohibition now and for all time." As we read his earnest words we could but say, "Would to God that not only thou, but also all men of temperance principles were both almost and altogether persuaded to 'vote on the side of prohibition.'"

If they were, the time would be fully "ripe," and the long prayed for victory assured.

No reason is assigned by W. H. H. for his decision not to vote for what he desires should, and believes will succeed in the near future, unless it be that "the time is perhaps not yet ripe."

Having written so frankly will he consider a few reasons, expressed with equal frankness, for an opposite decision?

There is not the slightest probability that the Democratic party, as a party, will do anything it can help doing for prohibition. Although there are thousands of temperance men in that party's ranks, and as Mr. Blaine says, "many Democrats" in Maine, "voted for the amendment," yet the party is pronounced against all prohibitory laws, and will, whenever possible, prevent the people from expressing their will at the ballot box.

So much for the Democratic party; now how about the Republicans? is there any more hope from them?

In a few northern states there may be a few more temperance men in the Republican ranks than in the Democratic. But that does not assure or promise, prohibition by means of that party. That the Republican party machinery will be used to defeat prohibition when possible, is beyond a doubt. Thirteen or fourteen states had prohibitory laws when the Republicans came into power. During their uninterrupted rule those laws were all repealed except in the three states of Maine, Vermont and Iowa. In the latter the law was so modified as to render it abortive until the people by independent action forced the party to make prohibition an issue in that state. In the states of Maine and Vermont the Democratic party sustained such relation to the issue that the Republican party could at no time repeal the law without suffering defeat. The state of Kansas is the only one added to the prohibition list by the Republican party, and that was secured by an independent movement that threatened Republican rule.

As another consideration let it be observed that the Republicans in power today in prohibition states do not favor national prohibition, but endorse the national platform with its endorsement of the Raster resolutions. The popular senators from strong Republican states, who opposed the bonded whisky extension iniquity, were defeated for re-election by legislatures strongly Republican. With congressional control most of the time, for twenty-five years, the District of Columbia today has a saloon to every seventy of its population, the territories are overrun with whisky, and the Indians are maddened to bloodshed by fire-water sold under Republican administration. The White House is polluted by the liquor curse, the lamented Garfield's funeral train was a whisky saloon on wheels, and the Yorktown celebration was a drunken carousal. The enormous and disgraceful liquor bills of the Yorktown celebration, and Garfield funeral were paid for by congress and neither Mr. Blaine or Gen. Logan entered a single word of protest. For twenty years Mr. Blaine represented a prohibition state in congress, yet on what occasion has he ever uttered one word to assist other states to like measures, or raised his voice against the monster crime of the age?

He not only was indifferent and silent but he did write a letter to a Philadelphia paper in favor of making the revenue from whisky a "permanent fund" to be divided among the states, and holds out the inducement that the fund would have a "tendency to increase," as thus hedged about it certainly would. Mr. Blaine's sympathy with the liquor traffic was again manifested at the election in Maine last Monday, when the supreme issue of today was before the people of his state. Mr. Blaine said that evening, "Party discipline is powerless against the convictions of men." "That he had determined not to vote on the amendment" as he had been chosen to represent national issues.

The Republican nominee, therefore, either has no convictions on this great question, or his party has power against his convictions, which would be cowardly. In either case he is not fit to rule a great people.

To the successful enforcement of law, officers are necessary who are not only not in sympathy with lawbreakers, but will to the best of their ability arraign evil doers. To secure such officers we must support the party that desires such enforcement. Neither the Republican nor the Democratic party desires the enforcement of the liquor laws whether restrictive or prohibitory.

As to the issues between the two old parties, only the fragment of a much used and frightfully soiled bloody shirt remains. I was one who carried a musket in the bloody conflict and marched with bleeding feet to the defense of Gettysburg, but today I have less fear of all the "Johnny Rebs" in the south, than of the politicians who stand between the people and their desire, or for the saloon against the home.

"HERE WE ARE."

MRS. M. F. BUTTS.

A jolly little army,—
I seem to hear their feet,
Patter, patter, tread, tread,
Beat, beat, beat!
Here they come, there they come,
From happy hours of play,—
Down hill, across dale,
"Here we are!" they say.

A jolly little army,—
Tramp, tramp, tramp!
From the seaside cottage,
From the mountain camp;
From the dear old homestead,
Hidden far away,—
Down hill, across dale,
"Here we are!" they say.

A jolly little army,
Many thousand strong,
Wild roses on their cheeks,
On their lips a song;
Coming back to school again,
Bright with rest and play,—
Down hill, across dale,
"Here we are!" they say.—Standard.

CHAPTER III.—ORPHANS.

Contrary to Harry's anticipations the morrow found him being whirled swiftly toward his home, in answer to a telegram telling of his father's dangerous illness and bidding him come at once.

How that journey passed Harry never knew. He seemed to be completely dazed, and to know nothing. Rapidly the country fleeted by on either side, and the train stopped at the various stations, but he neither saw nor heard, for his father was dying, and all things else seemed as nothing to him.

At length he reached the station, and giving up his ticket he hurried through the streets of this little country town, on the outskirts of which his home was situated.

With white, set face he entered the lodge gates and passed up the broad carriage sweep which led to the front entrance. But on the threshold he paused. All was still save for the murmuring evening breeze in the trees without. All around him appeared the familiar scenes of his boyhood, where often he had played with his father and his brother, and now, alas! all was changed. He could bear these conflicting feelings no more, but dropping his bag in the hall he hurried up stairs.

The door of his father's room was slightly open, and he went softly in. Here were hushed voices and shaded lights; the blinds were all drawn, and the nurse and the doctor were whispering together. Both started at sight of Harry, and then the nurse, without a word, led him gently to the bedside. But the boy drew back in surprise and great distress at the dread sight which met his view. Could this worn, emanciated figure be his father? He looked again, and slowly began to distinguish the features, notwithstanding the dire disfigurements which vice and disease had wrought. The cheeks were worn into deep hollows, and the eyes, though now closed in slumber, were sunken and ghastly, while the face was of that deadly pallor which once seen on the face of the dying is never forgotten.

Suddenly, as Harry was bending over him, the patient opened his eyes, but no recognition came into them as they rested for a moment on his son. Wild and rolling they appeared now, and distraught with terror. It seemed as though they were fixed upon terrible objects, which frightened him out of his senses. These objects seemed to draw nearer, and force him from his bed, for with a loud scream of terror he leaped from his couch, and with his hands outstretched as though to ward off his imaginary foes, he crouched in a corner of the room, moaning with fright.

The nurse hastened to his side; but with another loud cry he again sprang forward and evaded her grasp. Grinding his teeth he sought to tear his own flesh, and writhed on the floor in agony; over and over he rolled, while he twisted his hands in his hair and tore out the iron-grey locks in handfuls. Perspiration stood in thick drops on his forehead, and blood trickled from his self-inflicted wounds.

Harry stood transfixed with horror. He had never imagined anything so fearful, and to see his father thus suffering seemed almost to deprive him of his reason.

But the patient was now silent and still from sheer exhaustion, and the doctor and the nurse lifted him again to his bed.

Then after giving him some medicine the doctor beckoned Harry away into the next room.

"Your father had a change for the better," he said, "after I sent you the telegram. I thought the end was nearer than it has proved to be, but I fear the worst from this paroxysm. This is another relapse."

"What is he suffering from?" asked Harry, slowly, his mouth so dry that he could scarcely articulate.

"I hardly think I ought to tell you," replied the physician, "but you will doubtless hear soon enough from others, therefore it is perhaps advisable you should know. Your father has delirium tremens—a terrible disease caused by drinking alcoholic liquors. Yes," he continued, speaking now as it were more to himself, "it is almost incredible the number of cases which exist of this terrible malady, and yet people continue to practise the absurd and dangerous habit of drinking these liquors. They begin to take a glass now and then, and it becomes a habit of which they cannot break themselves, until at last it leads to this or other diseases. To drink moderately is like playing with fire. But perhaps I ought not to complain," he said, smiling, "for if the drinking habit of society ceased to exist people would be so healthy that very few doctors would be needed."

At this moment Harry's younger brother came in. He had heard of Harry's arrival from the nurse, and hastened to greet his brother. He was but a child of four years, and having lost his mother when quite a baby, regarded Harry with perhaps warmer feelings than some younger brothers regard their elders, for the brothers and sisters of ages between the two having died, Harry had been very good to him, and perhaps more tender than he might otherwise have been.

"I'se so glad you's tum home," and the child rushed forward and sprang into his brother's arms at one bound and hid his face in his neck. "Papa's ill; they wont let me see him. I do 'ove oo, bluller (brother) Harry."

Harry sat in the nearest chair and kissed and fondled his little brother, but all the while that dread scene he had just witnessed was in his mind. The servant brought him refreshment and lit the gas, for the evening was now far advanced.

It was time also for Teddy, the younger brother, to retire, but he clung passionately to Harry, and would not be removed. And presently the nurse came with tears in her eyes and said in a hushed voice that their father was now conscious and asking for them. Awed by her solemn manner, they went hand in hand into the sick room.

The doctor was by the bedside, holding one of his patient's hands, and the boys noticed that it trembled very much, and that his whole body was trembling. But the sad, sad look on the face, its ghastly pallor and its frightened eyes—oh, it was a terrible sight!

Teddy was afraid and clung to Harry as if for protection. And then their father spoke, and the sad, hollow tones rang through the darkened room with fearsome sound.

"My boys! shun the wine cup as you would the plague. It has brought me to this, and it has made me ruin your prospects. Kiss me once before I die, and forgive your wretched father." But as they drew near with terrified faces, convulsion after convulsion ran through his frame. A hoarse rattling sounded in his throat, and he relaxed his grasp of the doctor's hand. Yet still he fought with death, and struggled for breath. Convulsively he clutched the air with his outstretched hands, but at last he fell back, the eyes remained fixed and glazed, the hands ceased to move, and Harry knew that he and his brothers were orphans.

THE CHALK TALKER AGAIN IN THE FIELD.

Dear Captain Deborah:—I have been ill nearly all summer,—am not at all well yet, and may have to rest more, but I began to work last Thursday in Marshall, Illinois. Nearly all the work there has been done by two ladies, who have had an up-hill time of it, but they have a flourishing and enthusiastic Band of Hope. Brighter and happier faces I have never seen. They have a beautiful silk banner with "Band of Hope" in gilt letters, and a star on the other side, so they named themselves the "Star Band of Hope." Oh, it was pleasant to see how proudly they carried their banner. They don't quite do as boys do with their first new boots, wear them to bed, but they put a night-cap on it every night with the tenderness and solicitude of a mother over her babe. And now I am going to tell you something nice, and you can whisper it to the children. Mary S. Redick, that indefatigable worker, whose heart is as brim full of plans for the boys and girls as if they were her very own, has prepared a beautiful concert piece called "The Golden Nine." Her Band of Hope executed it at my Chalk Talk entertainment, and it certainly was the finest thing I ever saw. It has nine banners, and devices and mottoes, and marching and singing, etc., and she is going to have it in leaflet, so that all the teachers can buy them, and as soon as this is all learned she has another equally beautiful. Oh, I tell you, we've struck a bonanza now. Almost daily I am in receipt of letters asking for just this very thing, and I am sure the teachers will take heart again.

O, before I forget it, I was in a good bishop's family the other day, and the mother told me she overheard her little boy one night say at the close of "Now I lay me," "and, oh Lord, please to never let me drink anything, wine nor cider, nor beer nor pop, nor smoke nor chew tobacco, and please give sister a nice good husband and don't let him drink, nor smoke, nor chew; and if he wants to, let her have influence on him so he won't. Amen.

A LAMENT.

C. A. S.

The following beautiful lines were written by the late Richard Siles, Esq., of Danville, Va., a gentleman of genius, a fine scholar, and a lawyer of distinction. The lines speak of the sad experience and fate of the author:

I have been to the funeral of all my hopes
And entombed them one by one;
Not a word was said
Not a tear was shed,
When the mournful task was done.

Slowly and sadly I turned me round
And sought my silent room;
And there alone
By the cold hearth stone
I wooed the midnight gloom.

And as the night wind's deepening shade,
Lowered above my brow,
I wept o'er days
When manhood's rays
Were brighter far than now.

The dying embers on the hearth,
Gave out their flickering light,
As if to say
This is the way,
Thy life shall close in night.

I wept aloud in anguish sore,
O'er the blight of prospects fair;
While demons laughed
And eager quaffed
My tears like nectar rare.

Through hell's red halls an echo rang,
An echo loud and long,
As in the bowl
I plunged my soul
In the might of madness strong.

And there within that sparkling glass,
I knew the cause to lie;
This all men own,
From zone to zone,
Yet millions drink and die.

HARRY'S CHOICE.

ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

There were five peas and a small potato in the peck measure. Nobody cared for them, and when farmer Skimp wanted the measure he tossed them into the rubbish heap at one corner of the barn, where they lay forgotton. But they were not lonely, for the potato, like many small creatures, was very wise, and the peas were wide awake and eager for knowledge, and had what one might call an aspiring turn of mind.

"Have you any idea what will be our future state?" asked the fattest pea of the small potato.

"Yes," said the potato, "I have been told that each one of us may become a beautiful vine, which will bear flowers and fruit."

It was a long winter, but the six friends spent it happily, for they did not know that their new life could not begin till they had died to the life they knew.

Grandma Wagner, when she had closed her book smiled at the boy sitting opposite her in the big cushioned chair on the other side of the fire-place. He was a square-headed boy, with brown eyes very like grandma's own, but there was a slower current in his blood than there was in hers, so for a few seconds he returned her look in silence. Then he said slowly:

"Suppose they had preferred not to be planted."

"That's going beyond the story," said Grandma, quickly. "But something always is left out, either the large or the small things. We cannot have both Good-night."

Harry rose at once, and after kissing his grandmother, went at once to his own little room across the hall. Grandma Wagner, ever since he could remember, had either told him a story or had read one to him from a volume marked "Record" every Sunday night. She kept the book in the little old desk that stood by her bed, and he secretly believed that she was the author of its contents herself, so unlike were the stories to any he found in his books.

On his bureau was a green goggle-eyed frog into whose open mouth he had been dropping money through the year. It was not a large sum, but out of it at Christmas he had bought a large print Testament for his grandmother, and a red silk handkerchief for Polly the cook, and there were four dollars left with which he meant to purchase a pair of club skates. He had a pair of old ones, which had belonged to his father. The runners ended in a great coil, beyond his feet, but even with these he was one of the best skaters in town. So it was not strange that he gave an affectionate shake to the frog before he sprang into bed, and that as he lay coiled up in the blankets he should think of the wonderful capers he would cut in club skates. His dreams too, were about skates, and he slid down hill and up hill, and over foaming rivers, while the green frog sat under a sweet-pea vine, and timed him by a big silver watch, shaped like a potato.

The next morning it was so cold the snow squeaked, and the air was full of peculiar crisp noises, but Harry felt nothing but happiness. He was going to have the curled club skates, and was going to give his old ones to Phil Nelson. And it was New Years' day, and they could spend the whole afternoon on the pond.

Phil was a shy, slender boy, wonderfully clever at his books, and always very shabby as to his clothes. Some of the boys called him Joseph, because of the many patches on his roundabout, but most of them had a wholesome awe of what he could do in arithmetic, and of his friend Harry Wagner whose fists were always ready to avenge his friends' wrongs. Perhaps Harry would never have become such a staunch friend if Phil had seemed more prosperous and better able to fight his own battles. He certainly would not have become one so quickly, for Phil's parents had only lived in Blockville a year, and Harry was slow to make acquaintances. It was a curious intimacy. Harry never went beyond Phil's gate. If a shrill whistle did not bring his friend out, Harry went away. But Phil often sat by Grandma Wagner's fire, and more than once had had his Saturday's dinner at her table. Phil's father, though evidently a gentleman by birth and breeding, was a drunkard, and that made all the difference.

Arrived at Phil's gate, Harry gave a whistle that would have done honor to a locomotive, but Phil was slow to answer, and when he did come, looked so pinched and white, that Harry stopped short in his eager invitation to spend the afternoon on the pond, and said abruptly, "Why-ee—what's the matter?"

Phil's face twitched. He hung his head and kicked one battered shoe against the snow drift before him.

"Not much," he said, crowding his hands into his trousers' pockets, and then overcome by a great need of sympathy, added painfully, "We—that is mother'n the baby'n me—we haven't any breakfast,—an' father's—" He could say no more, and bent his head lower, shaking with sobs.

Harry's brown eyes grew dark and round, a strange lump seemed to have filled his throat and he swallowed once or twice, before he said brusquely, "You just hold up." Then with swift strides and leaps, hurried home.

In half an hour he returned with a large basket which needed nice handling. The shrillest whistling failed to bring out Phil, and at last, with some fear, he tapped at the shabby door. Not even a thin wreath of smoke curling from the chimney, proclaimed the house occupied, and Harry would have liked to have left the basket and run away. But he was a gentlemanly boy, and as no one came to admit him, he opened the door himself. Carpets, easy chairs, and fires he had always thought of as essential parts of a house, as his nose and eyes were parts of his face. He had never imagined that anyone could be quite without them. But this room contained nothing save a stove, now fireless, two wooden chairs, a table, and a shabby bedstead heaped with ragged clothes.

A slender woman with a baby in her arms opened a door from an inner room, and Harry, taking off his cap and bowing, murmured something about his grandmothers compliments. He did not know how to tell a lady he had brought her something to eat, so he said instead, "If Phil's busy ma'am, I'll split some kindlings and make you a fire."

"He's gone for the doctor," said Mrs. Nelson dropping into a chair, "and there are no kindlings, no coal, nor anything." She had turned very white, and the poor little baby would have fallen, had not Harry caught her. Dropping her on the bed, he poured out a cup of steaming coffee, and somehow managed to get some of it down the throat of the mother, when he sped away to Mr. Tucker of whom his grandmother bought coal.

"The Nelsons want coal, do they," said Mr. Tucker grimly, "m' well, let 'em send the money. They owe me for two ton a'ready. I don't run a private poor house."

Mr. Tucker was a kind man at heart, but he hated laziness and unthript, and always secretly ached to beat every drunken man he saw. He was out of sorts too, this morning, Christmas festivities had been followed by New Year's bills, and some of his debtors were not prompt. Harry knew nothing of the causes of his irritation, but saw the results of it, and thought him hard and cruel. Wondering what he should do he thrust his hands into his pockets, when his fingers touched the coin tied up in his handkerchief. He shut his eyes, and for a moment saw a pair of perfect club skates, then with a hot blush that he had waited for ever so brief a period, he drew the money out. "Send them four dollar's worth of coal, Mr. Tucker," he said with an indignant flash in his brown eyes. "As they haven't any fire, I wish you'd hurry."

That evening Harry and Grandma Wagner sat up later than usual in the cosy sitting room, and talked of the events of the day. "I've sometimes thought my life a hard one," said grandma, "Husband and children are gone, and I've lost most of my property, but tonight, I know I have been happy. Think of that poor young woman made a widow today! She is a lady too. But worst of all, Mr. Nelson's death must be a relief to her."

"Yes," said Harry stretching out his hands to the fire. "Phil said the hardest part is that he cannot help being glad. I never thought before how awful a bad man is."

"We don't live for ourselves," said grandma gravely, "but sad as the day has been, it has been good to see how kind the world is after all. That poor little house is full of comforts. Mr. Tucker not only sent six tons of coal, but he has taken entire charge of the funeral."

"Mr. Tucker!" exclaimed Harry, who had been with grandma's old pony all day in the Nelson family's behalf.

"Certainly, he's a very kind man. Did you find time to buy your skates?"

"No—m," said Harry turning very red.

"I'm glad," said grandma. "I want some change. You give me yours, and I'll give you four silver dollars."

"I guess I shan't sail round on club skates this winter," said Harry a little nervously, "I— replanted 'em—and they resprouted."

Gradma drew down her spectacles and looked expectant.

"I gave the money to Mr. Tucker for coal," he added frankly. "You said something has to be left out, and I went without skates, that's all."

"Ah," said grandma softly "that's not all, you did more than you know."

TOPIC: SOLOMON SUCCEEDING DAVID.

LESSON TEXT: I Kings 1: 22-35.

GOLDEN TEXT: And thou Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy father and serve Him with a perfect heart and a willing mind. I Chronicles 28: 9.

TIME: B. C. 1015.

PLACE: Jerusalem.

1. Bathsheba is a good representative of a mother's earnest loving and planning for her son. She had treasured in her heart the promise that David had sworn to her, and now that there seemed in his age and weakness some danger of his forgetting it, and turning over to a usurper the kingdom of Israel, her heart took alarm and she made personal and brave appeal for her son. God has made promise of a kingdom to every son of a believing mother. He has sworn by Himself that the covenant of this kingdom which is "within you" shall not depart from His people even to the third and fourth generations. When our hearts are fearful that the promise is about to be set aside, let us plead it boldly as did this ambitious mother, and be sure of a better reward even than was hers.

2. Adonijah is a fair antetype of many pretenders, all of whom begin their traitorous work by beguiling the people. He is patterned after by many in modern times who see their way to the hearts of the people through great feasting and eating and drinking. To a political barbecue Adonijah invited his followers, and they all cried out with the docility of sheep, "Long live King Adonijah." Absalom began his usurpations at a banquet, and it has been the custom of politicians all through the ages to appeal to the lower nature of man. If a candidate wishes to draw the rabble after him he can do so by coming down to the rabble's level. Beware of the man who seeks alliance with such forces and by such means.

3. Nathan, the prophet, seems to be a messenger of God not only to warn of sin, but to shape the policy of the kingdom in the interest of righteousness. What a picture of holy boldness is he in his visit to the king, endeavoring to frustrate what may have been done with David's weak consent. How many preachers of righteousness today will dare to attack the government in its apparent weak complicity with wrong? How many arraign it for its support of the greatest evil of our times, in their pulpits, in the homes of the people, in the council chamber or at the ballot box? How often the statement is made that "ministers must not meddle with politics" when only by such meddling can government be reformed. Nathan is a good example of him who stands between the people and God.

4. Often the most prosperous devices of the wicked but serve to open the eyes of the weak and indifferent and so fulfill God's beneficent purposes. If David had died before Adonijah made his dastardly attack upon the throne, he might never have proclaimed his successor to the people. As it was, aroused from the lethargy of his self indulgent age, he clearly indicated by a solemn public act, his decision for the kingship. The seeming success of wrong is often the near precursor of the reign of right.

5. The trickster and the fraud is always a coward. Adonijah no sooner saw his own defeat than he most abjectly humbled himself before the new king. This he did not for repentance' sake, but for fear. There is nothing weaker than conscious wrong, nothing stronger than conscious integrity.

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

TWO HARMONIOUS FORCES.

A great mistake is made by many good people, in assuming that moral and legal suasion are two opposing forces. Moral force is the persuasion of the human will to act in accordance with intelligent conviction. Legal force is the compulsion of the human will when intelligence and conviction are wanting. The one is for the willing and those amenable to instruction, all that is necessary. The other is made necessary for the good of all when a part are unwilling to know the truth, or to act in accordance with it. Moral and legal forces are necessary so long as these two classes of persons exist. The state or government decides that a certain line of policy is demanded by the public welfare or safety. The large mass of citizens give their allegiance to the policy because convinced of its necessity. A small minority oppose themselves, and for the sake of this minority legal force must needs supplement the conviction and opinion which have settled the question in the broader minds of the majority. In the temperance reform, the great majority of people have decided that drunkenness is an evil. A large proportion, if not a majority, agree that drink in any form is an evil and total abstinence a blessing. Moral suasion consists in changing the opinion of those who still deny this proposition. Father Mathew, one of the greatest of moral suasionists, persuaded the Irish people to give up five of the eleven million gallons of whisky they were annually consuming. Just as he reached this point of success he commenced to be defeated, because of the failure to connect or add to his moral force the legal condemnation of the drink habit. Because of this lack moral force has been shorn of its beneficence, and the Irish people are today drinking more in proportion to their numbers, than before the total abstinence movement of Father Mathew. So long as the appetite for drink exists in man, so long there will be need of these two forces in overcoming drink. One to persuade the weak will to forego indulgence, and the other to legally fortify it by taking away the temptation.

This being true, how hopeless seems the work of moral suasion when law, the embodiment of legal force, sanctions instead of condemns the evil against which we would persuade men. Unless the two be set side by side in the relation of the right arm and the left, there is little need to write down, or in any other way, attempt to sweep away the drink habit and the drink traffic of the land. Until the smooth stones from the brook are hurled mightily from the sling of legal action they will never sink deep into the "horrid front" of the giant Philistine of our day. Unless the two oars of moral and legal force propel our brave temperance life boat, it will be dashed about in the surf of passion and avarice, unable to land its precious freight and eventually powerless to keep itself above water.

READ DILIGENTLY AND PONDER SERIOUSLY.

At the Woodstock Fourth of July celebration in 1883—under the management of Mr. Henry C. Bowen, of the New York Independent, the Hon. Henry W. Blair was one of the speakers, taking for his topic, "National Evils Require National Remedies." The national evil discussed was the drink traffic of the country—the remedy—national prohibition. The arguments are so timely "in this day and age," when statesmen, politicians and philanthropists are remanding the prohibition question back to the states as the only ground for its settlement, that we give all that we have space for in the interest of clearer vision and a broader comprehension of the matter:

No general public evil has ever been permanently removed or generally restrained without the agency of law. Indeed, how can it be removed unless there is a public opinion against it? Unless public opinion is pronounced against it, there is no evil which the forces of society will endeavor to remove. Law is the inevitable result of moral suasion whenever it is effective, and to say that there shall be no law is to say that there shall be no moral suasion to demonstrate the existence of the evil.

The premises involve the conclusion which logically follows. Therefore, whoever asserts the existence of a general evil destructive to society and inflicted wholly on or in part by its individual members upon each other, asserts the necessity of a law to assist in its removal and to prevent its restoration.

We have already adverted to the nature of the evil of alcoholism, and to the self-evident fact that but for the production of the cause through the agency of a great industry protected by law, the terrible consequences could not exist.

If, then, laws to prohibit or restrain the evil of alcoholic intemperance should exist, the only inquiry which remains to me on this occasion is, what is the best law to effect the purpose? The object of the law should be to extirpate the evil. Is alcoholic intemperance a national evil? If so, should it not be prohibited by national law?

But if a national evil, it follows that it is one cursing all sections—every territory and every state. If so, unless exclusive jurisdiction over it has been confided by the states and people to the general government, the law-making power in every state should also prohibit the evil by its laws. But we find on examination of our complex form of government, embracing in one grand whole that of the nation and those of the states, that what is called the police power is in the states and the people at large; that no substantial part of it has been confided to the general government, at least no more than it may be necessary to exercise in order to preserve the powers expressly or by fair implication delegated to it in the fundamental law.

The police power is that under which the traffic in intoxicating drink must be controlled and prohibited, if at all—and it resides in the states. But the states and people have expressly given to the general government the right and power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes. The general government recognizes and protects alcohol as property and as an article of legitimate commerce. So long as any state, domestic or foreign, continues to permit the manufacture of alcohol and the traffic therein, the general government stands pledged to exercise all its powers of legislature, judicature and execution, to protect and facilitate the continued infliction of the curse.

States may do much to rescue their people, and public sentiment everywhere may cry out in its extremity, but so long as the constitution and laws of the United States guarantee the safe importation and transportation of alcoholic beverages in the original packages through the ports and over the avenues of interstate commerce of this country, the extinction or substantial restraint of the evil is impossible. If the demand did not really exist, local laws and public opinion might, perhaps, suffice; but not now when every hamlet, and, I had almost said, some inmate of every house in the whole land is crazed by the unnatural desire. I would not be understood to discourage the efforts to secure prohibitory laws, both constitutional and statutory, in the states. They are indispensable, and even when these efforts fail, or, the laws being enacted, their purpose partially fails, still, they constitute the nucleus of that agitation which forms public opinion, and lead gradually up to that universal public judgment, which, sooner or later, will amend the constitution of the country so as to prohibit absolutely this baneful traffic everywhere by national law. It should be observed that such an amendment of the national constitution would not be an infringement upon the police or any other powers of the states and of the people. Quite the contrary; for this power, now in the general government, to regulate commerce in alcohol, nullifies the police powers of the states to protect their people from an evil which falls under their absolute jurisdiction, in theory, and which in its tremendous scope includes almost every burden and crime, to prevent which the state governments themselves exist. Such an amendment would, first, remove all restrictions from the efforts of states, and second, would place the general government affirmatively on the side of the interests of the whole people and of all the states, in their efforts to deliver themselves from the body of this death. Commerce with foreign powers must be regulated by national laws, and there are states and territories of the United States, wherein, if left to themselves, the manufacture and trade would exist, it may be, forever; consequently, under our complex system of government, it would be impracticable to remove the causes of alcoholic intemperance without an amendment to the national laws. Such an amendment of the national constitution is the proper immediate objective point of all temperance agitation and work. There has been labor enough long since expended to have secured the result if directed to this great end. There will never be any substantial and permanent temperance reform in this country, so far as the same is dependent upon law, until the sporadic efforts of states and sections are made to converge upon the real citadel of the rum curse, which is the national constitution.

There is another fallacy or misdirection of energy which is now, fortunately, being generally remedied. Prohibition has been directed against the sale merely, while the manufacture has not been interfered with; so that, as a matter of fact, there has never been a prohibitory law in this country. It is impossible to enact a prohibitory law, in its true sense, by any state. It is apparent that to prohibit the sale while the manufacture and transportation are unrestrained and the appetite everywhere exists is nugatory. No prohibition of the manufacture and transportation can be effective unless by virtue of national law, because the manufacture for the world can take place on any single square mile of the continent, and transportation is controlled by national power. Those who sneeringly say that prohibition does not prohibit, should remember that there never yet was a prohibitory law in this country. When the nation has prohibited the importation, manufacture, transportation and sale of intoxicating beverages, and that sort of prohibition does not prohibit, it will be ample season to cry out against the efficiency of enactments which seek to extirpate crime from the land by the removal of its great exciting cause.

It is often said that it is impossible to prevent the manufacture of alcohol for use as a beverage. Why is it more difficult to prevent the manufacture than the sale, for improper uses, by law? All civilized governments attempt to regulate or prohibit the sale. The nation knows every distillery, and taxes and thrives upon its product. Some states permit and regulate the sale for legitimate uses, while others license and regulate the sale for all, and the right to do one implies the right to do the other whenever the public good may require.

What difficulty, then, could the nation experience in prohibiting and preventing substantially the creation and transportation of alcohol for any but medicinal, scientific and other indispensable uses, if the attempt were seriously made? Even if only partially successful, why not make the most reasonable efforts, if we are to make any, to remove the evil or abandon the field entirely? I have no argument with those, if such there be, who are opposed to any legislation against the liquor traffic—with those who would either license it or make t wholly free. Such people, to be consistent, should repeal the whole criminal code, and recite the golden rule to pirates and snakes.

If we are to legislate at all upon the subject, why not aim to ascertain the real nature and full extent of the evil, and then enact laws whose jurisdiction is complete, and whose penalties and prohibitions are commensurate to the end? Hitherto all legislation has been by the states. Necessarily it has been confined chiefly to the sale and use by individuals. The states can partially reach the sale and use within their own borders, but the manufacture and distribution are practically beyond their control, and therefore may almost as well be unrestricted by the states, since to prohibit within their respective limits is merely to drive capital and labor elsewhere without perceptibly diminishing the production, sale or use by their own citizens. Such attempts by the state are like removing the Mississippi river in sections, or abolishing the east wind by law.

For half a century, the working life of more than two generations, gigantic efforts have been put forth by noble men and women, by philanthropists, by statesmen and by states, to restrain and destroy the alcoholic evil, through the operation of moral suasion and by state law. Public sentiment has been aroused and public opinion created, and at times, in my belief, it might have been crystallized into national law had the labor been properly directed. But it has failed as it will always fail, so long as we save at the spigot and waste at the bung, if I may borrow an expressive simile from the business of the enemy.

The temperance question is in its nature a national question, just as much so as the tariff is, and more so than slavery was. It is waste of time to deal with it only by towns and counties and states. All possible local effort should be put forth against the liquor death everywhere. The yellow fever should be fought in the by-ways and hospitals by the physician and the nurse as well as by the quarantine of our ports, and the suspension of infected traffic by national law; but the enemy will forever come in like a flood unless the nation, which is assailed as a nation, defends itself as a nation. Battle-fields are local, but the powers which contend upon them are national. What progress would have been made in the restoration of national integrity, if the war for the Union had been conducted by the states in isolation, and their efforts had been confined to their own geographical jurisdiction respectively?

What the temperance reform most needs is unification of effort, nationalization. Samson was not more completely hampered by withes than is this giant reform by the geographical lines of states; and if its supporters would but use their strength, they would at once find their natural arena circumscribed only by the national domain.

How shall this be done?

By concentration upon the enactment of a national constitutional law.

THE floodgates are opened, the deluge is upon us, our correspondents may submerge us for the time, but "we still live," and will not drown. It is the hand of a friend that bears us down each time, and we say to all, "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." This time it is our honored Mrs. Livermore, whom once we ventured to accuse of inconsistency, in that she championed the cause of Republicanism versus Prohibition, when the party of the latter part embodied her cherished reforms and the other ignored them. Now that she retracts her criticism of the Prohibition party on subsequent information, we are still further moved to say in the interest of truth, that the lack in the Prohibition platform of that complete and unmeasured endorsement of woman suffrage which so many of us feel in common with Mrs. Livermore, was not the concerted advice of the temperance women of the convention. At least one woman we know, submitted a plank which would have taken all the edge off our friend's former sharp criticism, but it was disregarded by the platform committee. While we hold that the party is committed to the principle of woman suffrage, there were many women delegates who would have welcomed an unequivocal utterance in favor of national action, who feel that the new party of moral ideas must not flinch in its beginnings, and trust that a truer position may be taken ever hereafter.

John Allen, of Maine, is a Methodist preacher, 90 years of age, who has participated in 352 camp meetings. He is a great temperance man, and at several of the W. C. T. U. meetings of the campaign recited the scriptures with a quaint emphasis most refreshing in its contrast to the regulation style of many a pulpiteer.

Well I'm glad there is one thing wherein state and national policy may agree, appreciation of the laborious worker. Some of her friends, "state and national," have surprised Miss Pugh, the national W. C. T. U. treasurer for many years, with a birth-day gift of a new and capacious escritoire. I know not if it be "Wooton" or otherwise, but she says its locked drawers, its cupboards and pigeon holes are "a joy forever."

* * *

She says, too that the new desk is consecrated to prohibition effort, now for St. John and the party which nominated him, hereafter for the prohibition president of the United States, whoever he may be.

* * *

Mrs. M. A. Cornelius, president of Arkansas W. C. T. U., is in the north seeking a restoration of health lost in her too laborious campaigning for home protection in Little Rock. The Lord grant her as large measure of vigor as she already has of zeal.

* * *

Mrs. McPherson, of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. had her heart gladdened and rested the other day by a letter from the school superintendent of the District as follows:

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT PUBLIC SCHOOLS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12, 1884.

DEAR MRS. MCPHERSON:—I take pleasure in tendering you my thanks for your valuable services in interesting the teachers of the public schools of the city, in physical culture and hygiene. During the past year it was largely through your efforts that several classes of teachers were organized and instructed in Swedish gymnastics, and several other classes for the purpose of informing themselves more fully on the important subjects of physiology and the laws of health. Intellectual culture is quite fully appreciated, but physical culture is generally neglected, and it requires just such energetic efforts as you have made, to secure for it anything like proper attention.

Very respectfully,
J. ORMOND WILSON, Superintendent.

* * *

Here is a cheering note for such a time as this:

All growth in wisdom, all pure love's increase,
All noble daring and endurance meet,
All battles for the truth, all sighs for peace
The presence of the Comforter bespeak.

We seem divided, scattered and alone,
The tranquil heavens with discord ring,
Meanwhile He binds us all and every one
In bonds of growing union to our King.

* * *

Mrs. J. R. Nichols says that contributions to the "Bric a Brac Fund" of the National W. C. T. U. are beginning to come in finely. Some people are making little collection baskets out of corn husks, for this Fair-y collection, saying as they do so that they would rather have the husks represent the industry of their states than the whisky made from the kernels. Of course everybody understands that these articles are to be sold at the St. Louis convention for the benefit of the national society.

* * *

That was a happy thought (the exquisite consideration of a mother who knew that her son would appreciate it) of Mrs. Jonathan Blanchard, to take two shares of stock in THE UNION SIGNAL, in memory of the gifted Cyrus L. Blanchard, who was its devoted legal friend in its early years. "Being dead, he yet speaketh" by his life, by his work, and now by the types of prohibition and every phase of the temperance reform.

PENNSYLVANIA.

MERCER COUNTY CONVENTION.

We Mercer county women have just held our annual convention. Mrs. McLaughlin was with us one week previous to the convention, and gave seven lectures at different points, and she was also with us the second day of the convention, and addressed the evening mass meeting; our local papers are full of complimentary notices of her work, many of these notices being editorial.

Mrs. Rev. Eckles, of Lawrence county, filled the chair in the absence of our county president, Mrs. Wolfhill, who was called away, but sent us a little talk on paper with "advanced action" as the text. The suggestions for future work contained in the address were, on motion, referred to the committee on plan of work.

We met in the Presbyterian church, Greenville. The pulpit was draped in blue and white, with baskets of flowers about, and the evergreen letters W. C. T. U. suspended over the stand, the national motto in raised white letters on brown ground, a beautiful one; above this letters. Statistics, on posters, were pinned to the walls of the church, a literature table was placed in front of the pulpit, and furnished by the county literature superintendent, assisted by the literature superintendent of the Greenville union, with Illinois leaflets, THE UNION SIGNAL, Julia Colman's beer and cider readings and lovely chromo cards, etc.

Mrs. W. J. B. Findlay gave the words of welcome in a way that made us all feel at home, and Mrs. Simons, our recording secretary, responded with cheerful words, looking on the bright side, as she always does.

Delegates and officers were present during the meeting from thirteen local auxiliaries.

The reports were a blending of sunshine and shadows in W. C. T. U. work. Some were glad, some were sad. We can't stop to tell about it all, but we want to speak of Greenville union, the next to the youngest child in the family, not quite a year old, which has raised and expended $135 for the work, and has an honorary member who pays $10.

The first evening session was devoted to young ladies. There were several fine recitations and a paper on "What can they do? or Girls' Work in the W. C. T. U."

Our Narcissa White gave the main address of the evening. Subject, "Ghosts, Real and Imaginary!"

One of our local editors spoke of her as "easy, earnest, eloquent," but we workers felt that she surpassed herself and talked like one inspired. Sweetly and bravely at the close of her address she explained the attitude of the W. C. T. U. toward political parties; she was listened to by thoughtful looking voters, with close attention and profound respect. God bless and keep our Narcissa White!

The second evening session was devoted to reports of superintendents of departments, and was full of practical work and discussion. Mrs. McLaughlin, Miss White, Mrs. Douglass, of Meadville (state literature superintendent), and Mrs. Wyman and Taylor, of the same city, being with us to aid in planning.

Part of our regular program was crowded off, we became so enthused with county fair department. A committee was appointed and reported, and I was so busy about something else, I can scarcely tell a straight story about it, but I believe our county W. C. T. U. is to "pitch a moving tent" at all the county fairs this month, and sell and give away literature. Next year we hope to venture farther and have speakers.

At the afternoon session we had a Bible reading, on "our workers psalm," conducted by Mrs. Eckles.

Mrs. Hamilton read an anniversary essay, just crammed full of good things, which was highly appreciated by the listeners. Mrs. Douglass gave a carefully prepared paper on "Education, and its place in the W. C. T. U.," and then we stopped off short, to make room for the children who came marching in to the music of the organ, led by Miss Adda Burch, one of Greenville's busy teachers, who is a perfect success in training children. The subject of the entertainment was "Signal Lights along Life's Pathway," and was the most beautifully arranged and carried out of any children's temperance work we ever saw. One of our oldest and "far traveled" workers said, "I never in all my life saw anything like it."

Interspersed with this exercise the children sang "When we are old enough to vote," "Temperance boys and girls," "Tramp, tramp," etc. (Miss Burch was elected juvenile superintendent of county work for the ensuing year)

Mrs. McLaughlin addressed the children briefly before they marched out. Major Ormsby, Democratic candidate for assembly, who voted right on the amendment bill two years ago, was present in convention, was introduced and made a speech; also J. M. Nilson, Prohibition nominee for congress. J. P. Reed, who is called the "brother-in-law of the Sharon W. C. T. U.," was introduced and responded. W. H. Cour, chairman Prohibition congressional committee, was also introduced and we were invited to attend a mass meeting of the party at Stoneboro.

The late address of the national officers, published in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 28, was recommended to the "careful and prayerful consideration of all our workers," (copies of it were immediately distributed.) The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That no candidate upholding the principles of license can in any sense be acceptable to the members of our W. C. T. U.

We respectfully appealed to the managers of county fairs to discourage the offering of premiums on domestic wines. A department of hygiene was created with Miss Mary Dumars, Greenville, superintendent. Officers for coming year were elected as follows: president, Mrs. Wolfhill, Sharon; vice president at large, Miss Sarah Pew, Mercer; recording secretary, Mrs. Simons, Salem; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. J. Kerr, Mercer; treasurer, Mrs. J. D. Nilson, Sharon; superintendents of departments for eleven of the different lines of work were appointed. THE UNION SIGNAL was presented, and a list of subscriptions obtained which will be forwarded soon. With many wise helpful lessons learned, and new friendships and acquaintances formed, we adjourned our tenth annual convention, feeling that "the Lord of Hosts is with us," and that He had been better to us "than all our fears."

MRS. J. W. STEVENSON.

MICHIGAN.

EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NINTH DISTRICT W. C. T. U.

The Ninth District W. C. T. U. met in convention in Reed City, Tuesday, Sept. 2d. It was the most profitable and progressive meeting of the organization ever held in the district. The church was decorated with flowering plants and cut flowers among which I noticed an exquisite bouquet sent by our district flower mission superintendent who was unable to be present. Encircling an arch in the rear of the pulpit, was our motto "For God, and Home, and Native Land, and just above, the word—"Welcome." The convention was opened promptly at 2 o'clock by the president, Lucy F. Morehouse of Big Rapids, who read the Crusade Psalm with soul inspiring comments, and all joined in prayer with J. D. McLaulin. Mrs. A. P. Thomas then delivered the address of welcome to which Mrs. M. A. Croly responded in a few well chosen words.

Mrs. J. H. Kellogg, National superintendent of Hygiene, was then introduced to the convention, and with her husband, J. H. Kellogg, conducted a Normal institute, occupying the remainder of that day and evening and the following day and evening.

A review of a similar institute having been given so recently (Aug. 28) in your columns, we will not reiterate, only say that this rare opportunity for studying this important branch of our great work is very highly prized by the women of the Ninth district.

Thursday morning, convention was called to order at half past 8 a. m. The first half hour was devoted to a prayer and conference service, after which the convention proceeded to business with the greatest earnestness and enthusiasm. The rest from all care during the hygienic institute had prepared each delegate for the enjoyment of a day of business, and never was more accomplished in so short a time, which was due to the carefully and prayerfully laid plans of the president.

The committee on credentials reported forty delegates present, beside a large number of visitors.

The treasurer reported a balance of $13.05 in the treasury.

The president then read her address which was full of practical suggestions to the unions.

Report of work done in the district during the past year was then called for to which each president responded.

Lake county reported more unions than any other. One of the saloon keepers at Chase sent an invitation to the Methodist minister to come and open his saloon with prayer, offering to pay a dollar each time. He went, accompanied by three members of the union. Their audience was large and seemed deeply moved. Upon going the next morning the saloonist said he had changed his mind, and they were not allowed to hold services. Steele's Hygienic Physiology has been introduced into the schools.

Manistee county had sent temperance speakers to largest number of towns. Also sent 100 copies of the Lever. During Francis Murphy's ten weeks' work 3000 signed the pledge.

The ladies, 500 strong, attended the annual school meeting and elected a temperance school board. Kitchen garden work is carried on successfully.

Muskegon county reports that Whitehall has placed in their midst a well with town pump bearing the suggestive inscription, "W. C. T. U."; Muskegon Union—that last winter the temperance school fell entirely into the hands of Mrs. Addie Eldred, the president, who, hoping to unite common industries with temperance teaching, introduced the needle into the school; it suddenly grew in numbers and favor to such an extent, the school board volunteered to furnish rooms and pay all necessary expenses to carry it on. Three kindergarten schools, are also supported by the city at an expense of $1,500 for teachers. An organization of cadets of temperance numbering fifty boys is another branch of union work. Jail work is carried on with faithfulness, not more than six Sundays having passed in two years and six months without a visit being paid and work done, and inmates have been helped to live temperate lives after being released. Reed City excelled all others in the quantity of temperance literature distributed. Wexford county reported a general temperance revival at Cadillac dating from the tenth anniversary of crusade.

Steele's Hygienic Physiology is used in the public schools.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Lucy F. Morehouse, Big Rapids; corresponding secretary, Ann M. Hood, Big Rapids; recording secretary, Maria B. Bruce, Big Rapids; treasurer, Ella Wheeler, Manistee; county presidents: Lake, Martha Joiner, Chase; Manistee, Mary Bowie, Manistee; Mason, Laura Fralick, Ludington; Mecosta, Julia A. Upton, Big Rapids; Muskegon, Annie Swan, Muskegon; Osceola, Fanny E. Holden, Osceola; Wexford, M. A. Fallas, Cadillac.

The following superintendents of departments were appointed by the convention:

Sunday schools, Julia A. Upton, Big Rapids; scientific education, Mrs. R. B. Cormany, Reed City; prisons and police stations, Mrs. M. F. Reed, Muskegon; soldiers and sailors, Alice Jacques, Big Rapids; flower mission, Ann M. Hood, Big Rapids; kindergarten, Adele C. Murray, Muskegon.

The following are a part of the resolutions adopted by the convention:

Resolved, That we look with distress and alarm upon the influence that tobacco and light, trashy literature are exerting upon the minds of our youth; that while tobacco destroys the energy and strength of their will power and the reading degrades their moral nature, these evils go hand in hand, and as a Christian organization it is our duty to do all in our power to suppress them.

Resolved, That we use our best endeavors to advance the prohibition party in our district, and that we rejoice in the brave and manly acceptance of the nomination for governor by Hon. David Preston, and will use our influence to secure his election.

WHEREAS, The people of this state have framed a law which empowers city councils and town boards to approve or reject bonds which may be offered by persons wishing to engage in the liquor traffic, therefore

Resolved, That it is our duty as W. C. T. U. workers to interest ourselves in the elections and use our influence to secure the election of men who will not approve bonds for liquor sellers; and seeing how much we could influence if we could express our choice at the ballot box, we desire that our state superintendent of franchise shall consider the advisability of working to secure from the coming legislature a full municipal ballot to all women of proper age.

Resolved, That we recommend our local unions to appoint local superintendents of franchise who shall work in conjunction with the state superintendent.

Mrs. Ella Wheeler, of Manistee, entertained the convention with a history of the kitchen garden work of that city, illustrating the work with a set of juvenile furniture, such as is used in the school.

We hope that the table of temperance literature introduced for the first time at our district convention, the success of which was entirely due to our corresponding secretary, Ann M. Hood, will continue to be a feature in our conventions.

The convention closed with a large and very enthusiastic mass meeting addressed by Mrs. S. F. Chapin, of South Carolina.

MARIA B. BRUCE, Rec. Sec. 9th district.

GRAND RAPIDS.—Our W. C. T. U. is alive and doing a good work. We have purchased a beautiful St. John and Daniel banner, presented it to the Prohibition club, and it now is suspended over our principal street, midway between the Republican and Democratic banners. It was "flung out to the breeze," just as Ben. Butler's carriage passed under it, on his recent visit here. We have also secured a pledge from the president of the Northwestern Michigan fair, that no intoxicating liquors will be allowed on the grounds during the fair to be held here next week.

The W. C. T. U. propose to occupy a tent, and distribute temperance literature, and serve a lunch with tea and coffee.

We have hung in different parts of our city, in conspicuous places, about twenty of the charts, "The Nation's Drink Bill."

We now have seven W. C. T. Unions in the city, and they are organized into a "Union of Unions" for the purpose of carrying on general work.

MRS. J. M. WHEELER.

MASSACHUSETTES.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts will hold their eleventh annual convention at the First M. E. Church, Wesley Square, very near Union Square, Somerville, on Wednesday and Thursday, October 8 and 9, 1884. Sessions at 10 a. m., 2 and 7 p. m. The exercises will consist of reports, addresses, discussions concerning methods of work, and devotional exercises. Each auxiliary union is entitled to two delegates, with credentials, who alone can participate in the business deliberations; but all temperance organizations of women in the state are invited to send delegates to take part in the discussions. All delegates are requested to wear badges of white ribbon. And all delegates, whether of auxiliary unions or not, will be provided with entertainment.

N. B. The Union Square, Charlestown street cars, that pass the Eastern, and Boston and Maine railroad stations, and the east Cambridge cars go direct to Union Square, whence it is but a few steps to the Methodist church, in Wesley Square. The Charles river street cars go directly by the church.

MARY A. LIVERMORE,
Pres. Mass. W. C. T. U.

ELIZABETH P. GORDON,
Sec'y. pro tem Mass. W. C. T. U.

MISSOURI.

LA MONTE.—The first annual meeting of the La Monte union, was held on Tuesday evening, August 28. The decorations were fine and in good taste. We trust that while the occasion was a pleasant one, some good seed may have been sown that shall spring up and bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of His name. A very fine program consisting of reports, recitations, readings and songs was rendered to a large concourse of intelligent people, who lent us the most respectful attention to the very close and expressed their satisfaction by frequent applause.

Except necessary correspondence with state officers, superintendents of departments, publishers, public speakers, and others enlisted in this glorious cause, we have confined the work of the pen to an occasional contribution for the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, New Age and LaMonte Record, together with the stated notices and reports of our meetings. In addition we have gleaned from other journals, statistics, letters and pithy items for republication in the Record. We have secured twenty-five ten weeks, and three yearly subscriptions, besides fifty copies gratuitously distributed of the memorial number, of THE UNION SIGNAL. Sometime since, a petition was sent by us to the International Sunday school lesson committee, asking for insertion in the quarterlies of a monthly temperance lesson, which I understand will appear quarterly in the regular course.

Though our weekly gatherings have not been omitted, with the exception of two weeks during a series of revival meetings held last spring, but have been sustained with unabated interest, yet it would seem that the union has been taking recess from active service. During ten months of the year, we have met in private parlors. Number of paying members, twenty-five, besides five honorary members.

Our treasurer reports total amount received, $44 32; paid out on orders, $26.41; balance on hand, $17.91. The officers for the current year are as follows: President, Mrs. Sarah Eastwood; corresponding secretary, Miss H. M. Harmon; treasurer, Mrs. C. G. Hall.

H. M. HARMON, Cor. Sec.

CONVENTION OF THE TWELFTH DISTRICT.

The second semi-annual convention of the Twelfth congressional district of the W. C. T. U. of Missouri, will convene at Butler, Bates county, Mo., Thursday and Friday, October 2nd and 3rd. Mrs. Hoffman, our state president, also Mrs. M. M. Clardy will be present, as well as many other good state workers.

GRANT CITY.—Our union numbers 42; organized two years ago last March, by Mrs. Cochran. We have not done as much as we might had our members all been more in earnest, but we have been enabled so far to keep the saloons out. We have in their stead three drug stores, and we shall strive very hard this fall to see that such men are put in office as will enforce the law to the full extent. We hold gospel temperance meetings once a month, on Sabbath evenings. We have organized our Band of Hope after the plan suggested by Miss Willard, and think it will be much more successful. We have a Reform Club organized by Mr. Holt one year ago. They meet once a week, also a St. John Club, of which some of our best citizens are becoming members. I must tell how much I think of THE UNION SIGNAL. I receive so much strength and encouragement from it, watch for its coming each week as for the visit of some loved friend. I have worked for it every chance I have had since I have held my office, and the list now stands, ten trial subscribers and eleven yearly. I think a canvass this winter will be more successful than ever before.

MRS. KATE GARDNER,
Pres. W. C. T. U.

WISCONSIN.

The Wisconsin W. C. T. U. offered the following circular to every visitor upon the Madison fair grounds. It was not only generally received, but generally approved:

"Our fair ground is invaded by saloons! They have paid the agricultural board high; they have paid the town officers high for this opportunity of defying the best sentiment of sober citizens; of tempting our young men and bringing disorder into our assembly. Think one moment what you wish. Express your sober judgment.

"If you desire that the saloon shall force its way everywhere, step up and drink; if you wish it to keep to its own place, turn aside.

"If you wish the great agricultural festival of the year to be a place of noisy debauch to which good citizens go with reluctance, step up and drink; if not, turn back.

"If you think the saloon should come where we come with our mothers, wives and daughters, step up and drink; if not, turn away.

"If you think our young men need this extra temptation, this unusual opportunity, give your money to these eager saloon keepers; if not, withhold it.

"If you feel that the many children who gather here have something good to learn from the saloon, by all means support it; if not, condemn it.

"If these crowded grounds require the recklessness of drunken men to make them agreeable and safe, then drink, drink at once and drink often; but if sober attention and gentle courtesy are in order, then bring your rebuke to these men, who seek their own gain without reference to the well being of others.

"We ask you to do what you do with a good purpose and a sound reason. To do it for God, and home, and native land."

Large posters, presenting the same appeal, were also put up wherever opportunity offered. It will be remembered that the W. C. T. U. made a strong effort to have the sale of liquors on the fair ground prohibited, but their plea was denied. One man, a German, on the town board, stood out to the last, and refused to sign the permit. For fear of the Law and Order League the saloons each have a license from the town of Madison, for which they pay $75, and also pay the United States $18.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

CLINTON.—A new W. C. T. U. organized here recently by Mrs. S. T. Ellis, enrolled sixty members. The Gleaner has received a letter from the secretary of said union, asking instruction with regard to the best temperance papers to be had and circulated. THE UNION SIGNAL and the N. J. T. Gazette, have been recommended.

NEWARK.—No. 1 union of this city are rejoicing in great prosperity, financially and spiritually. Eighty-four conversions have taken place since their new hall was dedicated. They have received from Gov. Ward's heirs, according to his promise in life to help them, $500 to help pay for their building. The reform club will occupy this hall on Thursday evenings. This club has organized for Prohibition and on Tuesday last unfurled their banner, with St. John and Daniel and our national motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," on the face of it. Thousands of people gazed upon that motto, and were led into the hall, by a band of music, where they were addressed by Hon. Thomas B. Cator, for over an hour. The ladies provided refreshments for speaker and guest, and left for home at a late hour with clear heads and cheery hearts. This union distributes a large number of THE UNION SIGNAL and other temperance papers. They also distribute one hundred copies of the New Jersey Temperance Gazette and fifty of the New York Witness as campaign documents.

WESTFIELD.—The W. C. T. U. of this place, dedicated their new hall the 10th day of September at 7:30 p. m. Chauncy Schaffer, Esq., and Judge Good, of Plainfield, addressed the audience. At this neatly furnished place the W. C. T. U. will hold their meetings. They give the use of the hall to the reform club on Thursday evenings of each week. The speaker's desk was furnished with a gavel and a box placed on the wall beside the platform for collections, its object lesson: "Help those women." The hall was beautifully draped with flags and decorated with flowers. A collation was served after the meeting adjourned to speaker and invited guests.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

TEMPERANCE SOCIABILITY AT THE CAPITOL.

A highly enjoyable breakfast party was given by Mrs. S. D. La Fetra, at Temple hotel, Washington, D. C., Saturday, Sept. 13, in honor of Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina. All of the appointments were in excellent keeping with the true idea of total abstinence, so perfectly pictured to the world by these queenly women whom the company delighted to honor. The party consisted of Miss Willard and Prof. N. J. Arbeely, of Damascus, Syria; Mrs. Chapin and Rev. Dr. Huntley, chaplain of United States senate; Miss Anna Gordon and Dr. A. J. Arbeely, late physician to the Turkish governmcnt; Prof. and Mrs. Wm. F. Mitchell, of Howard University; Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Cassidy, of Boston; Dr. H. J. Hunt, of Pennsylvania, and other guests of the house, and their friends.

After the repast, which was made delightfully social by interchange of thought and feeling, the parlors were made sacred afresh by that sweet hymn so dear to us all, "Blest be the tie that binds," after which Miss Willard offered prayer for the land we love so well, and for the strengthening of the broad circle of the W. C. T. U., unt ilall nations and all hearts shall respond to the "Home, Sweet Home" cry, whose chords vibrate in the lives and devotions of the hundred thousand women who comprise our matchless organization. H.

LOUISIANA.

MINDEN.—The memory of a very pleasant visit in August, from our state secretary, Mrs. Goodale, has not yet faded from our minds and hearts. On the 15th of that month, a large audience assembled in concert hall to hear an address from a woman! The address was delivered with grace and dignity, and was replete with charming thought, and excellent advice to the W. C. T. U. Twenty accessions to our union proved that good seed had been sown. The national temperance anthem was beautifully sung, and white ribbons and flowers were conspicuous.

Col. W. H. Jack, a lawyer, recited an original poem entitled "The Court of Death," with thrilling effect.

Hon. W. H. Goodale then followed with a timely and touching talk on temperance, and a scathing arraignment of the late legislature for obstructing our efforts at reform. The meeting then closed with the temperance doxology, and crowned with success. E. C. T.

ILLINOIS.

THIRTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

At 9'oclock on the morning of Sept. 10 the district convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the thirteenth congressional district was called to order on the fair grounds by Mrs. E. E. Orendorff, of Delevan, the faithful and energetic president of the district union.

After devotional exercises led by Mrs. Hart, of Jacksonville, Mrs. Morris Collins, of the Jacksonville union read the address of welcome. Miss Irene Smith, of Quincy, was requested to make the response on behalf of the convention, Mrs. J. P. Barnes, of Delevan, not being present. Although summoned to make the response on very short notice, she spoke with fluency and ease and earnestness. Under the head of reports of superintendents of counties, of unions, and of bands of hope, Miss Howard, of Arizona, was called upon and responded with a forcible and encouraging talk.

Arizona is famous for its immorality yet they have there a flourishing and hardworking W. C. T. Union.

Prof. R. E. Hudson reported for the progress of the work in Ohio. He asserted that the W. C. T. U. in Ohio has done more work for temperance in Ohio than all other organizations in 100 years.

Mrs. Kelley, of Chapin, presented a report full of encouragement and good tidings from which we make the following extract:

At our last election superintendents were elected in the following lines of work: Evangelistic, scientific instruction, railroad, UNION SIGNAL, juvenile, literature, and tea meetings. We have been holding monthly public meetings; have usua'ly had a program utilizing our home talent, with an occasional speaker from abroad. Not much has yet been done in the line of scientific instruction. As it is a new thing with us it will require sometime to effect much, but we are working and hoping. We have not done much railroad work. We have a box for our depot, which we expect to keep filled with good literature and a weekly copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. There are 12 copies of THE UNION SIGNAL taken. Our Band of Hope now numbers 80. We have introduced the military drill among the children which is creating quite an interest. We have distributed 100 leaflets at our public meetings, and as we have only recently adopted this plan, we hope to have a longer report next time. We have been holding tea meetings once a month to raise our assessment of $20 for state work, and with three of these we raised $29.20. So we paid our assessment and now have in our treasury over $30, part of this is dues but the greater part is money raised by the members and friends of our union giving a temperance cantata last winter.

Every alternate meeting of our union we have Bible readings which are quite interesting. The pressure against us is very great, for Chapin is not a temperance town.

The reports from all the unions in the district were in the main very encouraging. Mrs. Emma Kirkpatrick, of Monmouth, presented in a forcible and pleasing manner the subject of national, state, district and county work. She sketched the rise and progress of the crusade, and then the W. C. T. U. movement, and the necessity of the various divisions of the union work, the chain of organization of which the local union was the first link, the real work shop of the reform, and showed that all this W. C. T. U. work must be done systematically, and in a business like way, and their meetings must be attended conscientiously.

The last topic discussed on Thursday, was Woman's Ballot, by Miss Irene Smith. She acknowledged herself a recent convert to female suffrage. She was not for woman's rights, had all the rights she wanted, but was for equal rights. The ballot was the shortest cut to prohibition, and that was all she wanted it for, a means to do good. The liquor traffic always says "no" to putting the ballot into woman's hand. She made a strong and yet womanly presentation of the subject. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge gave the evening address to a crowded house.

Friday morning's program included the election of officers for the coming year, which resulted in the re-election of the old officers; a discussion on the raising of funds to carry on the work in county and district; a talk on "Finance" by Mrs. Kirkpatrick, who confined her remarks mainly to the importance of a state fund adequate to the needs of the work; and a "question drawer."

Prof. Turner arose when the questions were being asked and stated that he had more faith in the efforts and organization of women and children, than in bass drums, torches and military drills. He offered to donate the sum of $20 whenever the Jacksonville union should organize the children, including the colored children.

In the afternoon a number of excellent papers were read, including one upon "Why Unions Die," by Miss Jennie Harris, of Petersburg, which was a review of the various causes and considerations tending to the disorganization of unions and enumerating the kinds of work necessary to overcome such influences and tendencies.

Mrs. Susan M. Janes, of Jacksonville, had a remarka bly forcible, clear and exhaustive paper on the interesting and important subject of "Heredity." It was finely read and manifestly had been most thoughtfully and studiously prepared.

From the report of committee upon resolutions, which was unanimously adopted, we quote the following as especially suggestive:

Resolved, That since so large a proportion of every community is made up of tempted men and youths, and no legal enactment can ever make wrong right, nor evil good, we will use our utmost endeavors to secure local, state and national prohibition of the liquor traffic, and also as one of the sure means to this end we pledge ourselves to work for woman's ballot.

Resolved, That as a Woman's Christian Temperance Union we will do all in our power for the upholding and strengthening of the demand for an equal standard of purity for men and women, training our sons to meet this, and our daughters to require uprightness and virtue for virtue.

Resolved, That we recommend the same financial plan of work as that of the fourteenth district, and generally adopted by the districts of the state.

In the evening Mrs. H. M. Goldsmith, of Grove city, delivered an address upon "Revenue," which gave startling facts and figures regarding the enormous expense of the liquor traffic in the United States. Mrs. Kirkpatrick, Miss Irene Smith, and Rev. M. A. Hewes followed with earnest telling speeches.—Ex.

NORTH SIDE W. C. T. U.

CHICAGO.—The second annual meeting of the North Side Women's Christian Temperance Union, was held Thursday, September 11. The report of the secretary gave many interesting facts in connection with woman's mission in the temperance field, and cited numerous worthy acts that had been performed by the union during the past year. The treasurer's receipts, $950.83; expenditures, $947.74. Balance in the treasury, $3.10. The committee on Sunday school work reported that over 5,000 temperance leaves had been distributed, and the same number of tracts had been given out. Mrs. C. T. Boyce, the missionary of the union, reported that since February 1, 1884, 112 meetings had been held, 7 prayer meetings and 16 Bible readings, 165 visits had been made to families in the localities covered by the union, and more than thirty visits had been paid to those who were sick and suffering. The number of conversions were six, but a much larger number had shown a disposition for reform. Mrs. Sprinks, from the committee on fermented wines, reported that they had visited all of the clergymen in their district, and found only three who preferred to use fermented wine in the service of communion; the others all use a wine in which no alcohol is found. The old officers were re-elected for the ensuing year.

PROHIBITION RALLY IN LOGAN COUNTY.

On the 21st of August, the first Prohibition rally for Logan county, was held at Ophir Springs, or the Gold Mine. The township in which this rally was held is named Eminence township, on account of its hills. The place is lovely, grove, hills and cold spring water combine to make it beautiful. A number of speeches were made and a tall St. John pole was raised on the highest point of a hill from the side of which bursts forth as bountiful a stream of water, we fancy, as that which watered all Israel. We named the hill St. John's hill, and the spring which flows from its bosom is emblematic of the pure and sweet blessings which shall flow from the administration of our brave knight whose name it now bears.

The W. C. T. U. of Lincoln, presented the Prohibition forces with a new flag and three banners, the writer making the presentation speech. Upon the first banner was Iowa's motto, "A school house on every hilltop and no saloon in the valley," with the W. C. T. U. motto "For God, and home, and native land," on the reverse side. The second banner bore upon one side a reminder to all Christians to "Vote as they pray," on the other, the text "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," teaching that faith and works are inseperable and that Christian voters should show their faith by their works, that is, by their votes. The third banner is peculiarly our own, one side proclaiming "St, John our evangelist, Daniel our prophet," the other side, "King Alcohol we'll C to U."

St. John is an embodiment of the truest chivalry; he may not bend to kiss a lady's hand or wear her colors on his lance, but if he had the power would put into her hands an effectual weapon for home protection, the delicate, white ballot. We send him forth as our evangelist to preach the gospel of temperance, Daniel from the land of Mary is our prophet of what is to be in the near future. We commission him to interpret the bad dreams of the present political parties, and to send the ruling Nebuchednezzar, the Republican party, to grass, to feed with the beasts of the field and to be wet with the dews of heaven until they are covered with feathers and have nails like bird's claws.

The whisky men in derision have called our organization the "We'll see to you" and as many a true word is spoken in jest, we accept their rendering of our name and intend to see to it that their occupation is spoiled and that King Alcohol shall be dethroned.

SARAH L. D. CORTRIGHT.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Rev. W. P. Stowe is preparing a lecture on "Temperance Instruction in Public Schools."

—Secretaries of local unions please send their reports at once to Headquarters, 161 LaSalle street.

—Mrs. Rounds' time is all engaged up to state meeting and engagements are being made up to the first of November.

—Delegates and members of the executive committee will forward their names AT ONCE to Mrs. E. G. Hibben, of Peoria, for entertainment.

—The president of the new union at Warrensville, Du Page county, is Miss Martha Mullenix, instead of Miss Florence Williams, as was stated a few weeks since.

—Unions will note that only about two weeks remain before our state meeting. Will they see to it that delegates are elected, dues collected and forwarded, before that time?

—The Central Union of Chicago is to have a lecture course this winter, including John B. Gough, Miss Frances E. Willard, Mr. Robert Burdette, Mr. Thomas Murphy, The Nashville Students, and Mr. Thos. Nast.

—The opening exercises of the state convention will take place Tuesday evening, October 6. An executive committee meeting will be held Tuesday. The business session of the convention will open Wednesday, October 7, at 9 o'clock. Let all who are coming to the convention be there promptly.

—The following partial list of speakers are announced as ready to fill engagements the coming fall and winter: Geo. Woodford, Miss M. A. West, Mr. Thomas Murphy, Mrs. Jane Zimmerman, Rev. W. P. Stowe, (except Sundays), Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Capt. J. F. Linscott, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Engagements made by sending to Helen L. Hood, 161 LaSalle street.

—See Publisher's Department for full description of two invaluable campaign documents just from the press, The National Prohibition Farty; or, St. John vs. the Demi-John, and The Governmental Liquor Traffic. Unions will find both of great service, and it is most desirable that they be circulated freely. Price of the former 50c. per hundred; of the latter, 40c. per hundred.

—Unions will please order freely of Leaflet No. 7, "The Story of a Great Conviction," and the 4p. leaflet, "Temperance in the Public Schools." They are sent to the unions in Illinois for mere price of postage, 10 cts. per hundred. They should be circulated in every public meeting held by the union, at state fairs and other assemblies. N. B. These leaflets issued by and for the Illinois W. C. T. U., are sent only to Illinois unions at above rates. Price outside of Illinois, $1 per hundred.

—The following railroads offer reductions of one and one-third fare to those attending the state convention, full fare to be paid going, and the reduction given on the return trip: Illinois Central, Chicago & Northwestern, (from Chicago, Dixon and Freeport), Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago & Alton, (from Washington, Bloomington, or Delavan), Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, Indiana, Bloomington & Western, and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. The Illinois Midland, Peoria & Pekin, and Central Iowa, will sell round trip tickets. Delegates and members of the executive committee please report to Mrs. E. G. Hibben, Peoria, for entertainment before October 1.

MISSOURI.

CIRCULAR LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Dear Sisters of Missouri.—The great political parties of our state have nominated their candidates for governor of the commonwealth.

John S. Marmaduke is outspoken against restrictive legislation, whether of the Sabbath or of the liquor traffic. By sentiment and by practice he promises that moral barriers shall be torn down and the floodgates of vice thrown wide open for the destruction of our homes and our children.

Nicholas Ford, Republican candidate, is a wholesale dealer in the commodity that is an ever increasing curse to our land and a perpetual menace to the safety and happiness of our sons. He has pledged himself to the liquor fraternity, of which he is an honored member, that he will not favor restriction nor the submission of this question to the people's decision.

From these parties thousands of Christian men who fear God, who love righteousness and humanity, have withdrawn. They have nominated John A. Brooks as their candidate for governor of Missouri. Dr. Brooks' lifelong work has sought to elevate and ennoble mankind. Messrs. Marmaduke and Ford, by effort and example have sought to tear, to demoralize and destroy. As wives and mothers what should be our attitude in this issue?

In the name of the Lord who is our trust, for the sake of our homes and our boys, I appeal to you women of the W. C. T. U.— to you women of Missouri— "To you mothers who hope—mothers who watch and pray—mothers who fear and tremble—for you and yours the ranks of prohibition are filling and the army of Christian voters moving on."

Will you give your aid and sympathy, your influence and moral power to the right against the wrong—to the home against the saloon? How can you influence this election?

1st. You can scatter the printed page, campaign prohibition literature: THE ISSUE OF TO-DAY published by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association. In our state The Conflict and Life; and other literature for prohibitory legislation. See that it reaches every voter.

2nd. You can arrange for public meetings, where the issues of the day may be presented; where every heart and conscience may be brought under the white heat of truth. Agitate, agitate, agitate!

3rd. You can organize and drill the children, that with sweet melodies they become a power reaching all hearts. The Prohibition victory in Iowa was largely, very largely due to the women and children of that state.

4th. You can aid and encourage the forming of Prohibition clubs. You can influence votes in your district for the legislator who will favor submission; for the officers who will enforce law; and for the able, Christian gentleman, Prohibition candidate for governor, John A. Brooks.

You can create sentiment that shall crystallize into ballots for the candidates of our National Prohibition party.

The banner that shields the cradle is unfurled in state and nation. Will you gather beneath its folds? Will you, like Deborah, come up to the help of the Lord—to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

Yours for the homes of Missouri,

CLARA HOFFMAN, Pres. W. C. T. U.

SPECIAL CIRCULAR.

I want to announce to all of your patrons in Missouri that the occasion of the National W. C. T. U. convention in St. Louis, in October, will furnish the temperance people of this state rare opportunities for securing eminent speakers on the different lines of W. C. T. U. work. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, and its most gifted, eloquent advocate, will fill a limited number of engagements here immediately after the national convention. Mrs. Nelly Bayley, our inimitable temperance chalk talker, will talk to the little folks for a few weeks, if desired. Mrs. H. W. Smith, our worthy evangelist, will also tarry with us a few weeks, if desired. Miss Jennie E. Smith, whose labors for the conversion of railroad employes is simply phenomenal, ought to be secured for a few days in each of our railroad centers. Mrs. J. R. Nichols, superintendent of state and county fairs, ought to make the tour of all our county seats, wherever there is a union, and instruct them in this very important branch of service.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, the brilliant orator and able advocate of constitutional prohibition, both state and national, already well known in Missouri, should come to our aid just at this time, and last but not least, Mrs. Frances E. Harper, who does such good work among her own people, north should find many avenues open to her for the next few weeks after the convention.

It may never again be so convenient to secure the services of these eminent women. Address me at No. 20, East 6th street, Kansas city, for terms and dates. I omitted to mention the name of Miss Jennie Newby, who has labored so successfully in North Carolina during the past summer. She is a true daughter of Prohibition Kansas, and believes in St. John. She has such a sweet womanly presence and musical voice that I am sure you would all want to hear her if you should once meet her. She visited our headquarters this week, and partly promised to fill a line of engagements in this state during this fall and winter.

Applications for all the above named lecturers should be made to me as early as possible. Mrs. Clara Hoffman has engagements for every night until election. She deals strong masterly strokes for prohibition and our worthy standard bearer.

Yours for the destruction of the saloons and multiplication of churches and school houses.

IOWA.

STATE CONVENTION ANNOUNCEMENT.

The annual meeting of the Iowa W. C. T. U. occurs at Oskaloosa October 7-10, commencing Tuesday at two p. m., Miss Willard being present the evening of the 9th. A meeting of the executive committee will be held on Monday and the morning of Tuesday.

MRS. HOFFMAN'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Springfield, Thirteenth district convention Sept. 24, 25; Marshfield, 26; Lebanon, 27, 28; Ash Grove, 29; Lockwood, 30. Butler, Twelfth district convention, Oct. 2, 3; Frankford 9; Eureka, 12; Webster Grove, 13; De Soto, 16; Ironton, 17. Kirkville, First district convention, 28, 29: Albany, 31; Bethany, Nov. 1; Grant City, 3.

A LAWN fete, under the auspices of the Y. W. C. T. U. of Parkersburg, W. Va., is a recent noteworthy event.

The ground of I. H. Johnson, the genial editor of the West Virginia Freeman, were brilliantly illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and presented a beautiful spectacle. Two locomotive headlights spread their beams over the croquet grounds, where lovers of the amusement engaged in the game. Others strolled about over the grounds engaged in conversation, and still others were gathered inside to hear music. The city band was also present, and discoursed fine music. The refreshments consisted of a bountiful supply of the most delicious watermelons.

State presidents will please furnish me the names and postoffice addresses of all delegates elected, that certificates may be furnished to them, and entertainments.

Presidents of local unions please write to me for the number of certificates needed for all attending the sessions of convention.

To delegates and visitors to national convention. Will you please send to me for railroad certificates, to which you will sign your name in the presence of the ticket agent from whom you purchase your going ticket, signing on the line following the words "I certify."

2nd. Obtain thereon the certification of the ticket agent that you have paid full fare, with a description of the route of the ticket.

3rd. Retain your certificate in your own possession to be again signed by me at the convention, signed by a ticket agent in attendance upon the convention, and signed again by yourself, in order to complete identification, that you may purchase a return ticket at one-third usual fare from St. Louis.

Don't lose your certificate or you will be compelled to pay full fare home.

Send me your name, full address, in a legible hand, route you wish to take, and a two-cent postage stamp for return letter, that we may not burden the national treasury.

ST. LOUIS has 100,000 children under 15 years of age that are patrons of saloons and beer-gardens on Sunday, yet the Sergeant of police notified the Fourth Baptist church, corner of 12th and North street, that they could not hold an open air Gospel temperance meeting on their own church property. This is "personal liberty."

THE building known as the Gum Tree saloon, and formerly used for the purpose of dispensing liquid poison, has been rented by the Prohibition Club of Haywards, Cal. The grove adjoining the building will be used for holding public temperance meetings. One room of the building will be used as a club room, an other will be fitted up for a reading room

☞ All Business Letters and Communications should be addressed, and all remittances made payable to CHAS. E. S. FIELDEN,
161 LaSalle street, Chicago, Ill.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD has written an article entitled "The National Prohibition Party, or St. John vs. the Demijohn," which ought to be widely circulated by all friends of the third party movement. In leaflet form price 50c. per hundred, post paid. Address this office.

THE National W. C. T. U. seal can be printed on stationery, programs, envelopes, etc., at this office. State reports, blanks, leaflets, and all kinds of printing carefully attended to. Estimates furnished.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land," should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

THE Governmental Liquor Traffic, a most able article showing the partnership of the government in the liquor business, also extracts from the Internal Revenue Reports giving the exact amount of revenue derived from distilled and fermented liquors for each year from 1863 to 1883, the Raster resolution,—the propositions of Messrs. Blaine and Logan, with other facts of interest. Specially adapted for general circulation. Price 40c. per hundred, postpaid.

NEW PLEDGE CARD.—We have issued a new and very handsome pledge card, printed in two colors, price 60c. per hundred postpaid. Just the thing for W. C. T. U. workers to carry. In single and triple form. We also keep in stock Murphy pledge cards and ribbons, Band of Hope Badges, sample 10c. National Drink Chart, price 10c. Leaflets, etc., for distribution. Handsome lithographs of the Prohibition candidates, price 25c. each, the two for 40c. postpaid.

ON October 1 we shall have ready for issue our Band of Hope Manual and Text Book. It will contain twenty-four lessons, twelve for pupils of the grammar school grade, and twelve primary lessons. Besides these it will contain songs for the quarter, opening exercises, and notes and anecdotes illustrative of the lessons, in addition to full instructions for organizing Bands of Hope. The lessons have been submitted to and have passed the inspection of a committee of eminent physicians, which ensures their scientific accuracy.

The two grades of lessons have been prepared by Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. Mrs. Crafts is a primary teacher of national reputation, and these lessons are in her best style.

They will be issued quarterly, price 5c. per number. All Bands of Hope should be supplied with them.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

The great popularity of this preparation, after its many years of test, should be an assurance, even to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed.

It causes new growth of hair on bald heads—provided the hair follicles are not dead, which is seldom the case; restores natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthful and clear of dandruff; prevents the hair falling off or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER produces its effects by the healthful influence of its vegetable ingredients, which invigorate and rejuvenate. It is not a dye, and is a delightful article for toilet use. Containing no alcohol, it does not evaporate quickly and dry up the natural oil, leaving the hair harsh and brittle, as do other preparations.

Buckingham's Dye FOR THE WHISKERS

Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye, because it is harmless; produces a permanent natural color; and, being a single preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

MAKE THE MOST OF THE FAIRS!

To aid this object, and with Mrs. Nichols' approval, we have made up a "Fair set" (15c.) from which selections can be made of tracts for distribution. But people come to Fairs to spend money and the wise worker gets them to spend some of it for Temperance Literature. To this end we have made choice selections of pamphlets at popular prices, and new low priced but effective Cards from 3c. to 10c. per set and upwards. We keep $5 and $10 parcels already made up to send off at short notice, or those who prefer can make up their orders from "Methods of Work." These supplies have thus far given excellent satisfaction. "All sold out," and, "Delighted with them." Address MISS JULIA COLMAN,

As a table delicacy, very few things are superior to Ridge's Food. Recipes accompany each can for Puddings, Custards or Blanc Mange, etc., and unlike many preparations, the 'little ones' need not be denied when the dessert comes, but may eat their fill. It is safe and nourishing, being a concentrated preparation of wheat, thoroughly steam cooked in its manufacture. Sold by Druggists. In cans, four sizes: 35c., 65c., $1.25 and $1.75 No. 4 the cheapest for families. WOOLRICH & CO., on label.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10 cents for postage, and we will mail you FREE, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work all the time or in spare time only. The work is universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer: to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. I WANT AGENTS TO SELL THE MISSOURI STEAM Washer

And to intelligent men and women of good character will afford a liberal chance to test it before paying, and return at my expense if not satisfactory. It works on a new principle, and is, by common consent, the only washer worthy the name.

The Omio Furniture Co., Omio, Ks., write, "We did two large washings in three hours. We cannot say enough in its praise. Send six at once. We took the orders yesterday."

Mrs. S. E. Jordan, Harrold, Dak., writes, "Have washed everything from a lace collar to duck overalls. Does its work perfectly. Send 6 more at once."

Jac. Naumann, San Antonio, Texas, writes, "Am here to get the last 12. Ship 24 more at once." Mrs. Bettie Barnett, Central Grove, Miss., writes, "It has surpassed my most sanguine expectations."

Parker & Lewis, Nelsonville, O., write, "Ship 25 more at once. Mrs. Lewis will order again in a few days," and that's the way hundreds are writing.

This is no "penny-wiggle jim-crack," and no "penny-wiggle" agents are wanted, but men and women who amount to something, and want business, are invited to send for illustrated circular.

Signal Notes.

The women at Hazleton, Gibson county, Ind., raised a prohibition pole, a woman of seventy years assisting and rejoicing that she had lived to see the day.

St. John and Daniel Irrepressibles.—The Prohibition club of Oil City have opened their campaign headquarters in the annex to temperance hall. They have put out a transparency, and call themselves the "St. John and Daniel Irrepressibles."

One of the most singular sentences ever imposed was by Judge Krekel of the United States District Court of Missouri, recently. An illiterate prisoner was sentenced to jail till he could learn to read and write, and another offender was sentenced till he could teach the former the art. In a little over three weeks the prisoner appeared, able to write a fair letter at dictation, and both men were discharged. —State Prohibitionist.

The 43 Baptist churches of Broad Run Association, W. Va., representing a membership of 2,600, adopted resolutions at its recent session petitioning the legislature, at its next session, to submit to a vote of the people an amendment to the state constitution, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, in that state, and recommending that the power of their votes as well as the power of their influence be for prohibition.

There are some white men who are equally puzzled with the Indians to see the consistency of the laws relating to intoxicating drink. The Seminoles say, "The white man first licenses a man to distil fire water, then he licenses another to sell it, then he pays a policeman to catch those who drink it and take them to jail, and when they come out they drink and are put in again. Don't understand."

The United States consul at LaRochelle, France, says in a recent report that "all French brandy might properly, and perhaps ought to be, excluded from the United States on sanitary grounds." He adds that the so called "cognac" sent to this country is prepared from grain, potatoes and beets, and says: "Its characteristic effect is to produce an intoxication in which the patient is especially inclined to rage and physicial violence, while hopeless insanity is the inevitable consequence of persisting in its use.

The Western Indiana Christian Conference, at Darlington, J. T. Phillips, president, passed the resolution, "that pastors are requested to insist that the ladies of their charge organize Woman's Christian Temperance Unions." Mrs. Rachel Kenyon, of Westfield, Hamilton county, suggested that in accord with that a union at Darlington be organized, and on Sunday, at 2 p. m., one was organized, with twenty members. Ladies from Sullivan were present who had just organized a union at Mrrion.

A minister who had lately occupied the pulpit of a brother, was dining with the family of the absent minister, when the conversation turned upon the subject of teetotalism. The lady who presided at the table said, "Ah! I do not like your doctrines, you go too far in refusing the good creatures of God." No notice was taken of the remark for some time; the minister kept on with his dinner, but at last he said, "Pray, madam, can you tell me who made this?" pointing to a glass of water that stood beside him. The lady replied, "Why, God, I suppose." "Then," said the minister, "Madam, I think you do us an injustice when you accuse us of refusing the good creatures of God." Silence again reigned. By-and-bye he said, "Madam, can you tell me who made yours?" pointing to the glass of beer that the lady preferred. "I can't exactly say I can." "Then, madam," replied he, "allow me to say there is some apparent inconsistency in your first remark. You refer taking a thing that man has made to that which God has bountifully provided, and yet you accuse me of rejecting God's creatures, because I prefer water to beer. Madam, I leave the matter to your more serious consideration."

Mr. James C. Young, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, president of the North Western Loan and Real Estate Investment Co., offers some choice investments to our readers. He can give figures from which handsome profits can be realized. His financial standing is beyond question, and we cordially recommend any of our friends who desire to invest large or small sums to communicate with Mr. Young.

Persistence and faith are cardinal virtues of W. C. T. U. women. "It is no use to ask for constitutional prohibition," said a gentleman to one of our leaders, "It will take ten years to win." "Ten year!" she replied, "is that all? Then we'll begin petitioning this year, and there'll only be nine left!"

A TRIBUTE TO ST. JOHN.

If Governor John P. St. John should be elected president of this United States, there would be a perfectly unspoiled citizen in the White House. The elevation would not hurt him a particle, and the friends of today would still be his dearest friends tomorrow. Unassuming, modest, strong in his friendships and convictions, I believe there is no honester man in public life in America; no man more conscientious, more consistent in his teaching and his practice. Through a long, hard, single-handed struggle with adverse fortunes, St. John at last reached a high place and reaped high rewards, and he has come through the long flight with clean hands; without a smear or taint upon his character. And, strong and pronounced as are his qualities as a leader of men, an executive officer, an orator, the brightest traits of the man's character shine forth most brilliantly in his domestic life, in the social circle.

It has often been my good fortune to have him a guest in my home, and no man meets a warmer welcome at its doors. From the little woman whose voice will never bid him welcome to an earthly home again, down to the Prince, the whole house was glad when his well known voice was heard in the hall, and many a long afternoon and merry evening has flown away like an hour with anecdote, reminiscence, argument, suggestion, story of travel and adventure of long ago dropping from his lips. All children love St. John; and he knows how to talk to them.

Some of the best addresses to the little people I ever heard were made by him in the little villages of Ardmore and Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, to the most delighted audiences that ever listened to a presidential candidate. His voice, his manner is pleasing, easy and attractive; his eyes are tender as a woman's; his sympathies quick and earnest, and withal he carries in his well-poised head a stock of hard, honest rare common sense. He comes of good old Huguenot stock, as his name indicates, and "Saint" is the quaint and pleasant name by which his near relatives address him. He makes friends of men without apparently trying to win them; where he is best known his strength is greatest, and whether he polls ten thousand votes or ten million he will be the same St. John—a big-hearted, clear-headed, honest, consistent man. I am aware, by the way, that the Hawkeye isn't an overwhelmingly enthusiastic St. John paper, but then it is a great broad-souled paper that rejoices to speak the truth about a foeman worthy of its steel pen.—R. J. BURDETTE, in the Burlington Hawkeye.

THE New York Tribune's advice to voters is this: "The best course still open is that of independent earnest, manly criticism and revision by the people of the acts and decisions of whatever body or bodies shall henceforth assume to provide them with ready made candidates, whether for federal or for state offices. Treat all nominations simply as suggestions, to be followed or resisted as your own judgment shall dictate. A caucus of members of congress formerly made (in effect) both president and vice-president, that power was abused, and the people set their heel upon it. National conventions will doubtless in good time travel the same road and encounter a kindred fate. Meantime hear and heed all proper suggestions of candidates: then vote exactly as your own unfettered judgment shall dictate!"

IN the recent state election in Arkansas the democrats carried the state by nearly 50,000, a larger majority than usual. This is good news to temperance people when it is known that the state temperance convention declined to put a ticket in the field on condition that the democrats would nominate prohibitionists, which was done. With 50,000 majority in democratic Arkansas, 70,000 in republican Maine, and the cause of prohibition gaining ground everywhere temperance "fanatics" may well "take heart of grace."

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 38. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 2, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

The Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in St. Louis, October 22, 23. 24, and 25. Preparatory to this meeting, and in accordance with the usual custom, Tuesday, the 7th of October, will be observed as a day of prayer, that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon the convention and attend all its deliberations.

The Rev. Howard Crosby, announced in last week's Independent, that he should vote for Gov. St. John, not because he believed in the principles of the Prohibition party, but because he believed in the man.

The Capital, of Iowa, official organ of Iowa's W. C. T. U. does not see how we are to secure a prohibition congress by voting for St. John. The prohibition ticket if elected, will secure this congress, as the ticket will include congressional candidates as well as presidential. Every vote cast for the ticket will be a step toward national prohibition, territorial prohibition and the dissolution of national partnership with the liquor traffic.

The Rev. D. P. Livermore, writes us that Mrs. Livermore was in no wise responsible for the resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., which advocated a National Prohibition party; also that the position of affairs was vastly different then from now and therefore that resolution can not properly influence present action. We have had no desire to represent Mrs. Livermore's present attitude toward political parties as inconsistent, but only to point out that the W. C. T. U. over which she presides, is committed by its latest utterance, to a different policy.

E. W. Chafin, of Waukesha, Wis., has added a good method to those already pursued and the Baltimore Sun of recent date indicates that candidate Daniel has caught the same inspiration. A column on a prominent page of these papers has been bought for the campaign. Mr. Chafin paid $40 for the three months, and there he can print just what he will. This is an excellent way to "circulate temperance literature." We thus come into every home with our ideas, through the local press, and at no cost of precious time in distributing the same. All temperance workers please take note.

Iowa has a new state association. It is called the anti-prohibition association and is made up of liquor dealers, determined to overthrow the law of the state. Suppose a set of horse thieves n any state should band together in a state organization, hold public meetings in the towns and cities, advocate the open defiance of the laws protecting private property, and avow their determination to make them of none effect and to violate them on all occasions, would not the governor of such a state be justified in calling out the militia to suppress the rebellion? Gov. Sherman will not let this organized rebellion go unpunished if he is true to the promises he has made the Prohibitionists.

The Northwest Iowa Conference of Methodist ministers at its session just closed, passed the following "stalwart" prohibition resolutions:

That as the Republican party of this state has indorsed prohibition and given us our present excellent law, we will stand by the nominees for state officers of the party in so far as they are known to be personally in favor of prohibition; but as we were men before we were partisans, we will in no way consent to a stultification of our manhood by voting for nominees for offices who are known to be hostile to constitutional or statutory prohibition, no matter by what party nominated.

That we emphatically repudiate the idea that prohibition is not a national issue, but do most earnestly affirm that it is the duty of the general government to suppress the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia and all the territories of the United States, and to suppress interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, which interferes largely with the execution of prohibition laws in states where they exist, and also to prohibit the importation and exportation of intoxicating liquors.

"O you ought to come with us," said a Republican college professor to a keen-sighted, level-headed Prohibitionist, the other day.

"Why should I go with you?" was the rejoinder.

"Well, because the majority of the Republican party are temperance men and you will get prohibition by us sooner than in any other way."

"You say the majority of the Republican party are temperance men, do you?" returned the other. "Well, I think perhaps it may be true, but if so, why under heaven do you keep truckling to the whisky minority, and above all, why do you ask me to come and truckle along with you?"

The college professor subsided.

The Northern Christian Advocate justifies its partisan (Republican) utterances after declaring for a non-partisan policy, by saying that the Prohibition party encroachments on the religious press necessitate the exercise of partisan liberty and the removal of restriction upon partisan utterances. The official organ of a society, whether ecclesiastical or benevolent, ought in our opinion to be open to the expression of the views of the various members and officers of the organization, no matter how varied these views may be. If the organization has determined upon a certain policy, the organ should shadow forth and champion such policy. The general conference of the Methodist church has expressed the opinion that Methodists should not permit themselves to be controlled by party organizations that are managed in the interest of the liquor traffic. The official organs of this church it would seem, should therefore promulgate this opinion in their respective columns.

Listen to "Aunt Hitty" on "Throwing away your vote." "Wal now, Jonathan, mebbe yere right, an then agin, mebbe yere wrong. I spose 'tis ruther agin a man's pride to be a doin suthin that can't count right away, but if I recollect rightly, the Lord hes allerz hed a way of askin people to do jest that sort o' thing for righteousness sake. Don't ye mind them seven air walks roun' Jericho, one walk a roun' a day thet never amounted to nothin. I spect some of them ole Israelites pestered Joshua's life half out o' him, runnin' up every day or two an sayin' whinin like, "Don't ye see Joshua, yere jest throwin' away yere walk?" But Joshua kep' right on, coz God had commanded of him tu, an I guess thet's the best thing you kin do, Jonathan; keep right on votin' prohibition, blowin' ram's horns an all thet, an bime-by 'll come the long blast, an Jericho'll be flat before yere face an' eyes."

The steamship City of Rome, Inman line, has recently afforded such a disgraceful scene of mid-ocean gambling and drinking as calls for indignant remonstrance from the traveling public. There were quite a number of ladies among the crowd of passengers, who found themselves practically shut out from the library by a class of the male passengers who carried on smoking and gambling there, though they had another large room, called the smoking room, to themselves. A number of gentlemen who were unfavorable to the gambling and smoke nuisance sided with the ladies, and a big smoker knocked down a little remonstrant on Sunday. A scene of great indignation and confusion followed on both sides. Complaint was also made of the smoking and gambling to the steward, who would do nothing, and a remonstrance was drawn up to the owners and officers of the City of Rome, which was signed by a large number of the aggrieved passengers of both sexes.

The open bars of all steamship lines need crusading. While nearly all forbid the service of grog to sailors, they leave open a wide door to drunkenness on the part of passengers, and unpleasantness, if not danger, is the consequence.

WAIT ON THE LORD.

ANNA HOLYOKE HOWARD.

"Our help is in the name of the Lord."—Psalms cxxiv: 8. "I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait, and in His word do I hope." "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning, I say more than they that watch for the morning."—Psalms cxxx.

We look to Thee, most gracious Lord,
With prayerful, steadfast eye,
Our trust dear Lord, is in Thy word,
Oh! hear Thy children's cry!

How long, O Lord! How long shall sin
And Satan ride apace?
How long, O Lord! shall evil win
And triumph in the race?

Arouse Thy slumbering church O Lord!
To hear the groans and cries
That daily from ten thousand hearts
In intercession rise.

Direct us, Lord, and send us might
When Satan's hurts assail,
Thou only canst defend the right;
With Thee we must prevail.

WHY VOTE FOR PROHIBITION?

MRS. ANTOINETTE CONKLING.

This may seem a strange question to be considered by those who are supposed not to vote at all yet I have been gravely asked by a politician if I am going to vote for prohibition and I as gravely answered yes. We do not believe with a certain loved and honored bishop that the Christian women of this land are responsible for the continuance of polygamy in Utah. Neither can the sin of intemperance be disposed of in that convenient manner. The scape-goat refuses to be led into the wilderness bearing away the sins of the lawmakers. Yet as voting is defined to be the expression of the mind, will or preference, either by voice or ballot I doubt not that every one in this sense will vote. True, the greater portion of us will only be permitted to vote by voice yet to every one of us this question is pertinent. First then and chiefly we should vote for prohibition, because it is right in principle and cannot therefore be wrong in practice. To argue before an intelligent audience that it is right to prohibit a great wrong, the fruitful source of nearly all other wrongs would surely be a waste of words.

The right to prohibit what is detrimental to the physical or moral welfare of the people is one of the oldest and simplest functions of all government, human or divine. It is curious to note in this connection that the first prohibitory law given to the race in its representative heads was one which in modern times would be termed a sumptuary law, viz., "Of the fruit of the tree that is in the midst of the garden, thou shalt not eat." Thus in the glad dawning of creation's morn, while earth was yet bathed in the dewdrops of its christening, did He who made man and knew what was in him, prohibit, not regulate, the indulgence of harmful appetites.

Then we should vote for prohibition because it is practicable. By this we mean that prohibitory laws can be as well enforced as other laws. That they are so enforced now in several of the states cannot be doubted by those who take the pains to investigate. That they will be enforced in others despite tombstones and revolvers is morally certain. The sentiment that secures the law sustains it, and the enforcement of the law soon crystalizes public sentiment. But we are told that while such legislation is right it should be kept out of politics. "Politics is the science of government....the protection of citizens in their rights and the preservation and improvement of their morals." How legislation upon any question in which a moral issue is involved can be secured without trespassing upon the domain of politics we should like to know.

But keep it out of party politics. Vote upon it separately, keep it free from entanglements with other questions and with party candidates. Experience has proved that men elected upon other issues do not, as a rule, feel bound to enforce prohibitory laws, their official oaths to the contrary, notwithstanding. Nor can we expect it to be otherwise. We must make a square issue, and elect men pledged to the enforcement of such laws or they will be dead letters.

We are told that it is perfect folly to organize a National Prohibition party because it would take at least fifty years to secure a ratification of constitutional amendment by three-fourths of the states, but that a state amendment can soon be secured in nearly all of them. We wonder how much greater our country has become than the sum of its parts. There are, moreover, cogent reasons for a national administration elected upon prohibition principles. The revenue department has the power to grant a license for the sale of liquors, even in states where a prohibitory law has been enacted, thus defeating the will of the people of the state. It is asserted that no state law can prevent the introduction to the state of liquors direct from foreign countries, while the national government protects it. A prohibition administration could prevent the importation of all foreign liquors. It could prevent their manufacture and sale in the District of Columbia, and in all of the territories. It could enforce the laws prohibiting its sale to the Indians. It could withdraw its protection from liquor dealers abroad. It could dissolve partnership with the traffic and cease to foster the views of the people, in order to reap four-fifths of the accruing profit. It could submit to the states a national prohibitory amendment. All this at least, could be done by a prohibition president and congress without an amendment, and yet we are assured that such election would have no immediate bearing upon the question. The friends of the traffic know full well that its bearing would be both immediate and weighty. True, one would suppose that even a reasonably sober administration might do some of these things, but that is merely a supposition. In short we would agitate this question at a national election because it is a national question, and can be settled at no other time, and in no other way. But is not present separate action premature? Should we not wait patiently until public sentiment shall so change that one of the existing parties shall accept it as a part of their platform? Let us see what is the outlook. One of the great parties in its national platform has planted itself so squarely against this reform that there will scarcely be space enough in the remainder of the nineteenth century for it to wheel about gracefully in. True, the other leading party has, in a few of the states, espoused the cause of the people, and fought a good fight. All honor to whom honor is due. But we cannot forget that in others they have received with defiant scorn, and even jeers the petitions of those who helped to elect them, and thus insulted American citizens in the exercise of one of their most sacred rights.

In their national convention they have refused all recognition of the temperance sentiment of the party or the country. Their nominee for the highest office in the land is in favor of "making the tax on spirituous and malt liquors a permanent resource to all of the states," thus giving to each state in which we are exhorted to work for prohibition a permanent financial interest in preventing its accomplishment. They have chosen for his assistant one who desires to make our school fund largely dependent on the liquor traffic for its support. It would then become a patriotic duty to drink whisky for the benefit of the rising generation. Indeed many of our legislators seem to have been acting upon this latter principle in advance of special legislation. Their nominee for governor however thinks one gallon of beer per day sufficient for a laboring man. So the party in this state must be rapidly tending toward a prohibition platform. But seriously are great reforms in church or state usually wrought through existing organizations? Did Luther reform the Romish church? Did Wesley make the English church of his time a model of purity? Did the anti-slavery men who clung to the old Whig party make it an anti-slavery party? Nay verily but from these organizations the better elements went forth to form new combinations and to be God's instruments for the accomplishment of His own grand purposes. History is ever repeating itself and it needs but a glance at the political horizon to discern the signs of the times.

Briefly to recapitulate we would vote for prohibition because it is right, because it is practicable, because all other methods of dealing with the question have proved impracticable. We would not keep it out of politics because we could not get it out if we would. We would treat it as a political question because we believe it to be the most important political question before the American people. We would vote for it in connection with candidates pledged to its enforcement, because we already have enough ornamental temperance legislation to gratify the most æsthetic taste. We would do it through a new organization because we cannot do it through existing ones.

We would do it in view of all that our national government is doing to encourage the vice of intemperance and in view of all that a prohibition administration could do to discourage it even without a constitutional amendment. We would vote for it in this year of our Lord 1884, because we believe the time has come to call a halt in the weary, sad procession marching hopelessly to the drunkard's doom. Because we believe that He in whose ear the wails of the perishing are heard above the battle cries of partisan strife bids us break every yoke and let the oppressed go free. Because we would remember the hungry when we pray, "Give us this day our daily bread." Because we would vote as we pray, "Thy kingdom come."

WHISKY HERALDRY.

REV. LEWIS MEREDITH.

One of the things to which the proud aristocracy of the Old World clings, first and last, is the heraldic crest, viz.: the peculiar little emblem which belongs alone to such and such a family, and which is emblazoned on their gold and silver plate, and on all their equestrian equipments.

We don't know whether it originated from a desire to give the business a sort of dignified send off or not, but it is a fact that the liquor selling taverns of the old countries participate in this heraldic feature. Each one has an emblematic crest or "sign" above the door; and whatever that emblem may be, such is the name by which the house is known. A wonderful variety characterizes this sign lore. Creation through has been laid under tribute to bring supplies thereunto. Earth, air and sea, field and forest, beast and bird, insect and reptile, and man's avocations and ingenuity, have all contributed their share to dub the wayside inn with its own peculiar crest or sign. There is any number of horse inns or hotels, of any and every color: "The Black Horse Inn," "The White Horse Tavern," "The Elephant," "The Unicorn," "The Eagles," "The Red Lion," "The Golden Lion," "The Swan," "The Raven Inn," "The Goat," "The Boot," "The Blue Bell," "The Beehive," and any number of others, are names and pictures in the whisky heraldry with which one's eyes and ears grow strangely familiar in those latitudes.

In this motley crew of ensigns one runs against some strange apparitions. Even the much-abused ass is found among them. "The Ass Inn" was at one time one of the most popular taverns in one of the towns of the English lakes. George IV. stopped at this hostelry during one of his royal peregrinations. In honor of this occasion the landlord thought he must do something handsome in order to manifest his loyalty. He changed the name of his house into "The George IV. Hotel;" which resulted, of course in taking down from over the entrance the representation of the poor ass, in order to make room for a large painting of the royal visitor. There was another Boniface in that region who was shrewd enough to have been a born Yankee. He saw in this a good opportunity, Knowing by what name the other house had made its reputation, he at once adopted the discarded sign for his own; and when the season came for the usual arrival of the tourists, he kept his runners ready to meet the enquiry for "The Ass Inn." The stream of custom was turned; and "George IV." suffered so much in consequence, that the frightened host was driven to a desperate expedient; not daring to take down his majesty the king, he still wanted to have the public know the trick played on them, in order to induce them to come, as before, to the proper house; so he had printed in large letters under the royal portrait: "This is the real Ass!"

One peculiar thought in connection with this heraldry of rum is the significance there is in every sign when held in the lurid light of the traffic carried on beneath it. All the horses represented in this array are vicious brutes, sure to throw every rider and upset every vehicle harnessed to them. Whisky carriers and conveyances have only one destination for all who trust them—ruin. These "elephants" are not the sagacious and trusty quadrupeds suggested by the name, but rather reminders of the terrible and destructive "rogue elephant," described by Baker in his "Rifle and Hound in Ceylon." These lions and unicorns and eagles and ravens are cruel beasts and birds of prey. The visitors at The Boot Inn are unceremoniously booted out when the money is gone. Those who go after the honey of these beehives never escape the fatal sting of the bees. Those who take passage on board these "ships" are doomed to certain shipwreck. The frequenters of The Goat Inn are in sure training for a place among the goats at the last day.

A tourist sauntering along in one of the towns of Lancashire one day, saw the sign: "The Flitch of Bacon Inn." "Ah!" he thought, "many a poor man's flitch of bacon hast thou filched into thy larder." In another town in Great Britain there is a sign which is strangely characteristic of the whole traffic. It is "The Labor in Vain" tavern, and the sign board has on it the picture of a negro in a tub, and a Caucasian on the outside trying to scrub him white; and underneath, the words: "Labor in vain." If this black traffic could be got into a tub of sufficient dimensions and the hands of all the distillers and brewers and saloon keepers in the world, and of all other friends set to work to scrub it white, and make it respectable, it would still be "labor in vain." And over the whole picture would pass the muffled thunder of holy writ: "For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me, saith the Lord God."

THE MISSION OF THE KNOT OF BLUE.

MRS. C. R. VAN OSDELL.

"Come boys, take a drink." The words rang out on the morning air, and looking up, the passer by saw a man of grand physique, with half a dozen followers, entering a saloon. He was commanding in appearance, genial in nature, and made to lead, and yet what was he doing with his many God given gifts? He was treading them beneath his feet as he followed hard after silliness. Harry was the subject of the most soul-thirsty, cruel and relentless master of our land, one in whom all the hellish powers seem combined, by name Alcohol.

Strong to drink, he was one to which the weak could point as an example, forgetting that they themselves ought not to dare to step where he could enter with even tread. All loved his ready wit and generous heart. Over him the good wept. At home a loving wife saw his downward course and prayed "Oh! Father, save him." He saw her deprived of the comforts of life, saw her tearful countenance, yet the tempter held him fast. At last the swift messenger came, and without one moment's warning his beautiful boy was borne on the bosom of angels to the better land. A great loneliness filled his home, and a tiny voice called him to a better life. But now he turned to the cup to bury his sorrows. His wife was an earnest worker of the W. C. T. U., and found consolation in fighting this, her worst of foes.

A temperance meeting was in progress. The fingers of wives, mothers and sisters were tying on the blue ribbon upon those they loved and with each ribbon there floated up to the ear of God a prayer,....God save them and give this little blue knot a power for salvation. At the evening meal after a day of earnest thought and prayer, our friend's wife said, "Come Harry with me to the temperance meeting and hear the new speaker, he will do you good."

Harry thought a moment, saw the tenderness and love that lay beneath the request, could feel little fingers clasping his, and hear a sweet voice saying, "Come papa," and consented.

The house was crowded, every one noticed him as he entered, and many heads bowed in prayer as he took his seat. The voice of the speaker held him with a strange and new-born interest, showing the evils of this monster, and how strong the cords at last become, that at first seem but a thread, to be broken at will by the victim. In word pictures he set forth the woes of a drunkard's family, the tears of wife and children and at death the despair of the ruined soul, until a deep sigh of relief filled the room as the voice of the speaker ceased.

Then the little blue ribbon must needs do its work. A young man put it on, bravely saying, "I have no need, but it may help my friends." A father, whose head was whitening with the frost of time, took it, that Edward, his boy, might follow father's example.

Then there came a poor trembling old man, who wept over his lost life, and whose unsteady hand could not write his name unless another held the pen for him. A fair maiden tied on the blue ribbon, and whispered, "God help you, Grandpa."

The tears started and heavy sobs came, for it had been long since one had called him such. A little fairy with golden hair and eyes of blue had died of sorrow and neglect. The last faint whisper was, "Grandpa, meet me in heaven." He went home, holding fast on to the little knot of blue, and in his closet the angels saw the old man kneel, and heard the earnest cry, "Save me." The Savior lovingly whispered, "Though thy sins be as scarlet," in the redeeming blood they shall become "white as snow." An angel form fair and gentle clasped its arms around his neck, and in accents of heaven exclaimed, "Grandpa!" The old man clasped the angel, bowed his head, and in the morning the kindly neighbors found him. His soul was saved.

So the good work of the knot of blue was being done. And where is our friend Harry. With a firm step he too passed up with the others. The kindly hand of a clergyman led him (God bless our clergymen), and the little blue token of a new life was placed upon the lapel of his coat. Many were the warm handshakes and God bless you, as he went out. As for his wife the stars danced strangely, and she could hardly see. A moisture dimmed her eyesight, but her heart kept time with the stars. At home, soon the sleep of the blessed was theirs, God had his angels near them.

Morning came and our good Harry awoke, dressed, and as his wife was resting, he passed out into the morning air, and according to habit into the next door saloon. He had forgotten the night before. He stepped up to the counter and ordered his usual drink. Taking the offered glass he was about to put it to his lips, when looking opposite him, in a looking glass he saw the little blue knot. Down went the glass, and he rushed out of the saloon. The astonished saloon keeper picked up the fragments as best he could, muttering, "What ails the man?" The little blue ribbon had performed its mission. He never again touched the vile thing. Thank God for this means of grace. He was saved and today Harry is doing much good. He has developed into an orator and has faced the enemy even at the point of a pistol. He holds his audiences spellbound as he pleads for temperance and for prohibition. A saloon keeper wrote him, "Mr. B. I am coming to meet you and one of us must die." He answered, "Be prepared to die, for I am not the man." The saloonist chose the better part of wisdom and never put in an appearance.

So the mission of the blue ribbon is blessed and we know our enemies look upon it as the forerunner of their still greater foe, prohibition.

If our fingers tingle with love for souls, we may do a mighty work for Christ, with the little knot of blue always tying it into our prayers.

SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS.

MISS C. S. BURNETT.

No. 14.—Our Duty to the Fallen.

Have you ever helped the drunkard to become a better man?
If you have not from this moment do for him whate'er you can,
He's your brother, though so fallen, and his keeper you must be;
Talking, coaxing, helping, loving, is the work for you and me.

Sisters, in our efforts to secure effective legislation and the proper education of our youth in regard to the nature and effects of alcohol, and at the same time to extend our borders until every community in our land shall be reached, is there any danger that we shall forget that we are also called to "rescue the perishing"?

The temperance work in the beginning was only a work of reformation. To this has been added that of education, and now comes largely the call for legislation. But the poor drunkard, bound by the strong cords of appetite and lust, still appeals to us for help. Shall he ask in vain?

"What can I do?" you say. I do not know just what you can do, but you can at least say a kind word. Do not wait for an opportunity to do something great, but do the work that is nearest at hand. It may be at your own door. Make a special effort to save some one. In your efforts go not alone to the low, but to those who have wealth, those who have education, those who have genius—but go in the spirit of kindness. Yes, kindness will open the door to the heart when all other forces clamor in vain. Men are not saved by standing off and beckoning to them, but by going down to them and giving them the helping hand. This is the sure road to the heart.

Is it not a noble work to lure from their thralldom the victims of this most cruel habit, and to help the weak and needy? We ought at least to try to lift them up to a true manhood. It is possible that you may incite in some one a desire for reformation. If you reach but one soul you will be rewarded for any sacrifices you may make. Will you make the effort? Again, we must help those who have taken the first step. If we expect our work to be lasting we must exercise a continual care over those who have been the victims of this habit and are trying to reform.

How often do we induce them to sign the pledge and that ends the matter. The signer is left to himself and a world of temptation. No wonder he falls. Are we not, as temperance workers, partly responsible for this? These men are not wholly free. The chains of habit are still clanking about their feet. We should not cease our efforts till every chain is broken; till they stand forth redeemed, saved, restored to perfect manhood. These men have a right to expect this of us, for "All humanity that suffers,

From humanity may claim,
A helping hand when reaching upward
To a better life again."

Can we refuse this helping hand and be guiltless?

TWO MORE CONVENTIONS: WASHINGTON AND VIRGINIA.

Dear Union Signal:—In the church of which President Garfield was a member, and whose elegant new edifice is a memorial of him, the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia has just held a two days' convention. Adorned with flags, mottoes and flowers, the mellow-tinted auditorium presented an attractive scene. Indeed I do not find the surroundings of any other meetings quite so womanly and tasteful as those of our own gentle sisterhood.

There is no attempt to imitate the conventions of men, but rather a thoughtful study to make the very environments suggestive of a homelike taste. It has been predicted that as years went by this distinctive character would fade from the manner, tones, and tastes of our workers, but my observation proves that the opposite is true. Every year the adornments grow more beautiful and delicate and as for the women, they have a steadiness, an equipoise and considerateness which give the best possible guarantee that they cherish the motto: Womanliness first: Afterward, what you will.

We have noble leadership in the District of Columbia. Mrs. Clara L. Roach has proved equal to many a great emergency and her hold upon the workers is evinced by another re-election.

The personnel of her "constituted advisers" is of the first quality and the departments of work well wo-manned throughout. All were sorry for the resignation of our genial Mrs. Sallie La Fetra, whose Temple Hotel is a delightful home for temperance people and testifies for the faith in the nation's focus of influence. At first my good friends seemed a little anxious lest I should speak of the Prohibition party, but the spirit of the W. C. T. U. prevailed, they were not willing to dictate any utterance and I had full course to speak out the faith that is within me. This faith has warm sympathizers in Washington as elsewhere, but the local situation is such that, beyond the expression of my individual opinion, nothing was said upon the subject. Sallie Chapin was here and her bright wit and earnest pathos did much to vary and inspirit the proceedings. She is with us for St. John. I have never seen this heroic worker in better heart or more effective as a speaker. Rev. F. D. Power, the well known pastor, participated in the evening meeting and expressed himself to me, as in sympathy with the progressive features of our work as I tried to outline them. I met at this convention for the first time, Mrs. Gen. Bidwell, of California, one of the leaders in that state, brought into our ranks by noble Mary Clement Leavitt's earnest words and work. Mrs. Bidwell is the daughter of Hon. Mr. Kennedy, superintendent of the census under two administrations years ago, and long an influential resident of Washington. Though moving in those "fashionable circles" last to be reached by philanthropic and other reforms, the family always took strong ground against intoxicants and this popular and lovely daughter of the household was willing to be considered "singular," even at Lord Lyon's table by drinking the "healths" in the only health-bringing beverage, cold water. When Gen. Bidwell came from California as a representative in congress, his noble nature and pure habits correlated so truly with those of this sweet girl that they were married and she went to the wine cursed state to be a help meet indeed, for one so royal as Gen. Bidwell must be from all the accounts given by Californians.

He is one of the leaders there, a man who pulled up a vineyard to plant table grapes instead, who believes in woman's enfranchisement and will vote for St. John and Daniel. He doubtless believes with many others of us, that only by building up a party which holds the balance of power between the two old ones, can the influence of the "solid" liquor vote in that state be offset and prohibition gained. It was indeed a delightful episode to meet this scintillating little spirit, Mrs. Bidwell, who at her husband's suggestion, came from California two weeks earlier than she had intended, that we might become acquainted and talk of the interests of the work beyond the mountains. It is probable that she will be at St. Louis.

After a delightful breakfast at Mrs. La Fetra's, with several distinguished people, among them Dr. and Mrs. Mitchell of the college (cousins of Mary Woodbridge and Maria Mitchell), Sallie F. Chapin, Chaplain of the senate Huntley, Professor Arbeely of Palestine and his son, et al., we wended our way to Petersburgh, Va., where we spent the Sabbath and introduced the work of the W. C. T. U. to a most conservative Virginia population. On Monday we reached Staunton and the convention of the W. C. T. U. of Virginia, mother of states and statesmen, develops peculiar characteristics. They are a noble, gifted people, but one skeptical toward "innovations." Yet even here, we have the outline of a grand work, pioneered by Quakers, "to the manner born," a people loyal to our cause always. It seems to me the quiet womanliness of these brave hearts, after generations of "equality" in home and church, is the finest object lesson of history in favor of doing away with woman's artificial and conventional "sphere."

Let her make her sphere, say I. "Heart within and God o'erhead," were always her guiding stars. Well, we had a lovely president in Mrs. Rebecca Wilson, of Lincoln, Va. She understood what she had to do, and with gentle dignity performed her part so well that she was unanimously re-elected. In Margaret Crenshaw, of Richmond, we had a recording secretary worthy of the place and in Mrs. Anna M. M. Fultz, the corresponding secretary, a lady beloved in Staunton, we have one of our choicest workers. She leads the Band of Hope, numbering 300, and at Anna Gordon's great meeting for the children, they marched in grand procession. Mrs. Maj. Newton is one of the pioneers, she welcomed me in January, 1883, when I founded this union, and has been true to its interests ever since. Rev. Mr. Smithson is its president, a true, courageous heart, who dares to stand up for St. John and Daniel. It is expected there will be an electoral ticket in the field, and Major Newton, Mr. Crenshaw and others are working the matter up.

Mrs. Judge Cochrane, of the University of Virginia, is treasurer. She helps on with the sinews of war. We hope she may come to St. Louis. A progressive woman, and great social power in that center of intellectual Virginia, we should be thankful that she came to us early and stands by us always. Mrs. William Pleasants, of Richmond, the former president, is known to many of us, having been present at Detroit. She "holds the fort" grandly at the capital. We were encouraged by the presence of several young ladies as delegates, one of whom, Miss Taylor, of Richmond, read an interesting report of the Y. W. C. T. U. We were entertained in the home of Col. Jed Hotchkiss, a distinguished scientist and enjoyed the company of his charming wife and daughters. Anna Gordon had a meeting for young ladies and the kind assurances of some leaders among them gave her much hope for the future. We had for the first time the pleasure of hearing an evening address from Mrs. Chapin to her own people and it was a rare treat. She held, throughout the evening, an audience (most of whom had never heard a lady speak before), by her spirited, pathetic and amusing accounts of the work, interspersing anecdote, argument and choice illustration from history and poet, with the unfailing fund of personal reminiscence in the recital of which she has no peer. It was "the beginning of much," that clear-cut talk of a southern lady to "her very own" and its motto was throughout "For God and Home and Native Land." These words cut in gilt, arched above her over the pulpit of the Lutheran church while she talked. More and more am I convinced that the subtlest essence of the 19th century spirit "upon the gospel plan" is with the work of the W. C. T. U. Yours in this blessed bond,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

En route, Staunton (Va.) to Chicago, September 18.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE ON NATIONAL POLICY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As one of "our women" addressed by Mrs. Foster in her letter in your issue of September 11, and in that "unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace" which she implores, allow me space to reply, which should have been made last week had health permitted. Mrs. Foster writes:

"I believe our national organization should maintain a non-partisan attitude toward the political questions of the day. I believe the spirit of our organization demands this, and that we shall thus soonest accomplish the overthrow of the liquor traffic."

The annual meeting of the National W. C. T. U. is composed of the general officers of the organization; officers of the state and territorial unions and of the District of Columbia; the superintendents of departments; the editor and publisher of our national organ, THE UNION SIGNAL; and delegates chosen as per constitution, aggregating usually about two hundred.

A plan of work is each year adopted, so broad, so comprehensive, that each state may choose therefrom lines of work which will advance the cause within its own boundaries. These are always "advisory, not mandatory," the same lines being impossible of prosecution in al states, as, for instance, prohibitory constitutional amendment, a work which we all approve, but cannot be pursued in those states where such amendments have prevailed, while in those states, some other line, (it may be, impossible elsewhere), can be adopted, all under the general scope of the plan of work of the National W. C. T. U. which organization is expected to be largely a conservator and mentor for auxiliaries.

As all officers of state and territorial unions and of the District of Columbia, women from the watch-towers, are members of the annual meeting, with delegates chosen at the annual meetings of these auxiliaries, none could more perfectly represent the constituency.

Such a body of women gathered at Detroit in October, 1883, with God given convictions of duty. From heart and lip continually ascended prayer for guidance; that God's will, not theirs might be accomplished.

They looked forward to a presidential campaign, with desire that some action be taken to prevent the strengthening of the liquor traffic (which opportunity such campaign always presents), and a consequent four years of moral and political degeneracy, which by lessening our intelligence and virtue would weaken the foundation pillars of our republic, and adopted the following resolution: "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes." Mrs. Foster says:

"I deplore greatly the attempt on the part of some of our ladies to ally our National Union with the National Prohibition party. I believe that the resolution passed at Detroit was never intended to thus commit us. I believe the convention would have laid the resolution on the table if they had supposed any such construction would be put upon it."

The women of the convention represented all parties by family, or by personal interest. Naturally each looked to the party of her choice with hope. So clearly had the people, north and south, declared for prohibition, it seemed impossible that party leaders could be deaf to their voice. Thus not by intent were we committed to the Prohibition party, neither at that time was "any such construction put upon it," nor did "some of our ladies" form the alliance, but it was the logic of events which afterward transpired. No other party met our demand, furnished any "embodiment of prohibition principles," or suggested the protection of our homes. Again she writes:

"It was an expression of our purpose to give individual personal influence in favor of political action embodying the principle of prohibition, so dear to all our hearts."

And to this we most heartily subscribe. The aggregate of personal influence is in increasing ratio, family, township, state, or national influence.

The National W. C. T. U. is made up of auxiliary state, district, county and local unions. The individual expression in the latter combines in the next higher, and the next, and on and on until the great national body brings this influence to bear upon some focus of power; in this case, upon national political parties, an action perfectly understood by the convention, as a memorial to be presented to all parties was endorsed independent of the resolution under consideration.

As directed by the convention, equal pressure was brought upon each political party to secure "the best embodiment of prohibition principles." Had the Republican, Democratic, Greenback or National party met the demand, to that party support we should have been pledged, and only because the Prohibition party did meet it, we are pledged to lend it our influence. Mrs. F. says further:

"But if the resolution does bind the women to give the influence of our organization to 'that party,' etc., still the action of the organization must be by states, and not as a National Union. All our W. C. T. U. women know that our plans of work are considered by states. Each one exercises its option as to plans proposed by the National Union. This policy has been fully set forth from time to time by resolution and otherwise."

But few states have held their annual meetings since the resolution was adopted at Detroit, but Michigan speaks with no uncertain sound:

WHEREAS, the dominant political parties have in their several state conventions entirely ignored the one living issue of the hour, viz., Prohibition, therefore,

Resolved, That we, the S. W. C. T. U. of Michigan, hereby express our sympathy with the National Home Protection Prohibition party, and the Union party of Michigan, as declaring the principles embodied in our national motto, "For God, and Home and Native Land."

The National Republican convention now in session in Chicago, has treated with marked disrespect the National W. C. T. U. Memorial presented to that body, and in the platform offered to the convention have studiously avoided any reference whatever to the Prohibition question.

Ohio said:

Believing that there is no interest before the American people of such vital importance at this time as the drink problem, we hereby affirm our great desire that congress will submit to the states for ratification the question of a National Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment. We further believe that temperance electors of all parties should support such candidates only as are in favor of such amendment, whether of the national or state constitutions.

Resolved, That we express our hearty and grateful appreciation to that political party which has adopted as a part of its platform the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Maine endorsed the national resolution without a dissenting voice, and this is being done by district and county unions. But a few weeks ago I saw a woman rise and endorse it by her vote whose husband is a Republican nominee for the state legislature. The word has just been received, "Stark County W. C. T. U. has sounded the tocsin note for advance; she will not falter." Praise God for His convictions to human souls, and His power by which they are heeded, though earthly hopes must fail. We rejoice that the adoption of the resolution has in no case been under "coercion" but in the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, of whom Salmon P. Chase has said, "When he called his cabinet together for the last time to consider the emancipation proclamation, he entered upon the business by saying, 'The time for the annunciation of the emancipation policy can no longer be delayed. Public sentiment I believe will sustain it, many of my warmest friends and supporters demand it, and I have promised my God that I will do it."

The remainder of Mrs. Foster's letter touching powers of congress etc., has been better answered by your able editorial than I could possibly do it. I must, however, express deep regret, which is shared by many of our women, that Mrs. Foster, to whose words we have listened with delight, should so strangely contradict her utterances of the past, and seemingly ignore the very interest which she has been instrumental largely in arousing within us.

As superintendent of the department of legislation she has devoted years to the advancement of prohibitory constitutional amendment, and with an effectiveness which could be attained only by making it a specialty. She has probably addressed more legislative assemblies than any other woman, in our body unless it be our national president, and has constantly advocated direct pressure upon such bodies state and national. A letter written to the W. C. T. U. of Ohio, in convention assembled at Youngstown, aroused the thought within us which resulted in the Ohio campaign of 1883.

In that letter after reference to Hon. Henry W. Blair's address to our national meeting at Washington, occurs these words:

"In view of these conditions, and according to the vote of the annual meeting, petitions have been prepared, asking congress to submit to the legislatures of the several states an amendment to the constitution of the United States prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors. They must be ready for presentation to the next session of congress. In the six months that remain there is abundant time for this work. Let the petitions be signed by presidents and secretaries of district unions, to be sent to their members of the house of representatives, and by them formally presented to that body. Also let these officers, presidents, and secretaries of state and district unions secure the signatures of the officers of all influential bodies, religious, educational, scientific, agricultural, civic and military, in the state or district to represent the sentiment of these bodies. Thus will all our women be represented through their representatives in the unions, and the great body of voters through organizations to which they belong. Thus I am sure can the "one million names" pledged by the convention be secured. Let us by popular agitation and petitions in the states, and by representative petitions and memorials from influential bodies, continually remind the highest legislative tribunal in the land of their duty in this great reform.

May the Lord work in us all "to His own will and pleasure" according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself.

Mary A. Woodbridge.

Since writing the above, Wisconsin and Minnesota have been heard from, the W. C. T. U. in state convention assembled, declaring clearly and pointedly for the Prohibition party.

SHALL I SUPPORT REPUBLICANISM?

Dear Union Signal:—"Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat."

The national Republican platform is partly good and partly evil. It has some good planks, and it lacks some equally good ones, which makes it a very weak affair. It is far from being that complete structure that the party ought to have made it. There is right and there is wrong running through and through it. The Republicans knew this when they framed it, and when they ask me to support it, they do it with the knowledge that it is a thing of commingled good and evil.

So also the national candidates standing upon it are both similarly compounded. Messrs. Blaine and Logan have in the main done good service in both senate and house of representatives. No one doubts their intellectual capabilities. Their oratory is good. Their influence is a power in and beyond the nation. But evil thus far also inheres in all they do. They are not practical prohibitionists. They stand ready, each in his own way, to tolerate the liquor nuisance. They recommend legislation in relation to it that will give it a firmer grasp upon our country than it has ever had in the past. They would each make it a source of revenue, an indispensable assistant in our economical and educational interests.

Mr. Blaine has shown his personal appreciation of prohibition, or that of his party, or both, by refusing to vote for it at the late Maine election. It is not worth as much to him as the saloon vote. The millions of money that annually would be expended in that state, should anti-prohibition prevail, and all the crimes and poverty and horror and death which it creates, will not compare in his estimation with what he and his party would lose by alienating the liquor obligarchy of the country from their standard. The whisky, wine and beer interests of the nation are of more account to him, and the company he serves than the sobriety, virtue and prosperity that would come as the result of prohibition.

In our own state Judge Rothrock, the amendment killer has been thrust forward as the Republican nominee for the supreme bench. He is a man of good talent no doubt. He is popular with the saloonists, a stalwart in his opposition to prohibition. The Christian, praying people of Iowa think one way; he thinks exactly the opposite. They vote one way; he voted to overthrow it. They create a good, wholesome law; he does all in his power to kill it. Just as good men, as to general abilities, and a great deal better as to prohibition, were before the late Republican convention for nomination for the judgeship; but leading men of the party, I am told, were heard, at Des Moines, with drunken oaths and earnestness assuring their hearers that Prohibitionists had ruled the party long enough, but this year Republicanism should be heard from. Hence Rothrock came to the front; more reliable men were thrust into the background.

Verily, there is good and evil in Republicanism as it exists among us today. It is a tree from which you can pluck some fruits that will be serviceable, and too much that will be damnatory in its results.

What shall Prohibitionists do under the circumstances? This, eat not of the tree of good and evil. Turn from it. Some of you have "traveled from ocean to ocean" in the interests of prohibition. Do not now stultify yourselves. Do not turn mother Eves, pluck, eat and fall from those pre-eminent heights to which you have attained before the American people. Above all do not tempt the very temptable Adams of almost all communities to do this foolish thing with you.

It is not therefore so much a question of "arithmetic," whether or not we shall stand by the Republican party, as a question of fealty to our Heavenly Father. No adroit use of addition, proportion and progression will be able to gather up all the elements of this great, most vital question of duty. These have not the data whereby to measure it.

No man, therefore—I cannot say what a woman might do—no man, unless he were one who would undertake to climb to the stars on sheet lightning, would attempt by "arithmetic" "to estimate the mental caliber, or the moral sense of an Iowa man," who determines between his own conscience and his God, what principles and platforms, men and measures are worthy of his support. The question of duty is too profound, too broad and high in its reach to be measured by any such infinitessimals. It must be carried up to the moral and sacred sciences before it can be properly measured and settled.

Ambidextrous, super-politic men,—men who pray one way and speak and vote in an entirely different way,—men who are stout Prohibitionists, and yet expect to do all they can to elect its opponents to office, may be induced to vote for the Republican party. I cannot do it. Both moral and sacred science unite in saying, Go not near the party, nor the men. At best it is a tree of mingled "good and evil." Pluck none of its fruits. As I live I dare not disobey my God. Let all men and women excommunicate me, and shun me, but may my Heavenly Father smile upon both my prayers and works, as well as words.

A CORRECTION.

Dear Union Signal:—Knowing the desire of our National President always to "have things set right," and that none are more eager than she to give due credit to the "conservatives" I venture to correct a statement made in connection with reference to Mrs. Woodbridge's speaking in "the most select Congregational church" in Portland, viz., that she was "the first woman admitted."

More than four years ago Miss Willard herself spoke in the church Sunday evening through the efforts of my brother, Dr. Carleton Kimball, who is a member of that church. As superintendent of the Sunday school at that time, and even before, he had temperance lessons, and it was my pleasure to speak to a union meeting of the Sunday schools in the audience room of the church about the same time. The present pastor, Rev. F. A. Bayley, is not only a most earnest temperance man but fully in sympathy with woman's work, and he gives no uncertain sound upon either of these questions.

By his request I spoke on Sunday evening in his church last October, and his delightful way of conducting the opening services were an inspiration. Mrs. McLaughlin also spoke there last winter.

As Mrs. Woodbridge and myself both belong to the Congregational church we like to have that abreast of the times in all good things.

ALSO THIS.

Dear Union Signal:—I beg a word in your paper in regard to Mrs. Livermore's letter. Her correspondent must have been under a strange misapprehension in thinking the "entire delegation of ladies" at the Pittsburgh convention desired "nothing broader" than the resolution adopted. I am very sure that the majority of the women delegates did desire a much stronger resolution and were disappointed in not securing it. You speak of one woman who tried but failed to obtain a satisfactory plank and I can certainly speak for another who exerted herself to the utmost in the committee on platform for the same object without success. Nevertheless I believe the convention including the committee on platform earnestly believed in woman suffrage, and any mistakes that were made were simply errors of judgment. Concluding all in charity therefore, let us hope that the next convocation of the temperance hosts may rectify these mistakes.

LEGISLATIVE QUERIES.

Dear Union Signal:—We, the state superintendents of legislative work, naturally look to our chief, the national superintendent as our leader. We have had entire confidence in her ability to be our guide. So, at the National Convention at Detroit, we understood her as instructing us to work for national prohibition as the most effective.

Imagine our surprise when we saw a letter from our able leader "deprecating" our action in relation to the Prohibition party. She says, "The prohibition of the liquor traffic is not the subject of national legislation. It must come by states, it can come in no other way, unless by an armed resistance to law in the states it should become necessary for the general government, as a war measure, to aid the states by military intervention."

We are ignorant of law, very, but would like to ask whether we could, even then, depend upon such "intervention" if the incumbent of the White House were a man who so feared to offend the higher "bosses" as to disfranchise himself?

Again—"as superintendent of national work I must keep myself free from partisanship" !! Does she?

There are states in this Union, New York and New Jersey among them, which owe no allegiance to either party on account of favors received—temperanceward. In the New Jersey legislature, last winter, our best friends were Democrats. Shall we therefore work for the Democratic party? Or shall we "throw away our votes" by working for Blaine electors, who cannot possibly be elected?

We need not speak of our need of instruction—you can perceive it. Meanwhile, waiting, we will trust the promise that "no good thing" will be withheld from us if we obey the voice which commands "Do right."

THE BOY WHO SAVED HIS COUNTRY.

ELIZABETH L. TATUM.

(A true story for boys and girls.)

The land in Holland is flat and low
And soon the sea would wash it away,
Had not the Dutch outwitted their foe
And built broad dikes to keep it at bay.

But the sea forevermore doth roll,
Roll and dash, and beat hard 'gainst the wall,
And if it could find the smallest hole,
The country would not be safe at all.

For the smallest hole might soon increase
And let in the water more and more.
And the work of ruin would not cease
Till Holland became old ocean's floor.

A boy, returning from school one day,
Discovered the water trickling through
A hole in the dike:—In sore dismay
He wondered what in the world he'd do!

He screamed for help! Not a soul came near!
How could a boy the great sea control?
He sank on the ground in anxious fear
And stuffed one small hand into the hole.

And he dared not leave to go for aid;
So there all night on the cold, damp ground,
In the dark he lay—brave though afraid;
And there in the morning he was found:

Some workmen passing at break of day,
Heard his loud sobs and piteous dole
As he wept the weary time away,
Keeping his hand thrust tight in the hole.

So his one small hand kept out the sea
Till strong ones came to mend up the banks;
And evermore a hero was he—
A hero to whom all Holland gave thanks.

* * * * * *

In our own dear land we've a greater foe
Than e'en Holland had in the mighty sea,
And it threatens to bring to endless woe
And enthrall for aye "the land of the free."

For it first enslaves, and then it despoils
Of houses and lands, pride, honor and will:
Both body and soul are lost in the toils
Of this cruel, crafty "worm of the still."

King Alcohol is this foe so dire,
And the floods he loosens upon the land
Both drown like water and burn like fire;
They poison the brain, and palsy the hand.

But our Bands of Hope we'll train for the fight,
And we'll drive out this foe from our dear land.
We'll work with our wills, we'll work with our might,
To help keep him out, we'll each give a hand!

THE TWO PATHS.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

F. M. HOLMES.

CHAPTER IV.—LEAVING HOME.

Notwithstanding his sad drinking habits, Mr. Somers had been a kind and indulgent father to his two sons, and they felt his loss bitterly. But Harry had no time to give way to his grief, for he was speedily made aware that the estate being mortgaged up to the last penny that could be raised upon it, everything would have to be sold for the benefit of his father's creditors. There was every probability that his brother and himself would be absolutely penniless.

Harry had already decided in his own mind what he should do. He would take the best situation he could find, and apply himself thoroughly to business. His recent experiences had made a man of him, and his boyhood now seemed to be far behind him in the past. But his difficulty was his little brother, and he did not know what to arrange for him. They had relatives, but none had offered to take him, and Harry well knew that nothing could be paid for him.

Harry was turning over these painful thoughts in his mind when he heard a tap at the door.

"Come in."

One of the servants presented herself, whose duty it was to look after his little brother.

"Please, sir," said she, "do you know where Master Teddy is?"

"No, I have not seen him for some time."

"He was in the garden last, sir, but he is not there now. I cannot tell where he is."

"Let all the servants turn out for the search, then, and all inquiries possible be made," cried Harry in alarm, and jumping up, he took his hat and went out to lead the servants.

All through the house and grounds they went, but no trace of Teddy could be found. Then they divided their forces, and some went one way and some another to search through the town and neighborhood.

At last Harry found himself alone and near the churchyard. It was a quiet and retired spot, and Harry, thinking Teddy might have strayed through it to some fields on the other side, entered it.

Almost instinctively his steps took the direction to his father's grave, but when he got near and obtained the first view of it, he paused, for he saw Teddy's little figure lying on it, and his little voice wailed, "Tum back, papa; oh, tum back! Teddy wants oo papa!"

But there was no answer to the child's piteous cry save the moaning wind in the churchyard yews. But still the child lay on the grave, and cried in heart-rending tones between his sobs, "Tum back, papa; tum back."

Dashing the blinding tears from his eyes, Harry hastily walked up to where his little brother lay, and taking him on his knee endeavoured to soothe his grief.

"Why doesn't papa tum back?" cried the child.

"He is dead, my child; he cannot come."

"No more?" cried the boy, "will he come again no more?"

"No," replied Harry sadly, "he cannot come again."

And then the child clung passionately to his brother and wept bitterly. "Don't oo go away too, bluller; stay with Teddy always."

And Harry soothed him and promised him that he would remain. And he never forgot that promise made under the whispering willows and yews of the old churchyard.

In a few minutes Teddy was comforted, and then the two brothers wended their way homeward. But Harry's difficulty was now so far solved that he had determined that Teddy should remain with him and share his lot.

Arrived at the house he found that some of the servants had returned from their unsuccessful search, and these offered to inform the others. But two gentlemen—his father's lawyer and his uncle—were waiting to see him to inform him that they had found a situation for him in London, to which he was required to go at once.

As the situation seemed to promise fair—it was a clerkship in a wholesale warehouse at thirty shillings a week—he was of course glad to take it, and thanked his uncle warmly for the trouble he had taken in getting it.

It was a post in which his knowledge of the French and German languages would be valuable, and these qualifications and his uncle's influence had obtained the situation for him.

"And now what is to be done with your little brother?" asked the lawyer.

"He will remain with me," said Harry firmly.

"With you!" exclaimed both gentlemen, in great surprise.

"Yes, I will take care of him. He shall share my lodging, whatever it may be, and in my spare hours I will teach him to read and write."

Much as they combatted this proposal they were not able to turn Harry from his purpose, and, perhaps secretly glad to find this difficulty removed, the two gentlemen allowed him to have his way.

Soon after this the two boys left their house for ever. Harry was requested to take up his situation at once, and he knew it would only pain him to be present at the sale and see strange persons handling the property that had been his parents', and should be his.

"Oh, poor, poor father," was his bitter cry as they left the house with desolate hearts, and made their way to the station, "if only you had not given way to drink how happy we should all have been. You alive now, and all this property still ours."

Alas, alas, that there should be thousands in our "merrie England" who could echo this wailing cry. Drink is indeed the curse of our beloved land—let us fight it with all our power.

There was one bright thought in Harry's heart that sad day, and it was the hope that by hard work, and the determination to practice the principles of total abstinence, he might yet one day, by God's help, be able to buy back the dear old home, or one like it, and retrieve, in some measure at least, the fallen fortunes of his house.

THE STUBB'S LETTERS.—NO. IV.

My Dear Peter:—I've just received your last letter. And right here let me say it's no kind o' use for you and me to have any mysteries. People that loves each other as you and I have ever sence you was a cooin' baby, needs for their own sakes to be plain and open, fair and square in all their dealin's, one with another. So then, when you write again be careful not to say, "I've heerd this, or that, or thus and so," but come out like an honest Stubbs and write the name ov the human bein' that says signin' the pledge is all nonsense for them as is intelligent and has a mite o' self control; and write the name too, ov that person as has bin a tellin' you that "whisky in the right quantity is a strengthnin' help." Bah! Peter, don't I know you've made acquaintance with a numskull, or a rascal—maybe the creature's both—and you're not quite willin' your strait for'rad homefolks should know as much about him as you do; and so you're thinkin' it's a preshus secret—this new friend ov yours—and you'll not introduce him to your plain old aunt. Ah Peter my boy, you're blunderin' sadly I'm afraid, in list'nin' to sich folks as don't even pretend to be tryin' to help their fellow mortals to be better or wiser. My advice to you is to drop all sich like a coal o' fire and be glad if you're neither scorched nor smutched.

And so altho when you read of poor old Mrs. Thompson's son, you thought you'd sign the pledge, which you'd felt some like signin' when you heard the temperance lady talk, yet you didn't sign it because you'd heerd 'intelligent people, and them as has a mite o' self control don't need to!' Well, everybody to his notion; but I must say for myself that I'm willin' to risk Solomon's inspired wisdom before any and all the wiseacres that takes so much pains to show they're extra smart by teachin' notions that never can be for anybody's good.

Solomon says in that book that we know as God's word, because it is His word, "Look not thou on the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." If that means anything it means "put yourself as far from danger as you can;" and it means too that wine even, not to say the pizen stuff sold under the name of whisky, wine even at the last, is as certain death as the bite ov a pizenous reptyle.

Now the truth is, intelligent people are them as understands the words o' warnin', and gets out o' the way o' danger; and the safe sure way ov gettin out, and keepin' out o' sich danger, is to sign the pledge and keep it.

Self control indeed! Bah! what a mint o' counterfit wisdom might be coined out o' them brains as sets some flipping tongues to pratin' about self control!

Why, Peter, self control as talked about by the enemies o' total abstinence, is the same old rock over which nine-tenths of all the dead drunkards have stumbled into hell. They didn't mean to be drunkards, but ye see, they didn't git as fur away from danger as they could; and so while they was playin' with the serpent it stung em to death, and their naked souls have gone to their last account without a ray of hope to scatter the dreadful darkness.

That silly thing about "whisky taken in the right quantity," needs a letter all by itself. It's one ov the things the temperance lady talked about in our church last week and I'll write about it next time.

Write soon, and freely to your loving

Thornbush, Ill. Aunt Jane.

True worth is in being, not seeming,—
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by and by;
For whatever men say in their blindness,
And in spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

ROUND THE CAMP FIRE.

Dear Children:—Here is a letter that suits me exactly, especially the "temperance corn." I know that this is not the season for planting, but I want you to put this away for use next spring—not merely for the sake of the Harvest Home festival in the autumn, but to make your protest against whisky corn. When your harvest comes let the corn be sold strictly for feed and not alcohol; then give the proceeds to the Band of Hope for new books, library or song books, just as you choose. What do you think of the plan? Capt. Ddborah.

Warehouse Point, Sept. 19, 1884.

Dear Captain Deborah:—The Young Reapers of the Temperance League wish to join around the camp fire, We have eighty-two members, with a regular attendance of twenty-five or thirty, some times more. We shall be one year old December 29. We have held three public societies in the church, which were largely attended. In the spring we planted temperance corn, so we expect to have a harvest festival next month. We are to work now on a quilt for the hospital, with Bible texts on each block. We have had over $30.00; have payed all our bills, and have over $2 00 in the treasury. We have every thing we need to make our meetings attractive. Our superintendent sent to David Cook for a beautiful large banner, with our name on it, and the date of our organization. We have five different papers which we enjoy very much. Now we are going to offer a prize for the best composition on temperance in our public school. Last July we had a picnic, and we just had a lovely time. Now, dear Captain, don't you think we are doing well? One of our members was in H[illegible] —— Sept. 10, and heard Miss Willard, Mrs Pierson, and Col. Bain. She thought they were very nice. If our company around the camp fire is agreeable, you may hear from us again. Ida Thompson and Julia Doane.

COME UNTO ME AND REST.

MRS. MARTHA WINTERMUTE.

Why should I long for rest,
Since Jesus bids me, "Come!"
And cast on Him my soul oppressed
And find His heart my home?

Who giveth rest in toil,
Who giveth joy in tears,
Who maketh light the burdened soul
And turns to praise our fears.

Why should I weary roam,
And anxious vigil keep?
My Savior calls my spirit home,
To find sweet peace and sleep.

"Come unto Me and rest,"
He tenderly doth plead.
Stay not away, with heart oppressed
In all thy helpless need.

DIVISION IN THE HOUSE OF NASBY.

Mrs. Nasby Heard From.

Confederit X. Roads,
(Wich is in the State uv Kentucky.)

Petroleum end me hes fell out for the fust time sence we fell in twenty-two years ago—the year afore Jeems Allen was born. I hev ben a good wife—or a fule—sometimes I aint sartain wich. I hev allers raised eggs and garden truck in summer, and nit socks to sell in winter, to help meet the bills—Bascom's allers bein' the heaviest.

I hev jes come from Missoury; my folks liv in Missoury, Pike county. I staid four months so es to hev my bord ekal the price ov my ralerode fare. Petroleum is a good economizer, ef he aint the best pervider in the world. My folks is all tempruns folks, and I went with 'em to the meetings; pertiklerly a convenshun at Sedaylia, where I got sum vues, end I hev ben a vuin ever sence. The personail of the mcetin was all wimmen, and a few pale nosed men (wich otherwise was of good helthy color, and oncommon free from smell). One of 'em, who was right peart lookin, was axed thare to speke, but the wimmen didn't git time to hear him. I seen by the handbill the fust thing after dinner was hygeen and heredity, showed by a doctor. I sez to sister, "Mariar, eat fast; I want to see them, we don't hev 'em in Kaintucky."

We got in jes as thay was a callin it off. None of the men didn't move, but a female riz up—as fur as she cood—she was a hull hed lower'n me. She looked scared like, and I whispered to sister, "Mariar, whar is the doctor and the hygeen at?"

Sez she, "thar she is, it's a female doctor, Cynthia Ann."

Sez I, "Mariar, in the solum hour of deth I want somethin strong."

"You want Dr. Bigpil's breth then," snapped Mariar. I herd afterward that she hed doctored with the little female, fur a pecoolyar kind of malaria thay hev in Missoury. People is awful touchy about thare doctors. Then a woman talked about law and pollyticks and she was smart. Thar want nothin skeery about her. That's wen my ise was opened. I hev allers beleeved wimmen should keep in their speer, but I seen now that woman's speer was all out doors, and I meen to keep inside my speer.

I hev heerd Petroleum say convenshuns was upliftin, owin to the sooperier quality of the likker thay allus hev to em, but here the flowin bole held lemonade without stick or straw into it, and yit I was inspired to resolve thet I wood go back to the Corners, and jine with Mirandy Pogram, Mrs. Kernel McPelter, and the rest of the sufferin sisterhood in such a rade on Bascoms es wood make the fust one pail. I also visited in Bethany war, for twenty-five yeer thare hes been no likker sold, and there is no Jale accommodashuns, and men has been bleeged to spend their munny for vittles and close,—or keep it,—wich men wunt do. Thare my purpose was strengthened.

This morning at brekfust I begun; Sez I to Petroleum, "Who be you goin to vote fur this fall?" He looked at me severe and sed: "Cynthy Ann, hev you lerned to knit them new kind of stockins with purty insteps, thay is warin? Them ort to fetch a good price." Sez I "Mr. Nasby," I never called him Nasby afore, end it startled him, "hev you lost your manners a assoshiatin with George Willyum Curtis and Beecher, and them Boston fellers? Who be you agoin to vote fur?" Sez he, "With my party, a man is bound to his party as much es a woman is bound to her husbund." Sez I "A woman aint bound to her husbund after he's ded. I hev jined the Prohibition party Mr. Nasby," sez I. Petroleum actooaly turned pail in the nose, and up spoke Jeems Allen. "Mother," sez he, "wats the use of another party? The Republikin party is the party of grate moral idees. Look at Kansas end Iowy." Jeems Allen hes drawins toward the Republikins. He is swete on Joe Biglerses girl, and hes been warin biled shirts for a yere. "My sun," sez I, "I aint time to talk about the Republikins in Kansas end Iowy end Mis Foster, tho thares enuf to be said, but look at the old parties in Missoury. The Dimocrats wouldnt hev a prohighbishun plank in their platform on no account. Why Marmydork axed a minister in Sedalia to take sumthin"—here there was a faraway look in Petroleums ise.

"When the Greenbackers put up their platform, thay tried to put in a narrer prohighbishun plank, end thay laid it careful too, but it broke the hull thing down, and thay quit and went home, telling the Republikins to see wat thay cood do. Thay never touched the prohighbishun plank, thay knowed their underpinnin was too rotten to support it, so thay didn't put in any thin new, but jis patched up with the old lumber, end told sloon keeper Ford to come on, easy like, while the Greenbackers steddy it, and mebbe it wod set up till after lection, ef he didn't move round too much. Jeems Allen this prohighbishun plank is hevy, and nothin weak aint goin to hold it up. Its fine grained, hard wood, right out of the heart of the Lord's best timber. Its like the Florida heart pine I've heerd on. Its grate fur fense posts, or anythin you want to tie to, and it'll lay rite out doors till every thin around its rotten but it aint hurt a bit. Jeems Allen, this prohighbishun plank hes got to go into a hull new platform, with principles in its underpinnin, end richusnis in its corner posts, and its moren likely, it'll hev to be braced by the wimmen's vote." By this time Petroleum had cum too, and sez he, "Wat is to becum of the children wen the muthers spends thare time a votin'?" Sez I, "Wat hes becum of the children wen their fathers spend thare time a drinkin'?" I never seen P. V. so sot down on. Sez he, "wimmen's rites and tempruns fanatticism is more ketchin' than small-pox," and he ris up and went over tew Bascom's and I aint seen him sense. This aint the eend nor wont be till Bascom's is no more.

Cynthia Ann Nasby,
(Vuin' and determined.)

If there's a right thing to be done, and we seem to pass through a wrong thing on our way to it, depend upon it there's another way to it, and a better one, and it is oar own fault, and not God's that we do not find it. —Edward Gannett.

Margaret Fuller, in one of her thoughtful reveries, says: "Does any man wound thee? Not only forgive, but work into thy thought intelligence of the kind of pain, that thou mayest never inflict it on another spirit."

No soul was ever lost because its fresh beginning broke down; but thousands of souls have been lost because they would not make fresh beginnings.—F. W. Faber.

Topic: DAVID'S CHARGE TO SOLOMON.

Lesson Text: I Chronicles, 6: 19.

Golden Text: Arise therefore and be doing, and the Lord be with thee.—I Chron., 22:16.

Time: 1015 B. C.

Place: Jerusalem.

1. More than a quarter of a century before this time David had desired to build a house or temple for God. His plan was set aside by God, but the promise was given that his successor should build the temple, and that this successor should be of his own royal house or family. In this lesson we learn why God did not allow David to do this great work. It seems that twenty-seven years before he was told that it was his continued wars and bloodshed that made him unfit to establish the house of peace. God's house whether a tabernacle or a temple was ever the refuge from the slayer. Certainly David had had God's presence and blessing on the battle field as well as when on his throne quietly ruling Israel, but had not David shed innocent blood wantonly and solely to gratify his own unlawful desires? May not this be God's way of punishment? And what could have been a more severe retribution than to cut off this laudable purpose to enshrine Jehovah in an earthly temple which should shadow forth His glory?

One cannot help being reminded in this connection of Paul's prayer for the Thessalonians, "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly." It is the same God of peace who makes holy the temple of Mt. Zion, and of the human soul.

2. David knew something of what Solomon's temptations would be and that the most insidious of all to him as a ruler, would be motives and considerations of policy which might undermine his faithful adherence to the law of his God. He makes a special point in his counsel of obedience to God as opposed to the expediency of men. David well knew the value of this obedience. At the end of an eventful life he could see that the Lord's counsel had been to him for good and that continually; that whenever he had departed from it, he had not prospered, but it had been to his own hurt. It was a valuable lesson to the young king and as valuable to every young ruler today (and every voter is a ruler) when so many temptations to policy are drawing men away from absolute righteousness. God's commands are not grievous, they are lines of conduct wherein only we shall go safely and happily. When we overstep them it is surely into the brambles and thorns of bitter experience which the Lord has tried to save us from, but from which we would not be saved.

3. Solomon found a great deal of his work already done. The victories of Israel during the years of his father's reign, had furnished him with gold and silver, brass and iron, timber and stone. Workmen too were ready to his hand. It is always so when God puts special work into his children's hands. They find that He has been preparing for them, providing for their wants and planning for their success. This truth may make us all brave whenever we find ourselves suddenly invested with responsibilities and strange duties.

More than four hundred years had been spent in subduing the land of Canaan. Just as forty years were spent in the wilderness when scarce forty days were necessary, so in neglecting God's command to root out the Canaanites, by tolerating and even intermarrying with them, the conquest of the promised land took ten times as long as would have been necessary if the Israelites had been strictly obedient. David completed the conquest, the land had rest, and now God's temple might be built. God's kingdom for which we pray, and for which we so often do not vote, will not be set up in this land till His enemies are all subdued. We are His soldiers and He has commanded their overthrow and promised us the victory—but obedience and vigilance are necessary — shall we not be true and watchful?

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

"WHOM THE GODS DESTROY, THEY FIRST MAKE MAD."

Some of the explorers of the great pyramid of Egypt, bent upon attaching to its structure a prophetic significance, tell us that from the opening in the side a low and narrow gallery slopes downward for a certain number of pyramid inches which corresponds exactly to the number of years following the call of Abraham to the birth of Christ. This downward sloping gallery they claim is intended to prefigure the steady decadence of the chosen people, till at the lowest point a deliverer comes, a Christ is born. From this low point in the pyramid, the gallery widens and the slope is upward toward the King's chamber. Whatever may be the truth as to pyramid prophecy, it is as certain as Jewish history that the nation selected by God to be His minister and message to the ages, no sooner turned away from Him than its ruin began, and the downgrade of its national life is plainly marked on the highway of the centuries as is the declivity of the entrance to the pyramids.

There is a law of gravitation in morals as well as in nature.

By this law the force of evil attraction increases as the amount of matter increases. Sin is its own propulsion toward the bottom. By this law too, the force of evil increases as the distance increases, and both these principles combine to make the way of the transgressor not only hard, but steeply downward till the end is reached. It is this law that underlies the truth of the heathen proverb, "Whom the gods destroy, they first make mad."

History is full of this truth. The Jews added sin to sin till at last they crowned their iniquity with the crucifixion of Christ, who by that cruel death became the world's Redeemer.

The Romish church practiced all unholiness in secret till emboldened by immunity it launched out in the sales of indulgence to sin and so touched the bottom. The Reformation was humanity's rebound toward God.

In our country and time it is not easy to forget how the oppression of slavery waxed greater and greater, its encroachments wider and wider, till in peril of losing all its free territory, the nation sprang to its overthrow and the equality of races was established in constitutional law.

The drink traffic, and its tyranny is pursuing the same downward course. Today in the state of Illinois the Liquor Dealers' Association have pledged themselves not to support any man for the legislature who will not bind himself to vote for the repeal of the entire dram shop law, and expressly declaring for the removal of the right of local option from the people, thus making the saloon system not only free from license or tax, but saddling it upon unwilling communities and pressing it close upon the homes of the people. A worse tyranny was never proposed in any country.

The drift of whiskydom is rapidly downward. It has accumulated momentum as its iniquity has increased; as it nears its destruction its course is more rapid and more steeply perilous. We may expect its wildest, maddest ravages in the near future. "Whom the gods destroy, they first make mad."

THAT sweet-spirited Prohibitionist, George W. Bain, gives in a personal letter, some very wise answers to the questions in Mrs. Foster's letter concerning "State versus National Prohibition." Though a Kentuckian he answers one question by asking another, very much after a Yankee's fashion.

For instance, in reply to Mrs. Foster's query if "while so large a proportion of the members come from states where the traffic is licensed, can they be expected to abolish it from the nation's domain?" he inquires naively:

"Pray do the states where no-license is the rule, send to congress men who favor the abolition of the traffic from the national domain? Does Iowa send a prohibition delegate to congress? Does not Maine, thirty years old in state prohibition, send a "dodger" to the United States senate? And would not the Prohibition party send the very kind of delegates to congress that Mrs. Foster says we must have in order to secure national prohibition? Is it likely that they will get there by any other means? Again Mrs. Foster says:

"As a question of political economy I believe every other political question to be of minor importance to the prohibition question."

Mr. Blaine does not believe this, says he does not. Gov. St. John does believe this, says he does. The Republican party does not believe this; said so by ignoring the question. The Prohibition party does believe this, and said so. The W. C. T. U. believes this, is pledged to it and yet Mrs. Foster is for Mr. Blaine, against St. John; for the Republican party, against the Prohibition party; for the man and the party, opposing what she believes, and against the man and the party in favor of what she believes, and she is sorry the W. C. T. U. seems to ally itself with a man and a party pledged to the principles of the W. C. T. U.

There are two classes who get hurt, those who from "reckless impatience cast themselves down," and "run before they are sent;" and another class who neither jump nor run when they ought, or are sent, but who refuse to come up to the "help of the Lord against the mighty."

Mrs. E. G. Green, president of Vermont W. C. T. U., sends word that The Pathfinder, the book ordered by the National convention in Detroit, is in press, J. N. Stearns, publisher. She asks that each state president present at the National convention be able to pledge a number of copies for her state, price 25cts. Local unions in different states please notify state president of number of copies they will purchase. No national, state or local officer should be without it. It contains hints and helps all along the line. Answers hundreds of oft recurring questions: How to organize. Duties of officers. Committees. Election of officers. Basis of Representation. Mass meetings. Institutes. List of books under each department. Also sketch of department and outline plans by the National superintendents who have very kindly forwarded. Introduction by Miss Willard. Will contain about 200 pages. Send in your orders as soon as possible to your state president.

Another recipe comes to us for preparing communion wine, this time from Mrs. Jane W. Jones, of Piqua, Ohio. Our readers shall have the benefit of all that can substantiate the claim to be "best" This one has been considered satisfactory by a church of several hundred members for four years past. "Boil the grapes without any water, as for jelly, until they are fit to strain. Strain as for jelly, boil up only just enough to skim well, add crushed sugar to suit the taste, bottle and seal while scalding hot. Soak the corks for a few minutes in hot water to soften them, and then pound them in gently with a hammer, and dip the top of the bottle in wax one or more times as needed. Sometimes a leathery mold rises on the top but it does not affect the taste. Strain carefully and add a little water before using as it is very rich." To those who would rather buy than make the wine we can recommend a very superior article made by Mrs. F. B. Powers, of Dartford, Wis., and to be obtained by addressing her at that place.

Long ago we promised ourselves and our readers the pleasure and profit of a stenographic report of the National Convention at St. Louis. Arrangements are now in progress that will fulfil this promise and make The Union Signal of October 30, a sort of telephone by which all "stay-at-homes," and "shut in," members of the W. C. T. U. may share the joys of the occasion. This convention number will be double the usual size, i. e., will contain thirty-two, instead of sixteen pages and will give a full report of the president's annual address, the speeches of the evening meetings, reports of committees, and discussions of the business sessions. The price will be five cents per copy or four dollars per hundred. Orders should come in as rapidly as possible that the size of the edition may be determined.

John Jones was brought into court as usual last Monday morning. Charge, drunkenness.

The Judge: What shall I do with you this time?

J. J.: Dun no, yer Honor.

The Judge: If I fine you and send you to the Bridewell, your poor wife will work out the fine over her washtub and you'll get out free of both fine and imprisonment, while your family, already the greatest sufferers, will still be the only ones. I wish I could lock you up for a year without fine.

Poor Wife: Yer Honor, couldn't ye lock up the whisky too?

Herein are two important facts. The "fine" system ought to be abolished. Working it out too often falls on the innocent loving wife who vainly hopes John will do better next time.

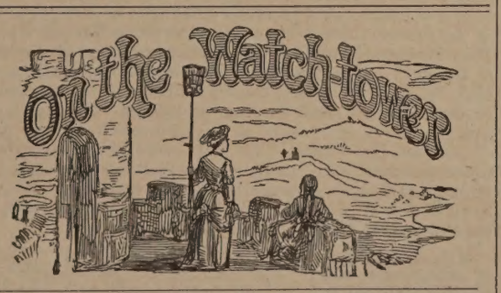
Second, the saloon system ought to be abolished. Its evils fall heaviest on the guiltless. Its dangers menace most savagely the unprotected and helpless. American manhood to the rescue. Abolish the saloon!

Miss F. Jennie Duty, after a summer's rest has returned to Cleveland and resumed her work at the Central Friendly Inn, amid the rejoicings of the W. C. T. U. and of what is sometimes called the "Forgotten Class," in a large city which knows that Miss Duty's motto is, "Not willing that any should perish."

Wisconsin and Minnesota held their W. C. T. U. conventions last week. Mrs. President Bascom and Mrs. Dr. Hobart, the two state presidents spoke out in ringing tones for St. John and Daniel and the resolution committees reported and the conventions adopted a hearty endorsement of the Prohibition party.

More and more are we crowded up to the necessity of acting out the expressive words o Whittier:

If we have whispered truth,
Whisper no longer;
Speak as the trumpet does,
Sterner and stronger.



Miss Esther Pugh made the journey to Monteagle, Tenn., to help our W. C. T. U. in that state with its "Day" at the Sunday school assembly and did so to excellent advantage.

A Wisconsin town has a wide awake W. C. T. U. which secured the poll list, including all the voters and proceeded to order The Issue of To-Day for every one of them. This is the most practical idea up to date and is passed along the line for "the good of the order."

A few weeks ago I learned of an incident which pleased me. One of our earnest workers in Baltimore who is a "St. John woman," was on a train where a vote on presidential candidates was taken, the ladies however not being invited to participate. A bright little fellow, her son, perhaps eleven years old, came hurriedly to her to announce the vote. So many for Blaine, so many for Cleveland, and one for St. John. "Oh," said his mother, "how I'd like to shake hands with that man who voted for St. John." The loyal boy looked lovingly into his mother's face and holding out his hand said. "Well, mother, here he is. I voted for St. John."

Who is there among us of artist eye and hand, as well as soul, who will design for use among our ransomed ones, a Christmas card bearing the wondrous legend: "I will restore unto you the years that the locust hath eaten."

The Amendment Herald of Ohio, will miss the editor to whom it owed so much success, and indeed its very existence. Mrs. Woodbridge feels that with her strong convictions she cannot edit a non-partisan sheet.

Sometimes I am "led to wonder" if in the reckoning of the future, not the judgment, but the verdict of time, some of our unions will not stand a little aghast to find their records among those who were "neither cold nor hot." A Laodicean W. C. T. U. is an anomaly.

Mrs. L. G. Wallace, and Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Indianapolis, made strong and stirring appeals for the St. John movement at the Friends' yearly meeting, Plainfield, Ind., recently.

Even the birds on the telegraph wires sing the gospel of St. John, as the messages fly under their feet like this from Minnesota: "The Minnesota state convention endorsed by resolution the Prohibition party."

Evanston (Ill.) W. C. T. U. wanting Col. Bain for its lecture course, wrote him to that effect. In responding favorably to their request, he says:

I find many difficulties in my way just now as a lecturer. There is about as much opposition to free speech north, as is reported against free ballot south. But I find no one difficulty so embarassing as the letter of Mrs. Foster. The remarkable feature is that it seems to have made a much greater impression outside the ranks of the W. C. T. U. than inside. I am sure Sister Foster did not suppose it would find its way to so many tongues given to speaking out of the abundance of hearts bitterly opposed to prohibition, I would not grieve to hear them speak her praise, if I did not feel their motive insincere, and that they do so for "education and agitation, only that and nothing more."

As I remember the days of slavery in the south, when "states' rights" was the cry for its protection and perpetuation, and how we were whipped into the knowledge that this is a nation, and slavery a national curse, demanding national abolition, it looks very strange to me to see those who gave their kindred to whip us into line, squaring themselves on the old time-rotten antiquity of states' rights. Of one so given to making straight the paths of all who follow her, by her unanswerable logic, the grief is greater when we find her voice against the great national issue of 1884.

Somehow I can't help sympathizing with that. I have tried to believe in "states' rights" with all my heart, because the National W. C. T. U. is built upon some such principle, but I can't get my own consent to it, after all. Will somebody tell me why?

A welcome addition to the songs of the campaign is Clara Holbrook Smith's "Hail to St. John, our Chief," words and music by our successful Illinois organizer, and published by F. S. Chandler & Co., Chicago.

The Voice, Funk & Wagnall's new campaign paper, is out, and it is a voice crying in the wilderness of confused opinion, "Make His paths straight." Crooked paths are they which meander in the worn channels of conservative policy.

From the Voice I learn that Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras, is for St. John, also the Rev. Dr. Deems, of the church of the Strangers, New York city.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE W. C. T. U.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union opened on the morning of September 11, at the Garfield Memorial church. The pulpit was draped with the national flag falling in graceful folds. The desk was trimmed with ivy, and a wreath of golden rod hanging in front at the loop of the flag, which fell in folds over the front of the platform, gave an effect which was both novel and pleasing. On the left hand of the desk a picture of the late President Garfield was placed, while on the right of the pulpit was a large crayon portrait of Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of Iowa. Both of these pictures were twined with ivy, which was wound prettily around the easels on which the portraits rested. There were a number of mottoes around the walls, among them "The Home vs. the Saloon," "Guard the Home," and in the rear of the pulpit, across the dark blue field of the flag which covered the pyramidal partition, was the word "welcome" in large gold letters, forming a bright and happy contrast. Several bouquets ornamented the pulpit, that upon the desk being composed of heliotrope and roses. The attendance was not as large as usual because the meeting was called earlier than usual, and many of the ladies connected with the organization were absent on their summer vacation.

The opening devotional services were in charge of Mrs. R. Burris. After the usual preliminary business, Mrs. Rosa E. Hartwell, the corresponding secretary of the union, presented her report. She stated that the principal work done by the union was in moulding the minds of the people and in creating a sentiment adverse to licensing the sale of beer and distilled liquors. She gave a short history of the fight against the license bill in the District last spring, and the success of the union in preventing its passage by congress. Her report also mentioned the enthusiasm which the union had aroused in the cause of total abstinence at the various camp meetings held during the summer near the city. During the past year, four auxiliaries to the main branch have been organized in Washington, two of which were for colored people and two for white. There are twenty-four auxiliaries in this city in all. The union has leased rooms at 516 Eighth street northwest for new headquarters, and they will be furnished and ready for entrance by the 1st of October, it is expected. The auxiliary at the Soldiers' Home had succeeded in preventing the establishment of a bar at that place in the spring last past. The report speaks of the condition of the union as most encouraging, and much work has been done in securing pledges of temperance. The secretary had received reports from the auxiliary unions in the district, as follows: Pioneer Union, Mrs. M. M. Chapin, president, 19 adult members, 250 members in juvenile union; Central Union, Mrs. R. Burris, president, 112 members; S. E. Union, Mrs. Moffatt, president, 20 members; N. W. Union church, Mrs. Westcott, president, 50 members; N. W. Mt. Zion Union, Miss Hercus, president, 39 members; Christian church, Mrs. Miles, president, 28 members; Tenleytown Union, Mrs. Nieman, president, 36 members; Asbury church, Mrs. Foote, president, 38 members; Fifteenth street Presbyterian church, Mrs. Grimke, president, 23 members; F. E. Willard Union, Mrs. Leighton, president, 13 members; Washington Barracks, —— ——, president, 35 members; Soldiers' Home, —— ——, president, 182 members; Nineteenth-street Baptist church, Miss Cookley, president, 40 members; Seventh and Boundary, Miss Lewis, president, 12 members. Four new unions have been formed during the past year in the District, but as they had not reported, the secretary could not state the names of the presidents nor the number of members.

Mrs. Roach, the president of the District Union, then presented Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, to the convention. Mrs. Chapin saying that she would address the session this afternoon on "Work in the South," gracefully acknowledged her reception by the ladies in a few words, and then took her seat, while the election of officers for the ensuing year, which was next on the program, went on.

The election resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Clara L. Roach; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Rosa E. Hartwell; assistant corresponding secretary, Miss Lizzie Kessler; treasurer, Mrs. S. A. Mayse.

A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. S. D. LaFetra, the retiring treasurer, on account of her efficient services. The convention, after rising and reciting the Lord's prayer in concert, took a recess until 1 p. m.

The convention on reassembling in the afternoon, was opened with devotional exercises, under the charge of Mrs. M. E. Cohen. A much larger attendance was visible than in the morning. The feature of the exercises during the afternoon was the address by Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, on Temperance Work in the South. Her address was forcible and eloquent, and drew many expressions of approbation from her audience.

This organization was formed ten years ago, when, at the suggestion of the pastors of a number of churches in this district, the ladies from each congregation met together and inaugurated the work which has been carried on with so much success and has reached such large proportions. The temperance crusade which was then in progress gave additional interest to this new movement. Mrs. Anna M. Linville, who has since left the city was the first president, and among the original members were Mrs. Julia Church, Mrs. R. E. Hartwell, Mrs. Geo. A. Hall, Mrs. Anna L. Davidson, Mrs. Clara L. Roach, Mrs. M. M. Chapin, Mrs. Eastlake, Mrs. S. D. Le Fetra and Mrs. Dr. Noble. During the past five years Mrs. Clara L. Roach, the present efficient president, has been at the head of the organization. The union has not only increased in numbers, but the scope of its work has been largely extended. It began with a membership of twenty-five or thirty, and it now has over 1,000 members. While it is an auxiliary of the National W. C. T. U., it is independent in the methods of work. Many of them are representative workers in their respective churches. During the last year and a half temperance societies have been formed among the soldiers at Washington barracks and soldiers' home. Over 400 soldiers have signed the pledge, and through their influence societies have been organized at the forts on the frontier posts. The first temperance lunch room in this city—the Holly Tree Inn on 9th st., was started by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. At the time of its opening there was not a place in this city where lunch could be had without going where liquors were sold, now there are many, all the result of this first enterprise. In addition to these fields of work there has been organized in connection with the central organization about thirty local unions in different parts of the city. Each one of these has its officers and holds regular meetings, besides organizing bands of hope and inaugurating public temperance meetings.

Some idea of the field covered by these ladies can be obtained from the list of departments of work, with the names of the superintendents: Heredity, Mrs. S. A. Mayse; hygiene, Mrs. M. A. Mc Pherson; scientific temperance, Mrs. S. M. Hartsock; Sunday school work, Mrs. Florence Leighton; juvenile work, Mrs. A. P. Rogers; temperance literature, Mrs. M. E. Cohen; influencing the press, Mrs. Lydia H. Tilton; conference with ecclesiastical, educational, medical and other associations, Mrs. C. L. Roach; relative statistics, Mrs. E. Shelton; evangelistic work, Mrs. A. M. Linville and Mrs Williams; soldiers and sailors, Mrs. J. W. Rowan; legislative and petition work, Mrs. R. E. Hartwell; franchise, Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley; prison and police work, Mrs. M. M. Chapin; work among intemperate women, Mrs. M. A. Copenhaver; railroad work, Miss Emma Lewis; unfermented wine, Mrs. E. Moffatt; young woman's work, Miss Cora B. Thomas; parlor meetings, Mrs. M. Stevens Hart; kitchen garden, Miss Louise Strobel; flower mission, Miss Belle Fritzgerald; labor and capital, Mrs. E. P. Cook; work among foreigners, Mrs. E. Beron; work among colored people, Mrs. S. D. Le Fetra; state and county fairs, Mrs. Judge Snell; policemen and firemen Mrs. Major J. Turner; social evil, Mrs. W. H. Schell.

The evening session was well attended. After religious exercises, conducted by Mrs. Alice Miles, Rev. F. D. Power was introduced and delivered an address of welcome to the members of the union, commending their work and calling their attention to the great work yet before them. Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, replied on behalf of the visitors, thanking the audience for their attendance, and referring to the proverbial hospitality of Washington. Mrs. Clara L. Roach then delivered the president's annual address, which gave an interesting account of the work during the past year.

The session of Friday was essentially a business meeting, and consisted of the reading of reports by the heads of various departments of work. The decorations of the pulpit were somewhat changed, as the portrait of Garfield had been placed just below the apex of the pyramid in the rear of the pulpit, while in its stead the picture of Miss Frances E. Willard had been substituted at the left of the desk. The devotional exercises were in charge of Mrs. M. M. Chapin, and consisted of the usual scriptural readings, prayer, and singing of hymns. During their continuance Miss Frances E. Willard made a short address from the words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," characterizing this text as perhaps the most appropriate motto applicable to the work of the W. C. T. U. At the close of the morning's devotions Mrs. Roach took the chair.

Mrs. Burris then made a verbal report on the subject of evangelistic work. She emphasized particularly the work among children, saying that their education in temperance doctrines was of primal importance. She also referred to the feeling among the members of the union that its great success was due to its union of temperance with religion. She spoke in feeling words of necessity of this union, and said the union must take these words, "Through Christ who strengtheneth me I can do all things," as an incentive to a constant endeavor to conquer the evils of intemperance.

Miss Cora Thomas then reported on the subject of the "Young Woman's Work."

Four societies have been organized among the teachers of the various schools in this city, and they have paid particular attention to hygienic matters, studying especially the effects of alcoholic liquors on the physique.

Several temperance libraries have been established among the auxiliaries.

Mrs. M. M. Chapin then read her report on "Prison and Jail Work." She stated that the "Young Men's Christian association had cordially co-operated with the W. C. T. U. in this work, and notwithstanding the coldness of the jail officials and the interruptions that were met with, still more or less success had been met with. The matron of the department of female prisoners at the jail, Mrs. Russell, has done much in that department. Thirty visits have been made by the prison committee, and 2,800 papers and pamphlets and 25 books have been distributed among the inmates of the jail. Several conversions were also reported as the result of evangelical work." This report was also accepted. Mrs. Hinman, of Illinois, who has had experience in prison work, also spoke of its necessity.

Mrs. Roach had no written report on the subject of work before influential bodies. She stated, however, that the committee has been before the district commissioners, and several times before congressional committees, besides several church bodies.

The department of heredity was represented by Mrs. Mayse, who reported that in connection with the department of hygiene a normal institute had been held at the Calvary Baptist church, May 5, 6 and 7, last. Prominent physicians in sympathy with the temperance movement addressed the assembly on various subjects connected with total abstinence.

Mrs. M. A. Copenhaver then presented the report for the department of intemperate women. The work here was mostly confined to the suppression of the habit of having beer and intoxicating liquors on the family table, and thereby checking in its incipiency a custom which might develop into a habitual necessity. This closed the reports of the morning session.

Miss Frances E. Willard, of Illinois, and Mrs. Gen. Bidwell, of California, were then introduced to the convention, which reeeived them with the Chautauqua salute, the members rising and waving their handkerchiefs as a welcome.

Miss Willard made a short address on the aims and work of the W. C. T. U. She then presented Mrs. Bidwell to the convention as a member of and active laborer with the union. Mrs. Bidwell, however, only bowed her acknowledgements.

Miss Anna Gordon said a few graceful words, after which Mrs. Julia Baldwin, of Baltimore, was presented, and invited the members of the convention to visit the meeting of the Baltimore union next month.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, then addressed the assembly in graphic words, relating several touching anecdotes, and shortly after the close of her address the session adjourned.

In the meeting of the executive committee, held during the recess, it was decided to continue the kindergarten work of the union, and Miss Susie Pollock was nominated as head of that department.

Mrs. M. A. Copenhaver was nominated to take charge of work among the colored people, and Mrs. E. Baron was nominated to take charge of the work among the boatmen.

At the afternoon session Mrs. Mayse presented her report as treasurer, showing a balance in the treasury of of about $38. Miss Willard then addressed the meeting as to the best methods of prosecuting the temperance work. She brought out many new ideas which were very acceptable to her hearers, and the audience manifested its approval of her words by frequent applause. The remainder of the session was devoted to hearing reports of departments.

Garfield Memorial church was crowded at the closing session Friday evening. Not only the auditorium, but the gallery, was filled by an audience which gave frequent marks of approbation. The exercises were opened by the singing of a hymn, after which Miss Alice Hercus, president of the northwest auxiliary, read the 94th psalm. She was followed by Miss Louise Strobel, president of the young ladies' auxiliary union, of South Washington, who offered prayer.

Mrs. Tilton, the recording secretary, then read several resolutions, the substance of which was that the cause of temperance is the cause of God and humanity; that earnest labor should be done to introduce scientific temperance hygienic instruction in the public schools of this city; that the thanks of the union be extended to Rev. Mr. Power, the pastor, and to the officers of the Garfield Memorial church, to the public press, and to Miss Willard, Mrs. S. F. Chapin, of South Carolina; Miss Anna Gordon, and other out-of-town ladies who have aided this union in its work. Mrs. Tilton also made her report on the subject of influencing the public press. The report was accepted and the resolutions adopted.

Miss Lydia Polk next sang a solo, the music of which was composed by Prof. Bischoff, and the words of which were written by Rev. Dr. Rankin and dedicated to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mrs. Roach, the president of the District Union, next introduced to the audience Miss Frances E. Willard, the national president of the W. C. T. U., who began her address by stating that it is a scientific fact that as a man makes use of alcoholic liquors his body deteriorates and his mind becomes blunted and decayed. The men who study and accept the theses of Robert Ingersoll upon the problems of death and destiny are usually the men with a beer mug in one hand and a meerschaum in the other.

The speaker referred, in burning words, to the curses of the liquor traffic, and traced the growth of the temperance sentiment in this country from its inception to the present date. She discussed the future work of women, saying that it is to make the whole world home-like, society home-like, and to rear a government for the home. She spoke, in glowing terms, of the recent campaign in Maine, and the work of the women done there toward carrying the recent prohibitory amendment in that state. The speaker alluded to the Iowa battles for the suppression of intemperance, and their successful issue. Her peroration was very brilliant, and when she closed the audience burst into a round of applause.

The president, Mrs. Roach, then announced that Mr. Arbeely, of Damascus, Syria, would like to say a few words. This gentleman stepped forward and in a neat speech presented to Miss Willard a magnificent floral wreath, composed of roses and bearing the words "Home, Sweet Home," in heliotropes. Miss Willard responded in well chosen and feeling terms, and, when she had closed, the hymn "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" was sung. Rev. Mr. Power pronounced the benediction, and the annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for this district was finished.

CALIFORNIA.

W. C. T. U. ANNIVERSARY.

The fifth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of California, held in Oakland September 3, 4, is over, and the delegates and friends have returned to their homes; but the influence resulting from this assembly will not pass away, but will remain with us here, and be transmitted by each delegate to the homes and communities in which they live. An assembly of earnest Christian women, wholly consecrated to this work of reform, is a benediction to any city. Pleasant memories will cluster around the First Presbyterian church of Oakland, where the two days' convention was held.

There are forty-three unions in northern California. Thirty unions sent in written reports, and delegates from about twenty unions were in attendance. The German union recently organized at San Jose by Mrs. Skelton was well represented, and the delegates from that union expressed a great interest in the work, wishing to learn all about the different departments. This is a step forward in the right direction, and is the first union formed among the Germans in northern California. There is also one in San Francisco.

Mrs. Skelton has evinced much perseverance and enterprise to go forward when there was so little to encourage her. The San Jose union is the largest, having a membership of 300. Reports from superintendents of the many new departments organized in the state during the year indicate great research for statistics and time bestowed upon them. The papers read on different subjects were interspersed by singing by Mrs. L. E. Higgins, superintendent of the department of song, and by the young ladies of the East Oakland union. These reports will be given in full in the annual report, soon to be lished.

ix new departments have been added during the year. After the devotional exercises, the address of welcome was given by Mrs. Wm. Sublette, of Oakland; responded to by Mrs. L. P. Williams, of San Francisco. Mrs. Sublette said:

"Mrs. President, delegates and friends:—In behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Oakland, we extend to you a warm welcome. Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; we have prepared the house and there is room for thee. To the delegates of the Y. W. C. T. U. we extend a cordial greeting. Glad are we of this reserve force. Among the choicest blessings of the year we count the responses from our precious maidens. Would we could welcome you to a temperance city, but no, our streets are lined with pitfalls which count their victims by the thousands. But we can welcome you to a city whose chief magistrate is with you in this mighty struggle; whose doors are wide open to receive you, and under whose hospitable roof we but last evening found ourselves honored guests. Never had an organization been so highly favored. It has been less than a dozen years since that little gentle house mother led her crusade band, singing crusade hymns, into the rum shops, there to kneel and pray for the rum seller and the drunkard. Telegraph wires flashed the news far and near. The nation was startled! Men read and laughed and sneered; women, busy women, stopped their work, read the strange lines, thought and lifted up their hearts to God in prayer. Had the time come for women to take the fore front in the battle against intemperance? Was it right? Had she not learned, and learned at her mother's knee, that home is woman's true sphere? Home her only safe abiding place?

"But on the other hand had she not through long years been the sufferer? It was her heart that was torn and bleeding. It was her home that had been blasted. It was her boy that reeled from yonder dram shop. It was her frame that blighted and withered under the curse of this vile traffic. No wonder she sprang to the front. No wonder she was ready for acting. No wonder that we after the second thought of the crusade find ourselves firmly entrenched in every state in the Union—a band of earnest Christian women 50,000 strong. No wonder that from 3,000 local unions float the white banners, "For God and home and native land." Crusade memories can never fade, crusade fires can never die until the enemy is vanquished. Never has an organization been more highly favored in its state presidents. From Mrs. Stevens in the piney woods of Maine, through the great chain of states, stopping awhile with Mary Allen West, whose heart is larger than the prairie on which she lives, over the mountains to our own pillar of strength; each seems to the manor born—the right woman in the right place. Our joyous greetings today are not unmingled with sadness. There comes to us a vision of the folded hands and finished work of one of our number who has heard the call "Come up higher." O that the mantle of this consecrated one may fall on us who remain. Hers was a life rich in loving charities, rich in Christ-like unselfishness. So speaks to us today our beloved dead. Under the shadow of this great bereavement we tenderly close our broken ranks, praying that we may follow her footsteps as she followed the footsteps of Christ."

The memorial tribute paid to the memory of our departed sister and co-worker, Mrs. Coxhead, was given by Mrs. Gove, of Oakland, and as all listened to the beautiful words given to the memory of her who has gone "beyond the parting and the greeting," the beautiful and appropriate lines of Mrs. Browning came to mind:

> And friends, dear friends,
> When it shall be
> That this low breath has gone from me,
> And round my bier ye come to weep,
> Let one, most loving of you all,
> Say, 'Not a tear must o'er her fall;
> He giveth His beloved sleep.'"

The report of the state superintendent of heredity, Mrs. F. H. Bentley, showed that the work had been well commenced, and broad foundations laid for the future. Report of the superintendent of flower and fruit mission, Mrs. L. Kelley, Oakland, recommended the flowers to be carried to the homes instead of the cells of the wretched prisoners, to cheer and comfort the poor, disheartened wives and children. They have organized three new flower missions, and through them send flowers to the marine hospital, city and county hospital, and the almshouse. Mrs. Higgins, superintendent of the department of song, gave her report. Mrs. Peet, of Haywards, presided over the question drawer. After the devotional exercises on the afternoon of Wednesday, Mrs. L. P. Williams, of San Francisco, superintendent of coffee house and reading room, gave her report. Mrs. M. T. McCall, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, reported. Through the efforts made by this new department several counties of our state have adopted Steele's Physiology into the schools, and many towns have followed the example. She said: "Oakland is the Boston of the Pacific Coast, whose schools, we all know, are exceeded in importance by none in the state"; and she recommends securing the enactment of scientific temperance instruction by the legislature of the state, which shall, once and for all, settle the question, making scienttfic temperance instruction compulsory in all counties under the control of the state.

Mrs. S. J. Churchill, of San Jose, superintendent of evangelistic work, gave a very interesting account of her department. Mrs. Dr. Buckel's report on "Hygiene," was both interesting and instructive. Mrs. Eyster of San Jose, gave a very interesting and amusing paper on "How to make Locals Interesting." A paper by Mrs. L. Kelley, on "Is American Wine More Intoxicating than European Wine?" proving that the large amount of alcohol contained in the juice of the grape here, especially in California, renders it much more intoxicating. A paper entitled "Ends and Aims of W. C. T. U." was read by Mrs. G. S. Abbott; also a paper on "Temperance in Homes," by Mrs. McIntire, of Sacramento. A paper was read on "Raisin Grapes in Place of Wine Grapes," by Mrs. Sanford, president of Livermore union, expressing her belief in forming an immigration bureau, that those coming to this country, strangers, may be informed in regard to the best management of the raisin grape. A paper on "Song in the Temperance Work," by Mrs. M. H. Field, of San Jose, was very interesting. The report given by Mrs. J. E. Stockbridge, superintendent of press and literature committee, indicated that much effort had been made in this branch, keeping the press thoroughly informed concerning the work of the W. C. T. U., securing editorials and paragraphs helpful to the education of public sentiment.

The afternoon of the last day concluded with an object lesson to the "Boys in Blue," by Mrs. M. Sublette, and presentation of a silk banner by the local union.

The Rev. Dr. Horton delivered an address on "The Crusades and Their Results," on Thursday evening.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Mrs. P. D. Browne, president; Mrs. H. H. Havens, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. L. Van Blarcom, recording secretary; Mrs. S. G. Chamberlain, treasurer; vice-presidents—Mrs. Sturtevant B. Peet, Mrs. S. J. Churchill, Mrs. L. P. Williams; Mrs. Thomas Varney, auditor.

By invitation of the delegates from Sacramento, Mrs. Hopson and Mrs. Shanklin, the next annual meeting will be held in that city, and thus—

> "We are watching, we are working,
> For the bright, prophetic day
> When the shadows, weary shadows,
> From the world shall roll away."

Mrs. H. H. Havens, Cor. Sec.

KANSAS.

SIXTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The sixth annual convention of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at Leavenworth, October 14, 15 and 16, the session beginning at 2 p. m., Tuesday, 14th. Mass meetings will be held each evening, at which addresses will be given by our national president, Miss Willard, and other noted speakers of the W. C. T. U. It is expected that Mrs. Shields, president of Colorado; Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri, and Mrs. Perkins, of Ohio, will be present. In addition to these, Mrs. Emma Molloy and Miss Way, of our own state, have promised to be in attendance.

Band of Hope exercises, and a Young Ladies' Meeting addressed by Miss Anna Gordon, will be held in one of the churches.

Each meeting will be opened with devotional exercises, consisting of scripture, song and prayer.

Scientific temperance instruction in schools, temperance literature, evangelistic work, influencing the press, district work, including organization and finance, foreign work, and other topics bearing upon the interests of the general and local work, will be discussed.

Reports from the state organizer, district presidents, treasurer and financial secretary will be given.

Attention has been called, by the national treasurer, to a clause in the report of the finance committee, at the last national convention at Detroit, which recommends that each state consider the propriety of increasing the annual dues to the national treasury to ten cents per member. It will be remembered that notice was given, at last state convention, of a proposed change in the constitution, making membership fees one dollar per annum, instead of fifty cents. Both recommendations will be considered.

According to Article VII of constitution, "The annual meeting shall be composed of the general officers and the executive board, and each local auxiliary union shall be entitled to one delegate at large and one for each twenty-five paying members." Let unions please take notice that they are not entitled to representation, unless they have paid state dues. Any dues not yet paid, should be sent at once to the treasurer, Mrs. M. J. Hadley, Hutchison, that she may include it in her report, and thus avoid the confusion that occurs by bringing it to the convention.

Unions are earnestly requested to send names and number of delegates to Mrs. S. L. North, Leavenworth, that places may be assigned them upon arrival. Friends of the cause, interested in the work, who are not delegates, will be welcomed.

An effort is being made to secure a reduction of railroad rates, a notice of the result of which will be given in due season.

Our beloved national president, Miss Willard, has set apart Tuesday, the 7th of October, as a day of prayer for the national convention, that it may be the most earnest and effective temperance meeting ever held on this continent; that the crusade fire may burn in all our hearts; that a pentecostal baptism may rest upon the land we love, and that men committed to the cause of prohibition may become the leaders throughout the nation. Please let the day be kept by every union, and added to the prayers for the national convention. Let songs of praise go up for what God hath wrought in our own state; petitions that He will bless all efforts for temperance; that His holy spirit will be with us in our convention, guiding our deliberations, and that the meeting may be one of profit to our unions, to our cause and to ourselves.

Laura B. Fields, President
Fanny Rastall, Secretary.

A SUCCESSFUL UNION.

Last Sunday evening found me in Sabetha, Kansas, a town of about 2000 people.

Two ladies met me at the station and told me of the arrangements for the lecture. It was held in the Grand Army hall, which seats comfortably six hundred persons. The people came eight and ten miles to this meeting and a full orchestra and choir rendered music which was in itself a great attraction. A young lady read the scripture lesson, another young lady offered prayer and one of the local officers presided.

These young people coming forward to do this work, was an object lesson to be remembered.

I have seldom spoken to a more interesting audience, and such mass meetings are held once every month by the local W. C. T. U.

They depend generally, upon their own local talent, and their meetings are always successful.

All the ministers of the town lend their aid, and this alone goes a great way in the manufacture of public sentiment.

No saloons in that town, and it would be dangerous for any man to attempt the business.

If other unions who are wondering what they can do, would go to work as do these women, much good could be accomplished.

Dear sisters do not sit with folded hands when young souls are perishing. S. M. Perkins.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

We feel that we have cause to rejoice and be glad at the result of our efforts in the work of organizing the past year. Mrs. McLaughlin and Miss Wadsworth, each spent two weeks with us, and did fine service. Mrs. Wallace, vice president of Carroll county, has shown what energy and persistence can do by organizing eleven unions in her county. The president and corresponding secretary have each added two to the list. So, as a result, we have twenty-nine new unions, making a total of sixty-one in the state. Nearly all of the older ones and those formed early in the year are doing good work. We shall hope ere long to be able to report as favorably of the newer ones.

A fine temperance library has been presented to the state normal school, at Plymouth, by the N. H. W. C. T. U., the necessary funds, $20, being raised by the corresponding secretary. The principal, who is a strong advocate of temperance, expressed much pleasure at the gift, and will encourage the use of the books.

MICHIGAN.

BRANCH COUNTY CONVENTION.

The first annual meeting of the Branch County W. C. T. U. was held in Quincy the 11th and 12th of September. Reports of unions showed them to be in good working order, not only holding the forts but attacking the enemy's works. They have held regular meetings through the summer, observed the day of prayer and flower day; indeed many flower days have been observed and the thank-offering was remembered.

The Quincy union has made a speciaity of distributing temperance literature. Its superintendent of scientific instruction has entered upon her duties and has found them not unpleasant. A number of gentlemen are honorary members.

Branson union fills a column weekly in one of the village papers with good temperance reading and has the privilege of folding temperance literature in with the paper for distribution. A number of the ladies exercised their right to vote at the annual school meeting.

Union City has the largest membership in the county; keeps up the course of study and juvenile work.

The Coldwater union has recently hung upon the walls of the jail beautifully executed scripture mottoes, the artistic lettering of which was done gratuitously by Mr. I. M. Clark of this city; also a picture telling the story of rum and its effects, accompanied by many prayers that they might prove words of warning and of comfort to poor souls whose sins have found them out and thrust them behind prison bars. A basket is kept filled with temperance reading at the depot. Ten copies of The Union Signal were sent six months to the lumber camps. A copy has been kept in the reading room of the Free Public Library of the city, and it has been voted to send it and the Lever to the Y. M. C. A. rooms of the city.

All the unions are perseveringly carrying forward various lines of work. Reports from unions, superintendents of departments, essays and discussions all showed earnest and practical thought and work. Eight towns are now organized for aggressive work against saloonism, the foe of "God and home and native land." Mrs. R. A. Bailey, our district president, addressed the convention in the evening making a forcible and impressive plea for prohibition. Mrs. Bailey makes new friends every time she comes among us.

The corps of officers elected at the time of organizing was unanimously re-elected: Mrs. Martha H. Leonard, Union City, president; Mary E. Benton, Coldwater, corresponding secretary.

The resolutions adopted were well considered and timely.

After singing the doxology the convention adjourned.

After adjournment the Quincy union served an elegant lunch in the church parlor and a pleasant hour was passed socially.

This convention was a source of inspiration and great gain to those who attended its sessions; it was pronounced a success in every way; the loss was to those who did not come. Mrs. Mary E. Benton, Cor. Sec,

Lowell.—I send for insertion in The Union Signal the following resolutions which were adopted by Lowell W. C. T. U. at its last meeting:

Whereas, We the members of the W. C. T. U. find the council of Lowell, willing to receive bonds for increasing the number of saloons in our village, therefore, be it,

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves not to patronize or assist in any way the bondsmen of saloonists or those renting buildings for saloon purposes, in our midst.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Lowell Journal and a copy of them with the names of the bondsmen, be placed before every temperance organization in our village and surrounding towns who come to our village to trade.

Helen M. Lewis, Cor. Sec.

MISSOURI.

Lockwood, Dade County.—As it is the duty of all on duty to report to headquarters I wish to be allowed to speak of our W. C. T. U. organized last May by dear Mary M. Clardy, with a membership of twenty-four, which has reached forty at present date. We have struggled along under great difficulties and opposition; have kept up our regular meetings though often but few present; yet our faith has been kept strong. We had organized at the same time a Band of Hope, which has been well attended. We have had C. J. Holt with us for a week. One hundred and forty-four signed the pledge. He organized a reform club, also the Cadets of Temperance. We intend establishing a reading room very soon. Through our efforts we have made the two saloons of the town gallon houses. We hope to soon see them "fold their tents and flee away," to return to our midst never more. I have sent in this week thirteen subscriptions to The Union Signal. We hope to keep our union and town posted in the temperance and reform work. The officers of our union are, president, Mrs. J. Confer; recording secretary, Mrs M. I. Lindsy; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. H. Mills; treasurer, Mrs. A. J. Duckett. L. H. Mills, Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

WISCONSIN.

Pierce County.—According to announcement the first convention of the Pierce County W. C. T. U. was held in Ellsworth, August 28, 29.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. Hobart, of Red Wing. After a prolonged discussion of ways and means a county union was organized with its usual corps of officers. Mrs. Hobart, president of Minnesota state union, inspired the zeal and courage of our workers by an apt and characteristic speech.

The address of welcome was read by Mrs. Maynard, president of Ellsworth union, and the response by Mrs. A. P. Carson, of Maiden Rock. Both showed the urgent demands of the cause that had called us in convention, and the willing, earnest spirit with which the women of the nation had ever responded.

In the evening Mrs. Hobart delivered an address which was enthusiastically received. Her arguments were strong and forcibly illustrated, and her appeal for prohibition eloquent. Her manner was not that of a public speaker, but an easy, earnest talker.

Friday, August 29, the convention was called to order by Mrs. A. P. Carson, district president. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Russell, president of Maiden Rock union.

Miss Lois Russell read an essay entitled, "She Hath Done What She Could," deriving from the beautiful story of Mary and the alabaster box an opportune and instructive lesson for our W. C. T. U. workers.

Some time was spent in discussion of plans of work.

The following resolutions with one of courtesy were adopted:

Resolved, That we are unalterably committed to total abstinence as a duty of the individual, and to prohibition as the duty of the state.

Resolved, That we recognize with gratitude the revival of woman's temperance work in this county during the past few months and rejoice over the accession of earnest, Christian workers.

The convention then adjourned. A. P. C.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Miss L. E. F. Kimball will give two weeks to our state. She will be in Chicago October 30. For terms and dates send to 161 LaSalle street.

—Unions will note that only about one week remains before our state meeting. Will they see to it that delegates are elected, dues collected and forwarded, before that time?

—The opening exercises of the state convention will take place Tuesday evening, Oct. 6. An executive committee meeting will be held Tuesday. The business session of the convention will open Wednesday, October 7, at 9 o'clock. Let all who are coming to the convention be there promptly.

—The convention will open with a grand mass meeting Tuesday evening, to be addressed by Miss Frances E. Willard, national president. The business session will commence on Wednesday, the 8th, at 9 a. m. sharp, and and continue through Thursday and Friday, closing on the afternoon of the last-named day. On Wednesday evening the annual address of the president, Miss M. A. West, will be given. On Thursday evening another mass meeting will be held, addressed by Mrs. J. Eller Foster, of Iowa.

—The executive committee will hold its last quarterly meeting on Tuesday, Oct. 7, at 9 a. m. sharp, in the Y. M. C. A. room. The presence of every member is asked for, as important business will come before us. This is our last meeting of the year, and we have much to attend to. The sessions will be held during the entire day. Arrange to be at Peoria Monday evening, and be ready for Tuesday's work.

—Delegates to the convention will please notice that only members of the executive committee are expected to arrive Monday evening. As the convention does not open until Wednesday morning delegates are not expected until Tuesday evening, and entertainment will not be provided for them earlier.

—Delegates and members of the executive committee will forward their names at once to Mrs. E. G. Hibben, of Peoria, for entertainment.

—The following partial list of speakers are announced as ready to fill engagements the coming fall and winter: Geo. Woodford, Mr. Thomas Murphy, Mrs. Jane Zimmerman, Rev. W. P. Stowe, (except Sundays), Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Capt. J. F. Linscott, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Engagements made by sending to Helen L. Hood, 161 LaSalle street.

—See Publisher's Department for full description of two invaluable campaign documents just from the press. The National Prohibition Party, or, St. John vs. the Demi-John, and The Governmental Liquor Traffic. Unions will find both of great service, and it is most desirable that they be circulated freely. Price of the former 50c. per hundred; of the latter, 40c. per hundred.

—Unions will please order freely of Leaflet No. 7, "The Story of a Great Conviction," and the four-page leaflet, "Temperance in the Public Schools." They are sent to the unions in Illinois for mere price of postage, 10 cents per hundred. They should be circulated in public meetings at state fairs and other assemblies. N. B. These leaflets by and for the Illinois W. C. T. U., are sent only to Illinois unions at above rates. Price outside of Illinois, $1 per hundred.

—The following railroads offer reductions of one and one-third fare to those attending the state convention, full fare to be paid going, and the reduction given on the return trip: Illinois Central, Chicago & Northwestern, (from Chicago, Dixon and Freeport), Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago & Alton, (from Washington, Bloomington, or Delavan), Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, Indiana, Bloomington & Western, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and Wabash & St. Louis. The Illinois Midland, Peoria & Pekin, and Central Iowa, will sell round trip tickets.

NEWS IN A NUT SHELL.

The W. C. T. U. of the Maritime provinces, has just held its second annual convention in Portland, St. John county, New Brunswick. There was a very good attendance of representatives from the various local unions. The convention from beginning to close was marked by much earnestness. The report showed that the work undertaken by the union is being steadily carried forward, and is accomplishing much good. The resolutions indicate plans for aggressive work along unions lines of W. C. T. U. work, notably the departments of unfermented wine, prison and jail work, and scientific temperance instruction. A letter was received from Miss Willard, suggesting the formation of an international W. C. T. U. and the convention voted approval of the movement.

The W. C. T. U. of Coldwater, Mich., kindly supplies the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms of that town with a copy of The Union Signal. Let other unions make a note of this.

FLOWER MISSION.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

There are varied ways of carrying to the hearts of our fellowmen around us, the pure teachings of temperance and abstemiousness; but we cannot afford to subtract from the grand sum total of work to be accomplished by overlooking any one of the sentient features of ministering.

Not less beneficent, though perhaps not so hardy a way of setting forth the truths to be presented, as through logical teaching, intellectual pleas for purity, or earnest Christian prayers, is this silent voiced branch of our work known as the "Flower Mission."

This phase of the temperance moral reformation has arisen from a little girl's request made to a passing stranger in the streets of Boston, not fifteen years ago. The sweet, plaintive voice of a street waif asked for a blossom of arbutus the lady held. It was given. From the glad face she looked upon,—when the possessor of such beauty and fragrance said some hasty, grateful words, slipped on, and was lost in the crowd,—this woman's heart was touched, and she fell to studying how blossoms from God's fields could be distributed among His neglected little ones hungry for sunshine and flowers. Ere long Boston was organized into districts, and each given into the care of helping hands and generous hearts.

New York and Phildelphia soon observed the far-reaching results of such loving ministry, and followed in the work. So sentimental you say?

Yes, truly sentimental. For the heart that is susceptible to the charms of a daisy or clover bloom, will see divinity, God's divineness, in the frail outlines and colors, and be impelled to acknowledge the Creator and Giver; to contrast itself with the flower; to recognize the beauty of perfection, and be lifted to loftier striving.

Two years ago, the most precious American woman—she who has reached down into the abyss of the tempted, and lifted up on the plane of a nobler manhood and respected womanhood; and who has rescued more children from wreck than any reformer the world has known, Frances E. Willard, inaugurated the department of the flower mission on the platform of work for the Christian temperance women of our land. Miss Casseday, of Louisville, was appointed superintendent of this new field.

As the bloom of flowers typifies the frailty of the soul's earth casket, our bodies, then most truly is Miss Casseday a type. From her invalid's room she lives in her work, and already has systematized plans for special missions, as the national prison day, day of prayer, and others. We are charmed with the thorough foresight and outlook, and are disposed to accredit no small per cent of the blessed results of the W. C. T. U. to the department of the flower mission.

Today could you view the depots of our larger cities you would find handed from the cars and awaiting appointed dispensing hands, baskets filled with flowers that grew in the quiet of some village gardens. Delicate fruits and favors for the sick too, are provided. Note the wide love for humanity prompted by the sight of a single basket. The hands that gathered them—the rough hands may be of railroad men, who are moved to tenderness in viewing the offerings; the eager hands that come to bear them off to dingy rooms in stifling streets, up dark stairs to a drunkard's home, where the wife sits in stolid indifference, or resignation to her fate. She looks with a sigh at her ragged children as she takes from the sweet-faced, kind-voiced visitor a blooming plant, or a cluster of larkspurs or apple blossoms. Some tears fall perhaps as she feels she is not utterly desolate.

Oh thank God for sympathetic hearts! For those who carry into dark places, for the sake of doing His work these messengers of fair sunlight, and emblems of a perfect life and immortality.

Would that children all over our land might early learn all that they should, to cherish and scatter flowers.

In the District of Columbia, so brilliant and fragrant with roses and honeysuckles and all flowers of God's ordaining, there is not an apparent need of passing bouquets, but we forget many houses along the river front and families close packed in dusty rooms in the second and third stories.

With the plea of my inexperience in mapping out so vast a field, in the short month I have considered it; I regret to say the work has not been very widely endowed with efforts. In November there were visits made to the hospitals.

Many hours were spent in tying bunches of,—"something white, something bright and something sweet" with dainty white ribbons, to each of which were attached words from the Bible. Words that carried comfort and support and the love of Christ.

As we gave these into pale hands, or laid them upon coverlets where tired eyes could refresh their aching sight, we thought at every bedside—at some—where no words were said only tears fell, that our hearts were richly recompensed for all cost and labor.

One white rosebud, half opened, we laid upon a baby's breast. When the rose was fully blown, the little spirit had blossomed anew in the realm of immortal flowers. What must the text attached, "Keep thyself pure," have suggested to the poor mother who watched the sufferer.

On one of our quiet streets is a college for young men and boys. One hundred and twenty-five are in attendance.

Desiring to reach stout hearts in a tender way, we made visits to this school. A tireless dear worker was with us, she spoke kind words of personal interest and warned her hearers of the danger of beginning life with careless habits. Other words were said of the monuments of character each was building. How the temples of ancient rulers had crumbled, but they might build to stand through all time and fit for eternity. Pleadings were made that they let wine alone, and absolve themselves from the social drinking customs, by which we knew they were surrounded in their homes. The principal told us afterwards every coat wore the blossoms home, and according to the request we had made; the most used book in each desk was made the repository for the text and ribbon.

I have such faith in these words: "Keep thyself pure;" "Wine is a mocker:" "If sinners entice thee consent thou not," and "study to show thyself approved unto God," shall not return void to Him who gave them, that my heart is always glad to think of the influence "altogether lovely," our mission had. Some day, at Harvard or Princeton, or elsewhere, in some tempted or discouraged moment there will come to these, then men, the words they learned on that far distant day at this school; and may help to palsy the hand that would lift a glass of wine to the lips, or give strength to protect against some moral wrong.

They must always inspire in these hearts some reverence for the tenderest of God's creation, akin to that shown by Scotland's poor, tempted, but gentle-hearted Burns, when he mourned the daisy's fate under his ploughshare.

In palliation then, for the unorganized and general way of conducting this work in the district, I humbly plead, in retiring from this department, fleeting time, and varied scope of labor.

I urge that, first you select some one for this superintendency, who can devote two days a week to the work this winter. That she have helpers in every district, and that the work may flourish, let all of the W. C. T. U. feel allied to help occasionally in this unpretentious phase of reform. And last, that while I have fallen far short of my responsibilities to the dignity and scope of the work, I hope to have the charitable epitaph of Him who long ago said of one who gave her mite, "She hath done what she could."

BELLE FITZGERALD,

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

Signal Notes.

The Sixteenth senatorial district of Illinois has nominated Rev. Joe Bell for representative and H. J. Calkins for senator.

The Prohibitionists of Massachusetts claim that they hold the balance of power in twenty legislative districts.

Ex-Gov. St. John has challenged Senator Vest of Missouri to meet him to discuss prohibition at a county fair to be held in that state on the 11th inst.

If a Republican says to you, "Why not vote for Blaine? he is a temperance man"; just ask him why he will not vote for St. John. St. John is a Republican.

On the M. E. presiding elder's district, covering the northwestern counties of Illinois, there is but one solitary preacher who will not vote the Prohibition ticket.

The town council of Talbotton, Ga., has raised the license for the sale of liquor from $500 to $5,000. Verily, the southern democratic idea of high license is high.

Blossburg, Pa., starts out with a St. John club of about thirty members. Walter C. Calpins, despatching agent at that place is an enthusiastic St. John worker. The glass company there are largely falling into line for the cause.

Prophesy According to Daniel the Prophet.—"There's a sound of an abundance of cold water; let the political Ahabs get themselves down."

The Gospel According to St. John.—"The saloon must be driven from the land." "The government should be by the people and for the people; not by whisky and for whisky." "The Republican party has ceased to be a party of moral ideas."

If the prohibitionists of Maine have one-tenth of the nerve they are credited with, they will at once put a St. John electoral ticket in the field and rebuke the knight of the white feather, James G. Blaine, for his cowardly truckling to the rum element by dodging the amendment issue at late election.

The Republicans are now appealing to the saloon men in New York to vote for Blaine and against Cleveland, because Cleveland favored the nomination of Judge Maynard for secretary of state on the Democratic ticket last fall, when he knew he was a Prohibitionist. To what depths will this so-called "God and morality party" go to elect their candidates?

The Young Men's Prohibition Club No. 1, of San Francisco, have swung an immense sign, 30 feet by 9 feet, in front of their quarters at 1049 Market street. This club is admirably located, four lines of horse-cars pass the door as do all persons who go to the new city hall from down town. The huge sign, with the portraits of St. John and Daniel in the center can be clearly seen from a distance of several blocks, and is the most conspicuous sign of its kind in the city; an electric light has been hung in front of it by the club so that "he who runs may read" by night as well as by day. It is very amusing to listen to the comments of the passers-by as they read the sign; the general verdict seems to be embodied in the frequent expression, "Those fellows mean business."

At the semi-annual meeting of the New York Brewers' and Malsters Association held at Albany last week, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this association is an anti-prohibition association, pure and simple; and that it does not affiliate itself with any political party.

Resolved, That all candidates for office shall have a circular letter addressed to them of the same wording as was sent to candidates in 1882.

Resolved, Where candidates answer "Opposed to Prohibition," each member of this association shall be at liberty to vote as he deems best. Where they fail to communicate it will be considered an answer in the negative, in which case we shall withhold our votes or select an independent candidate. Where one answers in the affirmative, and the other in the negative, we shall always support the man who "operates" with us, what ever the party.

And yet we do not hear of any "good temperance man" growing righteously indignant because these "fanatics" want to force an issue that will simply "do no good and only injure the party." But to us they cry "keep it out of politics."

Miscellaneous Selections.

Nebraska prohibitionists have nominated a state ticket and electors.

The Republican majority in the Maine election seems to be over 20,000.

New Hampshire Prohibitionists have nominated a state ticket and presidential electors.

The Michigan Central Railroad has a magnificent new station at Detroit. No saloon nor bar is allowed under its roof.

In a Boston paper is the statement that "the legislature of Vermont has forbidden the use of tobacco by teachers and pupils in the public schools."

When you are asked to drink, my son, and have half a mind to accept the invitation, remember this: If you had a whole mind, you wouldn't.—Burlington Hawk-eye.

The West Virginia Republican state convention refused to put into the platform an approval of the movement to have submitted to the people a constitutional prohibitory amendment.

If it be murder to kill a man with a bullet, it is murder to kill him with whisky. If it be a crime to assist the murderer to despatch his victim with the knife it is no less a crime to aid in killing himself with intoxicating drink.

The stranger in Germany, unless well ersed in the language of the country, is puzzled at seeing the word "lager" on signs over a great variety of shops evidently having no connection with beer selling. On inquiry he will discover that "lager" means a storehouse, or storage, and that the beer derives its name from being stored.

Many call Christ King at church, but at the ballot box they make party king. By the votes of this very class the liquor traffic is tolerated today with all its nameless and multitudinous crimes and horrors. The liquor traffic dishonors the church, endangers society, jeopardizes the state, and betrays the Master Himself in the persons of multitudes for whom He died.

The Canadian W. C. T. Unions number 147. Of these Ontario province has 96; Quebec province, 37; Maritime provinces, 10; British Columbia, 2; Manitoba, 2. Over forty counties are now agitating for local option. Temperance sentiment has made rapid advance during the year.

A wag, of whom we knew, whilom, in a Connecticut Valley Tobacco Growers' Convention, offered a resolution that the "use of tobacco ought to be encouraged in the public schools!" He broke the dead silence that followed, with, "Gentlemen, why do you balk? If this is a legitimate business, why not push it?"—Advance.

It is gratifying to see how well the temperance agitation is being kept up in England. It is stated that there were 6,126 petitions with more than half a million signatures sent up to parliament this year in favor of the Sunday closing bill, and there was not a single petition against the the bill. It will be remembered that Scotland secured a Sunday closing law many years ago, so that, if the English bill is passed, Sunday drinking will be largely put a stop to, throughout Great Britain.

The great mass of the Cincinnati saloon keepers have not paid the Scott Law tax this year, and the officials who started out so boldly a few weeks since to enforce the law have quailed before the liquor power. The county of Hamilton is minus the tax, and the liquor makers and dealers are supreme in Cincinnati. So much for the Scott Law, which it was claimed could be enforced while probibition could not. Nothing displeasing to the liquor dealers can be enforced while they control the politics and elect the officials, but when the uprising of the people shall happen, saloons and saloon loafers will no longer be able to defy law.

MAKE THE MOST OF THE FAIRS!

To aid this object, and with Mrs. Nichols' approval, we have made up a "Fair set" (15c.) from which selections can be made of tracts for distribution. But people come to Fairs to spend money and the wise worker gets them to spend some of it for Temperance Literature. To this end we have made choice selections of pamphlets at popular prices, and new low priced but effective Cards from 3c. to 10c. per set and upwards. We keep $5 and $10 parcels already made up to send off at short notice, or those who prefer can make up their orders from "Methods of Work." These supplies have thus far given excellent satisfaction. "All sold out," and, "Delighted with them." Address MISS JULIA COLMAN, 72 Bible House, New York.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equiped roads.

J DORMAN STEELE, PH. D.

EDITED AND ENDORSED by the W. C. T. U. under direction of Mrs. MARY H. HUNT.

This work contains all the excellent and popular features that have given D. Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Physiology so wide a circulation; with carefully-prepared sections upon the Physiological Action of Alcohol, Tobacco, Opium, etc. These are scattered through the book as each organ is treated. This subject is examined from a purely scientific standpoint, and represents the latest teachings at home and abroad. While there is no attempt to incorporate a temperance lecture in a school book, yet the terrible effects of these "Stimulants and Narcotics," especially upon the young, are set forth all the more impressively, since the lesson is taught merely by the presentation of facts that lean toward no one's prejudices, and admit of no answer or escape. In this edition unusual space is given to the subject of Ventilation, which is now attracting so much attention throughout the country. 300 pages, 12mo., half bound, illustrated. Specimen Copy, postage prepaid, $1.00.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 39. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 9, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at St. Louis, October 22, 23. 24, and 25, in the United Presbyterian church, corner Nineteenth and Morgan streets.

A WORSE combination of education and whisky than even Gen. Logan's is to be found in the public exercises of a leading teachers' institute held at Belleville, Ill., where after recitations, disquisitions more or less learned, and music, beer was served to all, ad libitum.

THE National Distillers' association confesses that the effort to evade the payment of government tax, by shipping spirits to Canada and more foreign parts has cost them immensely and succeeded very poorly. Over $60,000 were spent in an effort to induce the Canadian government to yield to the distillers' terms, but with no avail.

JUDGE HAYES, of Iowa, has reached the height of judicial ingenuity in the defeat of law. He now comes to the rescue of Iowa's whisky rebels, and rules out of court the witnesses for the prosecution, viz. the buyer of illicit liquor. At this rate we shall have justice (?) ruling the victim of the robber as accessory to the crime because of the money in his pocket.

BRILLIANT Hans Makat—the painter of Catherine Cornan in all her Venetian colors — died last week at the age of forty-four, from drink. Sorrow of the severest in his own household drove him to drink, and drink drove him mad. O, how old must this poor world grow before it realizes that Drink is the basest counterfeit of that Spirit which is the real Comforter!

THE governor of Kansas, who has so willingly declared his inability to enforce prohibitory law in the state, now in his political beggary for another term declares that he would have enforced the rulings of the railroad commissioners, a body of his own appointment and a pet institution of his regime, by calling upon the armed force of the state, if the railroads had not acquiesced. Strange how easy it is to fight railroads, and how hard to fight whisky.

JOHN B. GOUGH says: "I do not believe in compromises of any sort, nor have I believed in them at any time in my career. I have fought the drink traffic right straight through, and I want Prohibitionists to show an uncompromising front to that traffic. We are fighting a tremendous evil, and we must make sacrifices if they become necessary. But there must be on compromise with the enemy. You must stand to your principles. They talk about protection, but we temperance people have no protection whatever. We want protection from the liquor traffic for the widow and the orphan and the children. That is why I changed my politics, and if I live until the first Tuesday in November I shall give my vote for a Prohibitory candidate."

CHICAGO had its regular Sunday murder column in the Monday morning papers of this week. This time it was filled with the details of three murders instead of one, and drink at the bottom of all When the "renewing of allegiance" by the Republican platform to the Raster resolution, interpreted by its author to mean the "discountenancing of temperance and Sunday laws is read in the lurid light of these passion fires, how can Christian men deliberate for an instant concerning "the lesser evil?" Absolute righteousness in law is not an impossibility, if the Christian church will only vote as it prays and preaches.

THE experienced convention-goer knows that a wonderful "palate tickler" for convention sweets and substantials is the journey thither in batallions. The pleasant company of a car load of happy women bound conventionward is a real preparation for the day for which in W. C. T. U. circles all other days seem made. This year the Chicago and Alton railway—the most direct of all routes between Chicago and St. Louis, offers special cars (day coaches and sleepers) for our convenience. It will be a happy circumstance if enough of the sisterhood may pass over this line to give us a mild sort of convention on the way.

WE were in error concerning the vote on the amendment in Maine. Our mistake was in assuming that every vote for candidates was also cast for or against the prohibitory amendment, whereas the facts are, that while something like 135,000 votes were cast for the Republican and Democratic tickets, the amendment was voted for and against by about 88,000 voters, irrespective of party. Consequently we cannot determine the Democratic and Republican vote on the amendment, as we were erroneously led to believe during the week following the election. The froth of the broth having subsided, we now have the clear liquid, but so well assimilated are its constituent elements that it is a vain effort to try and distinguish between them. We are glad that it carried, anyhow. Not that it "carried anyhow," but that it had an honest, unquestioned majority.

GOV. ST. JOHN'S letter of acceptance is manly and characteristic. He sets forth the political philosophy of prohibition clearly and concisely. It contains no abuse of men or parties. It assails a national evil and shows how it underlies and overtops the superficial questions of labor reform, protection to manufactures and agricultural interests. It emphasizes the fact that we are a nation, that national enterprise and industry are suffering by reason of the liquor traffic, and calls a halt of intelligent opinion in the interest of all sections, all classes, and above all, the homes of the nation. It is the earnest outspoken word of a philanthropist and a statesman. Some of its sentences will emblazon the prohibition banner for a long time to come. "This is no time for dodging." "Moral cowardice will never win." "Let us look to God for guidance and fearlesly and faithfully do our whole duty." "God will take care of the results.'

THE national conference of Unitarian and other Christian churches held at Saratoga, last month uttered hearty words concerning the great issue of the day and age. We believe that this is the first "deliverance" of this representative body, though the denomination numbers some of the most active and conscientious temperance advocates, among whom are the Rev. Dr. W. G. Eliot, Chancellor, of Washington University St. Louis, the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Chicago, editor of Unity and pastor of All Souls church and the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, of Boston, whom everybody knows and loves. These are the resolutions:

Resolved, That under all the conditions of modern society, we believe that nothing short of a total disuse of intoxicating beverages can serve as a sure means of abolishing and preventing the miseries and evils of intemperance.

Resolved, That since it is agreed on all sides that such beverages form no part of a necessary diet for men and women in health, we affectionately call on all those who may regard their moderate use as innocent to give up such use out of compassion for their weaker brethren.

Resolved, That the magnitude of the aforesaid evils and the fact that they affect injuriously all social and public as well as private interests make it imperative that society should step to the utmost verge of its power in the employment of well-considered legislation for the suppression of the traffic in such beverages.

Resolved, That in the interests of humanity and for the honor of religion we hold it incumbent upon our ministers and churches to bear a positive and unequivocal testimony against the sale and use of intoxicating drinks.

Resolved, That since the complete triumph of temperance principles must rest on sound reason and improved education we heartily rejoice in the passage by New York, Michigan and other states of laws requiring that the physiological effects of alcohol shall be made a part of common school instruction.

THE GOLDEN AGE IS COMING.

REV. F. O. BLAIR.

Lo! the golden age is coming,
And the day will soon be here,
Which the poets ever dreamed of,
And the prophets claimed was near,
When the wrong shall never triumph,
And the righteous cease to fear,
For God is marching on.

Chorus —Glory, glory, halleluiah, etc.

There are sounds of mighty conflict
Filling all the throbbing air.
Roused from slumber, stung to madness,
Men of might their arms prepare,
While the deadly liquor traffic
Scatters ruin everywhere.
As God is marching on.

God of mercy! shall this demon
Blight our land forever more?
Shall the wail of ruined households
Always rise from shore to shore?
Heed'st Thou not the cry for vengeance
Million-voiced the crimson gore?
While God is marching on.

Hark! the answer to our pleading
Strikes with terror all our foes;
God, now leading on His people
In the pathway which He chose,
Points to total prohibition
As the cure for all our woes.
Thus God is marching on.

Gird we then for this great conflict,
Dauntless to the battle go;
Looking from the cloudy pillar,
God shall smite the trembling foe.
Soon shall rise the song of triumph,
Hushed shall be the wail of woe;
For God is marching on.

HOW TO DO IT.

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF MRS. PRESIDENT BASCOM, OF MADISON, WIS., BEFORE THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STATE W. C. T. U.

Dear Friends and Fellow Laborers:—My subject, How to do it, may seem an assuming one. In truth it is a modest one. Who so poor of intellect as not to feel competent to tell how to do a thing. We have all been told how to do it by persons who seemed to have no other power or avocation.

We have already heard what has been done, and what greater things remain to be done, and so this task of telling how to do it, seems to come next in order. I undertake it, very conscious of the fact that it is easier to give advice to twenty than to be one of the twenty to follow that advice.

The national society has in no respect better shown the far-reaching wisdom of its distinguished president than in the large number of departments of work she has established. Every one of its thirty-one departments has directly to do with the reform in hand. It is a wise economy to arrange so many lines of effort under one organization.

Scope and opportunity for work are thus given to women of every condition and every variety of gift and power. It is sad and surprising that any Christian woman can fail to ally herself to some one of these lines of effort; can fail at least to give her money and the influence of her presence, when possible, to the meetings of the W. C. T. U. We do not understand how any conscientious Christian woman can fail to recognize a loud call in this opportunity, made ready at her hand, to work for the amelioration of mankind, for the saving of souls and the coming of that kingdom for which she prays. If we are truly Christians shall we not love to let our light shine; shall we not love to declare our faith by our works before the world? Our temperance organization is so admirably adapted for its object; is so wisely presided over by one widely known and honored for her wisdom and lofty Christian character, that no woman can refuse her aid and allegiance to the society without great personal loss in those things which help to develop and build up Christian womanhood.

The pulpit and press are such powerful instruments in forming public opinion, that it is all-important that you fully enlist their influence. The pulpit and religious press have been slow to identify themselves with our cause; slow to perceive that it was pre-eminently their cause, and that the very first and nearest duty of the Christian church lies along this very line—the suppression of intemperance—that great foe to all high spiritual life, and the great obstacle to the further advance of Christian principles.

You must help the churches to learn that it is far more profitable for the coming of Christ's kingdom to work for the enforcement of righteousness than to do warfare against the new theology; far more profitable to teach the duty of temperance and regard for righteous laws, than to seek to prove by subtle analysis that religion and morality are distinct things. The world, alas, needs no such proof, no such instruction. It has ever kept morality and religion, and still keeps them, too distinct. Hence, the almost daily frauds and embezzlements of professing Christians with which our papers are filled; hence it is possible for a man of wealth to publish his report of expenses, as $500 yearly for cigars and $200 yearly for all Christian benevolences, with pride, or at least without self-reproach and confusion of face! Whence come these low Christian standards? Have the pulpit and religious press no responsibility?

The most urgent work before the unions in our state, perhaps in many states, is the work among foreigners. If we can divide the enemy against itself it cannot stand.

Miss Mary M. Miller, a woman full of zeal and ability, is superintendent of this department; competent Germans are found ready and willing to work among their countrymen; only the money is wanting. How we shall fill our local and state treasuries is the ever returning and and pressing question. The Madison union furnished lunches and temperance drinks on the state fair grounds, last week. A hundred dollars or more have thus been realized for this branch of work. But what is this where thousands are needed? Wealthy Christian men of the state must be seen, must be importuned, must be labored with, until they realize that in no more direct and commendable way can they benefit their state, to which they owe their wealth, than by thus helping to promote its individual virtues; that in no other way can they reap richer returns to themselves for the money expended.

But, first of all, and at once, let us exhaust our own resources. and support our appeal by this clear evidence of our self-denying earnestness. Woman does not usually carry or control the family purse. She can, generally, however, procure a certain yearly sum of which she shall be sole steward. This is a method to be commended. It affords opportunity to give systematically, intelligently and self-denyingly, and to win the growth and discipline of conscientious stewardship. Costly brocades and even dainty laces are without power to tempt the Christian woman who broadly realizes the needs and claims of humanity, and who remembers that she is called to keep herself unspotted from the world.

Our noble national president has gladly laid on the altar of our reform, her silver cup, the cup of literary merit, the cup of legitimate pride, the cup of pleasant memories. Under the force of such example, can we hesitate to cast into the treasury our useless ornaments, our earrings, bracelets, and necklaces! These showy gewgaws are both unbecoming and unworthy high-minded, thoughtful women, and should be relegated to the foolish and ignorant. They are relics of barbarism which we should be glad to see swept entirely away by the march of women in position. Jewelry is not a survival of the fittest, but a survival of the lowest, a survival of woman's most degraded condition, before she had found her soul, and was only an article of merchandise, In those dark days, she was bedecked with jewelry by her owner, in order to raise her market value; to kill a woman in those days was exactly the same crime as to sell an unlicensed herb! Away with such badges of the past shame and degradation of womanhood. Let us make haste to free ourselves from the thralldom of a custom so ill-begotten, and seek to redeem the past by using these ornaments that have lost their office to elevate humanity.

I feel deeply on this subject of dress, nor is it an irrelevant subject, for it easily comes under the all embracing department either of heredity or of hygiene or of finance. As a body of women deeply imbued with a high moral purpose, it certainly becomes us to give decided rebuke by our own marked simplicity in dress and in the various externals of life, to the fashionable extravagances of the day. What disgrace the following item of news reflects on us all! "A leading society lady at the Catskills is the happy possessor of one hundred and seventy-seven different costumes." If a like thing were affirmed of a man he would be set down summarily as a fool.*

To learn how much plain living and higher thinking are needed in social life, we have only to turn to the published reports of social gatherings. These reports consist almost wholly of descriptions of dry goods and decorations; making dress the primary object of society, and its display the primary use of woman. She becomes a lay figure on which merchants and tradesmen expose their goods. This extravagance is not only seen in personal display, but it extends to all the appointments of family life. The desire to make home beautiful and attractive, under rational, well-balanced limits, is most praiseworthy and should be very dear to the heart of every true home maker. But there is now sometimes discerned among our housewives a competition in rich table appointments, in expensive decorations and elegant furniture which is unworthy them; which begets lavish excess, useless cares and great weakness and weariness of soul. All members of our W. C. T. U. should denounce and discourage this sort of emulation in our homes and seek to lessen this passion for display and to inspire more love for peace and beauty of soul. Not seldom have the unrestrained ambition and vanity of a wife in these directions, driven the husband to various speculations or to gambling or forgery, or to the dishonored grave of a drunkard or a suicide. We must learn to put more conscience into our expenditures. We must especially retrench more closely our personal expenses that we may have more to give; that we may enter into the true life of liberality, of divine and sympathetic fellowship, of which as yet we have hardly a taste. Let us believe and verify in our own experience, that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

A second important and urgent branch of effort before us the coming year is by legislation to secure compulsory scientific instruction in our public schools in reference to the effects of stimulants and narcotics upon the human system. While aiming at prohibition it is all important that we delay not one iota any effort in the line of moral suasion. Legal and moral suasion are indispensable to each other and must support each other. We fully believe that both are equally required in this great reform.

We need to remember also, that woman suffrage, anti-tobacco and temperance are so interwoven, are so interdependent, that they will not bear separation; and that they must be pushed on together, for the prosperity of each.

Pittsburgh, that city of riots, more than redeems its honor by being the political birthplace of high moral issues. In 1852 the Free-soil party was born there with its grand principle of universal freedom. This year, the still more advanced principle of equal rights, irrespective of sex, has there been proclaimed and been made a national, political issue. For the first time in the history of our country, a political party has been formed willing to place this far-reaching principle in its platform, side by side with its own cardinal idea. The Prohibition party in its two high aims, prohibition of the liquor traffic and the right of woman to self-government, lays claim to the heartiest allegiance of every thoughtful woman. There is no division, no rivalry between these two purposes. To win one, is the shortest way to win the other. This party by its recognition of woman as an equal in its national political convention, has made an era in the march of Christian civilization, and won imperishable fame for itself. When Frances E. Willard arose in that convention and endorsed the nomination of John P. St. John for the chief office of the land, and, by her sure eloquence and noble sentiments commanded the rapt attention of the vast assemblage, all womanhood was glorified. No painter's art is necessary to immortalize the scene. So long as history lasts, this story will be told to the honor of woman and the praise of the Prohibition party.

* A historical document, in England, dated as late as 1782, speaks of a "bought wife delivered in a halter." This is indeed a sad picture, and yet, considering woman's advanced freedom, position and opportunities today, this picture of a society lady thus voluntarily subjecting herself to the belittling slavery of dress, is a much more sad and hopeless one.

Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad, finds illustration in the present demoralized condition and ignominious self-seeking spirit of the two great parties of our country. Both Republican and Democratic parties have rejected the great moral issues that have been brought before them. Their platforms embody no sound, patriotic principles, no progressive purposes that appeal to woman's enthusiasm and call for the weight of her moral influence. The chosen leader of one party in personal public character, finds relief, if indeed he finds relief, only in the greater impurity in private character of his opponent. No woman can afford to give her support to a candidate whose public career has been such that pure, right-minded men of his own party are compelled from conscientious conviction to withdraw their allegiance. Woman must not overlook corruption in her candidates in either public or private relations. Neither Republican nor Democratic ticket has any claim to woman's aid. They both deserve and should receive her reproof and repudiation.

The Prohibition party is the only party that endorses and advocates our cause. It is a party replete with clear, moral purposes; it is the party whose issues are the most important now before the country; it is the party whose presidential nominee bears an unblemished reputation. It is organically a woman suffrage party. First then, as women, secondly, as temperance women, we are bound, each and all, to stand by this party with all the moral force and political influence we can command. Never before was woman's political power so great; never before so much needed; never before was there a party with which she could heartily join hands without dishonor to herself and without disloyalty to her principles. Let us see our opportunity and feel the responsibility of the hour.

If it is urged upon any of us who have hitherto favored the Republican party, that by giving our influence to this new party, we are preparing the way for a Democratic victory, we reply, that the danger to arise from such victory, is, it seems to us, greatly exaggerated. If a series of years is taken into consideration, we cannot believe this change is greater than that which will arise from unrebuked self-seeking in the Republican party. This argument is quite overworn. Offense after offense has long been condoned, under the plea that some one else may do even worse. The hour has come when we have a right to cease weighing evil with evil, untrustworthiness with untrustworthiness, and seek directly and solely the true and the right.

True, the Prohibition party is a third party, a small party, but a growing one, full of moral life, a derided party, a party that may not win the present, but as surely holds the future as there is a God. The needs of the hour called it into existence. Such has been the history of the birth of each fresh political truth. There was a day of small things in the Republican party when it arose as a Free soil party, in behalf of universal freedom. It was then smaller than the Prohibition party, and its followers were more despised and more hated as fanatics. But no anti-slavery votes were thrown away in those days of weakness. Far from it. They were the vital power that gave the party strength to grow and conquer. So it is at this time. The vote for principle during the present campaign will be the only powerful vote, whatever the immediate result. It will, indeed, be the only vote that is not worse than thrown away. Only action founded on eternal truth goes marching on with its blessed results. Let us feel the opportunity and obligation of the hour, and with heart and soul help speed on the forces of righteousness. Let us strike, each and all, and with all our might, for that which ought to be, and God will bless the blow. Those of you who saw the drunkenness and debauchery that disgraced our state fair of last week will surely need no words to fill your soul with enthusiasm for the Prohibition party, the party that would make such low, degrading scenes impossible; the party that is the only open, political enemy of such prostitution of law, of such degradation of manhood. I rejoice that our state W. C. T. U. is already pledged in loyalty to the national society, to lend its influence to this party; the party that seeks the purity and peace of the home, and so the purity and peace of the nation.

I beg you to think on these things, soberly; to consider thoughtfully the great issues now at stake, the great perils that threaten, and strive conscientiously, as Christian women, to meet your obligations concerning them.

My prayer is, my hope is that that the W. C. T. U. of Wisconsin will not be found wanting in the present crisis; that it will arise in its might, and with resistless esprit-de-corps will do a work — a telling work — before the coming election, during the election, and after the election, for the Prohibition party. This will be a worthy work for God and home and native land.

WHICH FIRST? SUFFRAGE OR PROHIBITION? AND WHY?

DR. MARY WEEKS BURNETT.

The vital relation of equal suffrage to Prohibition may be thus stated:

Suffrage—A legal expression of opinion.

Prohibition—A legal protection from an evil.

Organized Government—The vehicle through which the concurrent expression of the majority of the people becomes law for the protection of the whole people.

Equal Suffrage— The right of each responsible individual, to the authoritative or legal, expression of opinion.

Prohibition — The right of each individual responsible or irresponsible, to protection from an evil.

Partial suffrage deprives one-half of the responsible citizens of the United States of the right to legal expression, and in so doing deprives them also of the right to legal protection for themselves and for all citizens, from the liquor traffic and other great evils.

Licensed or free liquor, under partial suffrage, deprives the country every year of 100,000 lives, and offers no protection from this wholesale slaughter, deprives the homes (which are the bulwarks of the country) of their purity, their dignity and their power, and fills the jails, the penitentiaries and the gallows with victims whose first right is protection, not punishment.

The unfranchised class, that portion of the responsible citizenhood who are inhibited from giving legal expression to its opinion, is, by a large and intelligent majority, in favor of protection from the liquor evil by prohibition.

To withhold from one-half of the responsible citizens of the United States the power of legal expression, is also to withhold from the innocent, the weak, and the defenceless citizens the right that belongs to all persons who live under organized government, the right to protection. Universal, intelligent, legal expression of opinion, will secure to all the citizens of the United States true protection by legal prohibition.

WHITE RIBBON CONVENTIONS.—WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

Dear Union Signal: There is any amount of electricity in the air "out west," and I am spiritually refreshed, if physically weary, as a result of the two conventions just concluded. In Waukesha we met the white ribbon band that badgers the brewers and found it grown to encouraging proportions, and full of the courage of conviction and the patience of hope. Prof. Schmitz, of Elgin, Ill., had given a lecture the night before which was highly praised. Our workers believe him to be "the coming man," in German work. Mrs. Emma C. Bascom, first vice president, has stood at the head since Mrs. Irish went abroad, and is a woman so revered and beloved that the W. C. T. U. of Wisconsin covets her with righteous coveting for its president.

Among our representative women we have not a purer choicer American type than Mrs. Dr. Bascom. She is known to many different publics. The Woman's Congress never had a more incisive, regnant mind in its bright constellation; the University of Wisconsin which has in Dr. John Bascom one of the most philosophic minds of the age, possesses in his wife a lady of the utmost culture and social grace. The Woman's Suffrage Association rejoices in her labors, and the W. C. T. U. crowns her its queen. Truth, for truth's own sake is the chief fascination of Emma Bascom's mind. I believe she would follow it to the scaffold with a smile as radiant as others give it on the throne. Her address to the convention was one of the ablest to which I have any where listened. When she told the ladies to consult their Bible and The Union Signal, a ripple of applause and many expressive smiles and nods showed that the point was well taken. When she declared for St. John this was renewed, and by rising vote they accepted her sentiments. Hon. S. D. Hastings, prohibition candidate for governor, was received with applause. The suggestion of a resolution not to patronize the next state fair if stimulants are sold, was adopted. Mr. H. told me he was one of thirteen despised Freesoilers in the Wisconsin legislature of 1849. My honored father was another. There are always living issues, carried at first by unpopular minorities, and later on winning great majorities to the polls and the statute book. Let the forlorn hope take heart of hope—it shall become the grand army of the republic.

Anna Gordon started a Y. W. C. T. U. at 8 o'clock in the morning and its first reception will be held in the beautiful home of our own kind hostess, Mrs. Lamb, formerly of Chicago, and a worker with us there.

Mrs. Bascom, not feeling that she could accept the presidency in view of her many cares, my dear pupil and friend Miss Amy Kellogg, was chosen to that place. When I remember her record as a speaker, a parliamentarian and a true, earnest Christian, I have high hopes of Miss Kellogg. The Northwestern University has sent out few students better fitted for the career of a philanthropist. The finest scholarship is but fitting preparation for such sacred work as now comes to her hands. Dear Mrs. Bradish is universally beloved and was unanimously re-elected corresponding secretary with a downright enthusiasm that I rejoiced to see. If ever woman deserved well of a constituency it is Sarah P. Bradish.

The new recording secretary, Miss Collins, is said to be a woman of high rank in the aristocracy of character, and the treasurer (see your report for name) is much esteemed. It seemed good to see Mrs. C. W. Pinkham, of Fond du Lac, whose wit is so ready and heart so true, one of the temperance pioneers. Sisterly messages were sent to Mrs. Beale, who "held the fort" in dark days past.

I saw old friends of the days when I too was a Wisconsin woman, and the St. John badge upon the breasts of some did my heart good.

Mrs. Marion B. Baxter, of Michigan, spoke the second evening and gave excellent satisfaction I hear. She is a woman of earnestness and power.

On we speeded to Winona, bearing greetings from the women of Wisconsin to those who dwell in "the land of the sky tinted waters." At Winona, in one of the most elegant stone churches I have anywhere seen, the Minnesota union was under way, holding a reception the evening of our arrival.

Mrs. Dr. Hobart has a strong brain and true heart. Her husband, Rev. Dr. Chauncey Hobart, was our "presiding elder" in Janesville, in 1846. I can still recall the first text, and the impression the clear cut articulation and noble presence of the speaker made upon a seven year old. "Our Rock is not as their rock, our enemies themselves being judges."

Reports show decided gains here. One hundred and fifty delegates on the list; eighty local unions; departments of work well defined. In the foreign work there is especial vigor as there must be with such an immense influx from ober see. Laura Fixen gave $25 to help on this cause. A Norwegian gentleman of genial presence spoke of temperance work in his own country and I was so much interested that I asked him to write down some of the points, which he did, and I subjoin them:

Dr. A. Kloster started the temperance movement in Norway, in 1859. He was a noble, gifted man of high character and quenchless zeal. He succeeded in getting about fifty unions with ten thousand members. This beloved leader died in 1876, was succeeded by Dr. Oscar Nissen, of Christiana, with whom I (Lars Owre) worked as secretary of the movement. When I left Christiana last March, there were 303 unions, with more than forty thousand members in the society (i. e., throughout Norway) besides Good Templars, Blue Ribbon societies, etc. Many churches also have it as a rule that their members must be total abstainers. There are at least sixty thousand of these in Norway. We are moving for the women to speak. That was a great innovation, but it is accepted now, to some extent, and women can be members of our society, but do not yet come as delegates. For my part I would have them vote, and they will some time.

We have a fine temperance paper, with illustrations. Your American leaders will find their pictures here, published in Christiana, and the white ribbon women are remembered and known among us as well as the blue ribbon men.

This good and gifted man, Lars Owre, will be heard from again in our Minnesota work I doubt not. The Y. W. C. T. U. is made much of in Minnesota, as it should be everywhere. A whole evening was given up to its graceful recitals, devotional exercises and all being conducted by the members. Anna started a Band of Hope, which certain lovely girls agreed to foster. Mrs. Prof. Winchell, whose husband is a professor in Minnesota University, is among our leaders here; also Mrs. Gallinger, Miss Henderson, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Drew and others. Mrs. A. T. Anderson, chairman of committee on resolutions, is a clear-headed and capable woman, as her report shows. It was on the frontier line of progress in all matters pertaining to our cause, and was adopted, so I learn since leaving. On the question of National Prohibition and a national candidate committed to that issue, it has no doubtful interpretation.

Mrs. S. B. Stearns, of Duluth, I here met with sincere pleasure. Her name is familiar to all readers of the Woman's Journal. Without one grudging word the women of Minnesota voted to pay ten cents per capita a year to the National W. C. T. U. hereafter, instead of five. This is an example to our older states, and if all would follow it, the old mother National would not be so straightened for the wherewithal to carry out its plans of broad, far-reaching work. Let us think on these things. Yours ever, Frances E. Willard.

En route Minnesota to Illinois, Sept. 26, 1884.

THE GREAT SYMPOSIUM.

The letters which pour in upon the editor relative to the political situation would fill the paper from now till Christmas. It seems best therefore to condense sufficiently to let each voice be heard, and we herewith present the salient points of each letter pro and con, and shall continue the symposium so long as time permits, and expressions continue to be made.

MRS. ELISE PFEIFFER, PENNSYLVANIA.

When the resolution was passed at Detroit, Michigan, that the N. W. C. T. U. will lend her influence to that party, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, etc., our ladies did not think that they will be in a struggle for which they are not responsible; but it is the Providence that gave the work such a direction. No great struggle was ever completed alone by one party or the other, but in the time of war it is the duty of all and every one to fight.

In 1870, Emperor William I. of Germany (then but King of Prussia,) did not think at first, that there would be a bloody war with France, and when the terrible campaign began the southern states of Germany did not like Prussia, its "boss rule," and among those the Catholic Bavarians, but still they fought very bravely for the victory and power of the German union, though that war was not conducted for such noble principles as is the present political battle. As these noble sons of Bavaria had sacrificed their personal opinions, and even their lives in several bloody battles, why should not everybody sacrifice his personal opinion and vote for a third party, and as even these brave Catholic Bavarians, commanded by the German Crown Prince, brought the victory of the German army to an issue in the bloody battle of Froeshviller (Aug. 6, 1870), why should not all fellow-workers "in this great battle for a clear brain" unite and fight manfully, that this burning question may be brought to an issue this year yet. And as the French general McMahon, even in that battle, purposely sacrificed a whole regiment of cuirassiers, in order to save several thousand other soldiers; why should not this brave host of Christian voters in our country make a risk and cast their votes for St. John and Daniel, in order to weaken those parties that are opposed to national prohibition. By thus risking only the vote, and not the life, the good Christian principle is saved, and this is a great gain for the noble cause.

Now, the plough goes over that battle field, and over the graves of those faithful cuirassiers, who gave their lives, in order to save many others; and when some lady will celebrate the feats of some heroes by song, she takes the "cuirassiers of Froeshviller." So the heroism of the first votes for the Prohibition party and national prohibition will long be remembered and celebrated by coming generations.

MRS. GENERAL SINGLETON, ILLINOIS.

While we are electing state legislators to enact prohibition in our respective states is it not our duty also to vote for congressmen, pledged to dissolve this odious partnership between the whisky traffic and the nation? So long as we permit this partnership to continue, we the people of these United States are responsible for this traffic and its terrible consequences, and the only way by which we as Christian men and women can clear our skirts of our individual responsibility for it is to use all the moral and intellectual light and force which God has given us, in combating it, until we shall have succeeded in destroying it.

In Iowa and in Kansas one of the old parties has endorsed and enacted prohibition in the state. It is a noteworthy fact, however, that such endorsement was not made until a large number of prohibition voters had demanded it as the price of their continued allegiance to the party and that such endorsement was very unwillingly granted by many of the leaders of that party and that there is now a considerable minority who would if they could reverse the policy of the party upon this question.

In Illinois and Indiana the conditions are different; here neither of the old parties are friendly to prohibition; both have distinctly refused to advocate it, more than that, both are bidding openly and notoriously for the support of the liquor league. In Illinois they have imposed upon us a high license law which makes us doubly partners with the whisky traffic through the action of our state as well as our national government.

In Indiana a legislature elected on the issue of submission refused to submit, thus violating its pledges and betraying its constituents.

Neither party, now, even pretends to favor our cause. In national politics each of the candidates of the two great political parties, has published his bid for the whisky vote and influence, the one by referring to that plank in his party platform declaring against all sumptuary legislation the other by proposing under his own signature in a letter written for publication, to make the partnership between the whisky traffic and the nation perpetual, and to fortify it by giving to each of the states a vested money interest in it by dividing the proceeds among them.

It seems to me that the Prohibitionists of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and all other states where the old parties have turned their backs upon them and are on their knees to the whisky league, cannot do otherwise than sustain the one party which strikes for "God and home and native land." How can the noble band of Christian temperance women refuse their sympathy and their earnest aid to a party organized to promote a cause for which they have worked so long and so bravely?

The National Prohibition party is largely the result of the labors of the W. C. T. U. Shall the mother refuse love and sympathy to the child? "Put not your trust in princes."

I do not doubt that almost every state in the Union would enact and maintain prohibition could it be fairly submitted to and discussed by the people, but the political leaders have become used to accomplishing political results through the saloons and the use of whisky and would be at a loss to conduct a campaign without those agencies. They have courted that interest until it has become so powerful that they are afraid to offend it, and they continue to court it even at the risk of incurring the hostility of the moral and religious sentiment of the country.

The whisky league relies upon them to delay the submission of this question to the people as long as it is possible to do so. They will divert public attention with less important issues or pretended issues, so long as we allow them do it. There are exceptions to this rule in each of the great political parties, men of high character and statesmanlike views who will not prostitute their principles to expediency, but, unfortunately, the control of the parties is not in the hands of this element.

We freely accord to our sisters in Iowa the right to give or withhold their support to our national party, and we claim for ourselves the same freedom. Surely those who deem it their duty to give their sympathy and support to that party cannot be doing wrong whether they are privates in the ranks or the generals in the army.

The Union Signal is the recognized organ of the W. C. T. U. and as such properly gives expression to the sentiments of individual members whether in favor of or opposed to national action.

We can discuss in a courteous and sisterly spirit our differences as to method while we work earnestly together for the accomplishment of our common purpose.

MRS. N. M. DAGGETT, MASSACHUSETTS.

Our day of prayer for the nominating convention was very generally observed, and has not God promised to hear and answer all true prayer? A great volume went up to the throne of God for the Republican convention, and though at first sight, the desires seemed not to be granted, yet who can doubt that God was there, and that in His own way, not ours, is answering the many petitions of His people.

One of the special topics for prayer was that we might have patience, and charity for those who were not in sympathy with us on this question. This great evil has been one of long standing, is deeply rooted, a part of humanity itself almost. A few of the many millions of our land, have become awakened to its terribleness, and are doing with their might whatsoever their hands find to do to crush it out. A good beginning has been made, and some of us have made rapid strides in ten years. But where are the great majority of the people? Where we were a few years ago with perhaps a keg of beer in some of our cellars. Ought we not to have charity and patience.

The supposition is that the men who constituted the conventions of Chicago were men of intelligence. I have pondered this matter over and over and my firm convictions are that it was God's way of answering our prayers. A disappointment of our hopes, a partial defeat, but a message to us to buckle on the armor of faith, and fight more valiently the battle of the Lord, for the cause is His, and we are assured of victory in the end.

I would counsel patience, and charity toward all who may differ from us and a patient waiting God's time. He never hurries, but little by little His great plans and purposes are accomplished. We cannot undo in a few years what it has taken ages to plant and root in the habits and lives of men. Time and patient persevering effort with no threats or harsh words will surely win at last. "If the vision tarry, wait for it."

A DETROIT DELEGATE.

At Detroit every delegate present knew Miss Willard's sentiments on the question of "third party," and separate political action. She came out plainly, and all present understood where she stood. She received the unanimous vote of the convention. Now I think Christian women should be consistent, and our women are certainly not consistent if they antagonize her cause as some are doing. If they must work for Republicans let them do so, but not try to hinder others. Another point: I find in Mrs. Foster's report at Detroit this language, pages 125, 126: "Prohibitionists have always claimed, and they have been sustained in their claim by state and national supreme courts that the spirit of constitutions guaranteeing protection to life, liberty, and property justifies the absolute putting away of the liquor traffic. . . . It has been a very general belief among politicians of all parties that this question does not come within the domain of political action; the Prohibition party in state and nation has clearly set forth that the whole question is the proper subject of political action. . . . Every temperance woman ought to oppose, by voice and influence, the action of any party in which it ignores or refuses to submit this question to the votes of the people. She ought also to support the action of any party wherein it commands its representatives to thus aid the people in the expression of their will. . . . Do not be afraid of the charge of partisanship. . . . God forbid that any temperance woman with doubt or discord weaken the strain or cause the time to drag." Is she not doing this to-day?

MRS. M. J. ALDRICH, IOWA.

The only question among us is whether we can get a prohibition congress sooner by taking the prohibition element out of existing parties, in order to make a Prohibition party, or by letting each state send prohibition congressmen just as fast as they can get control of the existing parties, in order to do so. Iowa has had two prohibition representatives there already, and one good strong prohibition senator at least. I'm sure there is "more to follow," in the near future, and Kansas congressmen have not all been whiskeyites these latter years. And I want to say another thing. I honor the conscience of the men who vote the St. John ticket this fall, but I don't admire their judgment. It is easy to scold the old parties for not taking stronger temperance ground in the last twenty-five years, before the people who make the rank and file of those parties, had temperance convictions that demanded authoritative expression, and while other great questions were engrossing their political attention and action; but I don't think it is the most logical thing in the world to "judge the future by the past" under the different conditions of the newly awakened interest and deeper convictions of our temperance people today. And again, as to Judge Rothrock's nomination, the party made up of license, as well as prohibition men, did just what such a party might be expected to do, and just what it could not have done had the Prohibitionists united on any one strong unobjectionable candidate, and put in time and money necessary to arouse the people to as decisive action as they took a year ago. It may be easier to rebuke the party by not voting for Rothrock, but it won't do our cause quite as much good as it would have done to have defeated his re-nomination, and even are I believe in perfect political fairness. Much as I dislike Judge Rothrock's re-nomination, I don't think he ought to be understood as opposed either to constitutional or statutory prohibition, and as district judge his decisions always gave the benefit of the doubt to our old prohibitory law, if I am not mistaken; and I think he voted for our prohibitory amendment. His unpardonable sin (politically speaking), was in declaring the amendment invalid, because of a technical legal irregularity in the eighteenth general assembly, basing that decision upon a review of the acts of the eighteenth general assembly, which it was the province of the nineteenth or second general assembly to review before ratifying the proposed amendment, and submitting it to the vote of the people. A large number of our temperance people believed the court had no warrant for such review of the acts of the eighteenth or first general assembly adopting the amendment; because they believe the constitution left that work in the hands of the nineteenth or second legislature, and that the court should have taken their decision as final. This question is, to our untutored, unsophisticated minds, unbiassed by a legal education and habit — a bigger one than that of prohibition even, but I don't want even Judge Rothrock misrepresented. I think his vote in the coming election will show that not all Prohibitionists who continue to vote the party ticket have forgotton his doubtless honest, but in our judgment, great mistake. And now concerning all this seeming discord, because of differing convictions in regard to methods, I will close with the words of one of our dear workers: "I have perfect confidence in results, as it is the Lord's work, and He is going to attend to it — if His agents get into too big a hurry, they will fetch up standing against the inevitable, and learn to "make haste more slowly."

MRS. R. A. BAILEY, MICHIGAN.

Why, I would ask, did Mrs. Foster argue, in the convention assembled at Detroit, for a memorial to be presented to the different political conventions in behalf of prohibition principle, if it was "the sin of presumption" to expect those national assemblies convened for national purposes, to consider said question?

Why were we advised to wait until this "one more test" was given them ere we withdrew our allegiance? The test was given, they were tried in the balance and found wanting, (yes wanting the whisky vote and making their bid accordingly.)

And now we are advised to be non partisan, as a union but give our aid individually and collectively, to the election of a man who stands on one of these platforms, which utterly ignored, yes treated with contempt the principle, which we as American mothers so earnestly and prayerfully plead.

MRS. M. L. T. HIDDEN, VERMONT.

At our convention last week at Middlebury, a resolution was passed expressing unfaltering loyalty to our beloved national president, Frances E. Willard, and endorsing her action and that of the national executive committee at the Prohibition convention at Pittsburgh, as being in harmony with the resolution passed at the Detroit convention which proves that the Vermont delegates and the Vermont W. C. T. U. understood the true meaning of that resolution, and desire to stand with our national president, as she stands where we placed her.

When we voted to "lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called. which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes, we most certainly committed ourselves as fully as it was possible for women to do so— to party action, and we placed ourselves where we must choose a party, and those who deny the right of the Prohibition party to claim our influence because it is not the best embodiment of prohibition principles and because they claim we must not assume a partisan attitude demonstrate that they themselves are strong partisans by coming out in opposition to us, and in favor of any other party.

In some respects Vermont is situated somewhat as is Iowa. We are grateful to the Republican party for all the good it has accomplished, but we cannot forget that it is this Republican party which is in power which is upholding the liquor traffic throughout the length and breadth of the land. It is this party which, through its representatives went, up to Chicago and ignored the only vital question which is before the nation. So we do not feel bound any longer to stand by a party which dare not stand by principle.

If we ever entertained the idea at Detroit that either of the leading parties could be educated up to the standard of prohibition, the revelations of these last few months must have removed the delusion, as we have heard one party cry "Away with all sumptuary laws" and the leaders of the other saying, Open your breweries and saloons and let us make this liquor traffic a source of revenue.

It has seemed to me as I have read the discussion going on in The Union Signal, that the difference in our views in the ranks of the W. C. T. U. was more one of circumstances than belief.

When that much discussed resolution was passed at Detroit, we were all with one accord in one place, sitting in the conscious presence of the influence of the Holy Spirit. The language of our hearts then was "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" We testified by vote as the Spirit gave us wisdom.

Today we are in the midst of a presidential campaign which touches our homes through the different parties. Mrs. Jones, delegate to the national W. C. T. U. convention, did believe that she wished more than anything else that the homes of the country might be protected from evil. She was ready to say, under the blessed influence of that meeting of mothers and sisters from all over the land, "I am ready to be offered if need be for the right," but Mrs. Senator Jones, of Jonesville, at home today and under other circumstances, feels constrained by the honor put upon her husband to proclaim that her home will be most effectually protected through the old parties, especially after Mr. Jones once takes his seat in the senate. "There is a great difference in the surrounding circumstances my dear," she would say were we to interview her upon the question. Oh, yes, that is very true. But we are so glad that our circumstances here in Vermont have not so changed, but that we can still stand for the right, feeling assured that our cause is the Lord's and He can take care of the results.

MRS. D. M. ALLEN, OHIO.

The entire credit of all legislation in behalf of woman is given by Mrs. Livermore to the Republican party! That it has done much is cheerfully conceded. But it has done what, and only what, the growing sentiment of the times demanded; and it could not have done less and held its supremacy.

If it be true, as it most certainly is, that much has been done for the amelioration of woman under Republican rule; it is also true that the party has often violated its most solemn pledge,—actual or implied, "making the promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope." Mrs. Livermore forgets to state that the first time full and impartial suffrage was granted to woman it was done by a Democratic legislature.

In regard to legal enactments looking toward restricting or prohibiting the liquor traffic, Mrs. Livermore says, "Whatever gain has been made in temperance legislation * * has been the work of the Republican party." (?) Unfortunately the facts do not warrant the bold averment.

The Cleveland Herald, one of the ablest Republican papers of northern Ohio, in an editorial published Sept. 10, says, "It is a fact that the strongest Democratic states are the strongest anti-liquor states. Georgia, Florida, Maryland and North Carolina have temperance laws more stringent than the Scott law of Ohio. They are absolutely prohibitory where they are in effect at all. In all but four of the counties of Georgia prohibition is as well assured as in any county of Iowa or Maine. The effort to make capital by claiming the Republican party to be the only temperance party in the Union, is futile."

The Chicago Tribune, one of the leading Republican papers of the west, lately published a lengthy editorial to prove that the Democratic party was more inimical to the liquor interest than the Republican party. In proof of its position it compares Democratic Missouri, where the saloons are taxed more than $1,000 each for selling whisky, and $550 for selling beer and wine, where in thirty Democratic counties no licenses are granted, with Republican Illinois where the path of rum sellers is less thorny, and closes with an exhortation to the Germans to "think the matter over and they will be convinced that 'personal liberty' will be safer on the whole under Republicans than under Democrats."

Once more: The Journal of Freedom and Right, published at San Francisco, Cal., in an editorial headed "Historical Facts" says, "The first prohibitory law in the country was passed in Maine in 1846 by a Democratic legislature. Democratic legislatures passed prohibitory laws in Minnesota and Rhode Island in 1852, and the same year a Freesoil and Democratic legislature passed a similar law in Massachusetts.

"In 1853 a prohibitory law was passed by the Democrats in Michigan, and in the following year in Connecticut by the same party. In 1855 the Democratic legislature of Nebraska passed a prohibitory law.

"Take another fact equally well authenticated: The prohibitory statutes of most of these states have been repealed or rendered nugatory by subsequent legislation, and the repeal legislation has come, in almost every instance, from the Republican party."

And yet Prohibitionists are exhorted by Mrs. Livermore, Mrs. Foster and others to stand by the Republican party as their only hope of salvation from the woes of intemperance! That too in face of the fact that the Republican candidate for the presidency is either a friend of the saloon and the dramshop or an arrant coward, false to his sacred duty to God, home and native land, proclaiming in face of the nation, "I did not vote for the prohibitory amendment." No wonder Republican papers are able to announce, "German saloon keepers are warm in their support of the Republican presidential ticket."

"In Eaton, O., eleven Republican saloon keepers have gone back to their first love and will henceforth be Republicans."

"The Irish are with us, and the saloon keepers have returned."

Just what Blaine intended and expected, but Prohibitionists must stick to the Republican party—so says Mrs Livermore.

E. R. CHAMPLIN, RHODE ISLAND.

I wish to say a few words in reply to some of Mrs. Livermore's statements in The Union Signal of Sept. 25. Speaking of the card which she issued soon after the national Prohibition convention, she says she "was very careful not to add to her signature" thereto, "any official weight," adding, "It was my individual advice, possessing such value as may inhere in the character I bear" etc. However guarded Mrs. Livermore may have been in making this "manifesto," must it not have appeared to her that in thus expressing herself she was very likely to influence a great many women, members of the W. C. T. U. against acting in accordance with the Detroit resolution? besides influencing not a few men against not voting for St. John and Daniel?

Surely her card could have had no greater weight with such individuals had it borne the official signature, nor could it have more successfully misrepresented the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., not to mention the national organization. Her evident aim was to dissuade any women who might be disposed to act in accordance with the Detroit resolution from so doing, and doubtless in many instances that aim was accomplished. Happily, however, there are too many independent, thoughtful women in the N. W. C. T. U. to render it likely that the majority will abandon the policy of that organization.

It seems to me that Mrs. Livermore does not grasp the situation. If she were not ignorant of party history she would never claim that all the advance in moral and intellectual reform which has been made in the last thirty-four years is creditable to the Republican party. It is not true that "whatever gain has been made in temperence legislation has been the work of Republicans." Republicans in some places, have indeed done far more for prohibition than the Democrats, but so too have Democrats in some places done far more than the Republicans, and in respect to national action, no one can claim that Republicans have ever begun to do anything. The question for us to consider is not what Republicans in isolated states have done, but what they have done as a national party. The fact is, the Republican party is a distinct body from the thousand of good men who are known as Republicans, and its platform and candidates clearly express what sort of platform it is, and what sort of men they are. Is there a token of desire for moral reform in the government in either the platform or the utterances of the candidates?

But Mrs. Livermore cautions her younger sisters to make haste slowly. This advice, coming from one so long attached to the Republican party, in so far as it relates to action opposed to that party, is not, perhaps, to be wondered at. But why should a live reformer talk about the time not having arrived for national prohibition, as thousands of halting and faithless ones are talking today? She is affected by the popular cry. One of two candidates will be elected, and I shall throw my vote (or influence) away, if I do not vote (or work) for one or the other. (For, although she advises all her sisters of the W. C. T. U. not, as a body, to attach themselves to any political party, she proposes herself to advocate the Republican party, and is already at the work.)

MISS AURILLA FURBER, MINNESOTA.

Prohibition within the state is a matter of state control that is true. But is it true that therefore no action of the federal government ean affect it? The women of the W. C. T. U., as well as the men of the third party, have been ringing into the ears of the people the fact that the money received by our states and cities from the saloons within their borders is one of the strongest powers against the desire for prohibitory laws. They believe this now that the Republican party has placed at its head two men whose united sentiments in regard to the liquor traffic read thus:

"Make the liqeor traffic a permanent resource to the nation, divide it among the states for school purposes, or the lessening of taxation. Does any one think that such an annual present as that to a state will do nothing to retard the enactment of prohibitory laws within that state? It is plain that the general government can hinder their cause in the states terribly, and the two highest officers of our government are not without a mighty power in our congress aside from the fact that they and congress will probably be of the same political complexion. Two such men in the position of Logan and Blaine in the position in which the Republican party is endeavoring to place them can hinder our cause in the states according to our own reasoning. Those who say that they cannot help it must turn things over in their minds about as the sailor did whom I once heard say "We can shorten our lives but we can't len'ten 'em any."

Gov. St. John, in Round Lake interview, in New York Sun, August 31: "I will give you two straws that haven't been published. On a train of nine cars the other day in the western part of the state a canvass showed 67 for St. John, 42 for Blaine, 19 for Cleveland, 2 for Butler. Another train was canvassed at Hornellsville. The vote stood 51 for St. John, 27 for Blaine, 13 for Cleveland, and 2 for Butler. These were ordinary trains, not excursion trains. In Madison county there are two St. John clubs, one composed of 30 Republicans and the other of 38 Democrats.

THE TWO PATHS.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

F. M. HOLMES.

CHAPTER V.—THE FIRST DAY IN LONDON.

The mid-day sun was lighting with feeble gleams the gloomy veil of heavy mist which hung over London's dingy streets as the train which brought the two brothers to the metropolis slowly rumbled into the terminus.

Poor lads! it had been indeed a dull and dreary morning for them. They seemed going from all that they held dear to enter a cold hard world. But as Harry stepped on the platform he strove hard to dismiss these feelings. "Now I must be a man," he said to himself; "work hard and carve out a fortune, and find new friends. Have I not put my trust in God? All things must then be well."

He hurried at once to the baggage van, pushed his way through the crowd and picked out his box; a ready porter soon had it on his shoulder and carried it to a cab. In another minute Harry and his little brother were seated in it and rattling over the stony paved streets to the lodgings found out for them by their uncle.

These lodgings were in a quiet, dull street in Camden Town, and it was with a feeling of timidity that Harry knocked at the door. Everything was so new and strange.

He was somewhat reassured, however, when the door was opened by a portly-looking dame of kind and motherly appearance, who smiled benignantly upon the friendless little lads, and welcomed them right heartily. So pleasant and affable was she, and so comfortable did she make them, that Harry and his brother soon felt quite at home, and happy as they could be under the circumstances.

Being very tired they went early to bed, and as Teddy nestled down by Harry's side he put his arm round his neck and murmuring, "I do 'ove oo so; oo's so good to me," he went off into a sound sleep. Harry was not long in following him, and thus with arms around each other the drunkard's children slept. The next morning, however, was to be Harry's great trial—his first day at business. Teddy was inconsolable, and he cried bitterly when the time came for Harry to go. But Mrs. Julian, their landlady, did her utmost to please and interest him, and after a little while succeeded in diverting his attention. Their lodgings were not large. They had only one bedroom at the top of the house, and shared Mrs. Julian's sitting-room. With an unpleasant landlady this would have been trying, but Mrs. Julian was so pleasant that it was indeed far better—as it was cheaper—than having a separate sitting-room, and Teddy in a short time soon became quite fond of her.

Mrs. Julian was a pattern landlady. Her heart quite yearned over the orphan lads, and she did her best to make them happy. I admit all landladies are not so good as she, but still there are some who are as kind and pleasant.

It was, therefore, with satisfied feelings, as far as Teddy was concerned, that Harry started off that morning to the city. "Surley," thought he, "it must have been God Himself who has led us to these comfortable lodgings," and he felt comforted and strengthened at this evidence of the Almighty Father's care.

By carefully following Mrs. Julian's directions and making numerous inquiries he found his way to the railway station, and finally to the business house in which he was to be engaged.

Arrived there, he asked to see the head of the firm, and after waiting a little while he was shown into a private room.

As Harry sat here waiting the arrival of his employer his heart beat fast and his breath came quick. What sort of man would his new master be? Presently the door opened, and as he came in Harry rose to meet him, and felt reassured at once when the gentleman shook him kindly by the hand.

"Sit down, sit down," he said genially. And then he asked him many details about his qualifications for business which need not be specified here. Harry answered in a straightforward and manly but modest manner which won his employer's regard.

"Well," he said at length, "if you are earnest and industrious I think I can promise that we shall soon raise your salary and position. But remember this, your success depends very largely on yourself. Stick to business and business will stick to you. And now a word on another matter. You are young, inexperienced, and unused to London life. The great safeguard for a young man in London is total abstinence. I do not put this principle in place of religion—far from it. But I look upon it as a part of practical religion. I might say that I believe it to be almost impossible for a young man alone in London to live a pure and blameless life without this principle, for without it he is led into so many and varied temptations. They beset him on every side."

"I have already decided upon this," replied Harry smiling, "and I am a teetotaler already."

"That is right; keep to the pledge, my boy, through thick and thin. And now I will introduce you to Mr. Cracroft, the manager, who will instruct you as to your duties."

In a few minutes, then, behold Harry seated at his desk engaged in the delightful occupation of earning an honest livelihood for his little brother and himself. And surely as the Almighty Father looked down upon him, he smiled upon and blessed him as He blesses all who earnestly strive to do their duty in His great world of work.

Very quickly, as it seemed to him, the dinner hour came, and Mr. Cracroft told Shipworth, a young man slightly above Harry's age, to go out with him and show him the restaurant at which he dined.

This Harry thought was great fun, and he felt himself a man indeed, dining out every day in this manner.

No sooner were they seated than his companion called out for a pint of stout. "Won't you have some stout too?" he asked Harry.

For a moment the boy hesitated. Everybody around was drinking wine or beer. It would look so singular for him to abstain, and his new companion might think him weak-minded and unmanly. But his resolutions came to his mind. He remembered his pledge, his talk with his good friend Dr. Sowerby, and also with his kind employer. "No, thank you," said he; "I am a teetotaler."

"Ha! ha!" laughed the other, "you'll soon have to give up drinking water—that's not strong enough. You'll never be able to do the work without beer."

"Don't you make any mistake," laughed Harry, "I know I shall be able to work better without than with it. Anyhow, I mean to do so." And it was with pleasure that he noted the look of astonishment that came into Shipworth's face at his boldness. Instead of the contempt he expected to see there he beheld surprise that so young a boy should exhibit so much moral courage.

There is no greater mistake than to suppose it is weak-minded to abstain. It requires fortitude of a higher order—far greater courage, indeed, than simply to yield to the dictates of fashion or of self-indulgence, and drink just because others do, or from fear of ridicule! And people know this full well, although they still tempt young men with the words, "It is weak-minded to abstain." I think they frequently do this to shelter themselves. However this may be, there are always those who ridicule right conduct as "weak-minded;" but true courage is that which is able to say "No" to any and all temptation.

Anyone seeing those two lads as they sat there at dinner, and marking the intelligence, vivacity, and purity which flashed from the eyes and face of the one, and the dulness, insipidity, and dissipated appearance of the other, could surely have had no two opinions as to the merits of the two lines of conduct—"moderation," leading to dissipation and excess; or abstinence, leading to purity, strength and health.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I am not going to talk myself this time, but to introduce to you one of the young poets of our army, Charlie Davis, of Baltimore, Md. It is pleasant to have a rhyming faculty, and Charlie will do better as he practices and studies into things. I am glad that he has so fine a subject, and believes as all our army must, in prayer as a means whereby we shall conquer. Boys and girls this is Charlie Davis and his story in verse:

"LET US PRAY," BY CHARLIE DAVIS.

Fear marked the seamen's features,
As they looked aloft aghast,
For high up in the rigging
Of the "Bouncing Bell's" main mast,

Was the captain's only darling,
A boy of twelve years old,
Who dared by a fellow playmate,
Had climbed to show he was bold.

For up to that height so dizzy,
'Twas easy enough to climb;
To return—ah, that was the trouble,
For his footing was only a line.

Then up from below came the captain,
And when the thing was told,
He cried with a voice that was full of fear,
"My boy, don't loose your hold,
But cling with your strength remaining
Until we know what to do.
But oh, my boy, must I lose you?" he said,
As he peered the rigging through.

Then amid the scene and excitement,
And amid the dash of the spray,
A meek and demure little maiden,
Said softly, "Let us pray."

Then down on his knees went the captain,
And poured out his soul in prayer,
To the Father who rules in heaven,
His precious boy to spare.

And then as if in answer,
A mighty billow came,
And pitched the schooner over,
Till her mast top neared the main.

And seeing his chance of deliverance,
The boy with a joyful cry,
Dropped softly down in the water,
From his place before so high.

For he knew that among the seamen,
There were sturdy men who could swim,
For no sooner'd they see the action.
Than one of them plunged in.

And quickly a boat was lowered,
And the boy was safe and sound,
And once more returned to his father,
And in his strong arms tightly bound.

And thanks to the little maiden,
Who the prayer to God did raise,
And who said when the captain lauded her,
"Thee ought to give God the praise."

Then here is a letter that you will all be glad to read:

ANOTHER LITTLE LETTER.

Fairview, Pa., September 30. 1884.

Dear Captain Deborah,—I thought you would like to hear from the Band of Hope in our town. I attended the school three months—then we closed for a short vacation. We commenced again the first of September. Glad to meet again and sing from our Ripples of Song, and study our catechism. If this letter gets a welcome, I will write again some time. Hope to hear from other Bands soon. Yours, truly, Leona French.

Leona is a true little soldier, "newly mustered in." Let us hear from more of the same sort.

Captain Deborah.

FARMER LEE'S CONVERSION.

LIBBIE J. SHERMAN.

"Haste to the window, Jonathan,
Where is my cane? Dear me!
Why, what an orful racket's there,
What kin the trouble be?"
"Them colts of Jimmy Green's—you guess
In tryin' to run away—
Have throwed their load all over
From the hill-top, did you say?"
"Well, here's your coat, and Jonathan,
You'd best go up the hill,
For mayhap suthin or nuther
Has happened to James of ill.
And here's your hat, too, Jonathan;
Your staff stands by the wall,
Tie this about your throat, and John,
Be keerful you don't fall."

"Dead? Why yes, Salina, he was E'en a'most, when I reached his side,
He only gin a gasp or two,
Turned part way over and died.
He might a lived if only
On the ground he'd a got that knock
But you see when he fell down
He came right on the solid rock.
He'd been a whippin them horses,
Them as seen it, said, a sight,
But then he'd never a done it
If he hadn't been so tite.
His wife is eenamost crazy,
I told her, arter talkin a spell,
She orter be reconciled tew
The will of the Lord. Ah well!
It didn't du no kind o' good,
She just sot there and cried;
I guess 'twould a made your heart ache,
If you had only hearn her side.
And I got to thinkin it over
As I was a cummin hum,
'Twant so much the will o' the Lord
As 'twas the cussed rum.

'Sumhow I couldn't but think
What if our John tew night
Was lyin as Jimmy Green is,
So still and cold and white.
I reckon I haint been a doin
Jist as I'd orter a dun;
What if the Lord, in His vengeance,
Should visit it on our son?
Wall, I've made up my mind
As how I've bin in the wrong,
And that I'll jine the other side,
Tho' life's best days are gone.
I won't sign another license,
By help of God on high.
I'll work for prohibition, yes,
And vote it till I die.

* A BIBLE LESSON FOR THE DAY OF PRAYER, OCT. 7, 1884.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, NATIONAL EVANGELISTIC SUPERINTENDENT.

THE GREAT BONDAGE AND THE GREAT DELIVERANCE.

The bondage. Exod. 1:13, 14; 2:23.

The children of Israel were enslaved by a tyrant, King Pharaoh. The people of the United States are enslaved by a worse tyrant, King Alcohol. The Israelites cried to the Lord for deliverance, as we have cried, and the Lord heard their cry as He has heard ours. Exod. 2:24, 25; 3: 7–9.

He promised them deliverance and sent a deliverer. Exod. 3:1–6; 10–18.

He has also promised deliverance to us, and has sent a deliverer. 1 Cor. 10:13; Heb. 2:18; Rom. 8:37; 1 John 3:8 with Heb. 2:14.

When the message first came to the Israelites. they could not believe it and we are like them. Exod. 6:1–9.

It was not enough however for them to cry to the Lord, nor for Him to hear their cry and promise them deliverance. He did not pick them up in chariots of fire and carry them out in a whirlwind of glory. They had to go out themselves, walking every step of the way, and so must we. Exod. 13:18–22; 14:15.

They went up "harnessed;" and we must also. Luke 12:35. Eph. 6:10–18. Heb. 12:1, 2.

Neither would they accept any compromises, Pharaoh would have been very willing for half measures. Exod. 10:7–11. 24–26.

And King Alcohol now is the same. "Let us have high license," he cries, "regulate the traffic in anyway you please, only let it go on." But our word must be as was the word of Moses, "There shall not a hoof be left behind." "Total prohibition, state and national" is the only thing for us. Eph. 5:11; 2 Cor. 6:14–18.

A compromising leader who would have been willing to act from expediency, and to consent to present half measures for fear of the future consequences of insisting on the full deliverance, could never have led the Israelites out. Nor can such a one lead us. We whose ears have been opened to hear the Divine voice saying, "Let my people go that they may serve me," can follow no man, nor woman nor party who is willing to compromise or have fellowship in any way however remote with the accursed evil.

A striking lesson is taught concerning this in Exod. 21:28–36. If a political party has been "wont to push with his horn in time past," or in other words if it has in any way affiliated itself with the liquor interest, and both our great political parties are openly acknowledged to have done this, and to be even now doing it, then our duty is plain. We dare not endorse them. 1 Tim. 5:22; 2 John 9 10, 11.

The result of this uncompromising fidelity to principle was the complete escape of all Israel from the house of bondage, and the utter destruction of the tyrant king who had enslaved them. For the Lord made Himself strong on behalf of those who were thus true to Him, and delivered them: Exod. 12: 40, 41; 13: 14; Exod. 14: 13–31; Joshua: 24: 17.

As He always will in all ages of the world, and under all circumstances. Deut. 11: 36; with Josh. 14: 6–14; Compare Num. 32: 11,12, 13.

A half hearted following results in wilderness wandering now, as truly as it did then. And the women of the W. C. T. U. must walk, as Caleb walked, in a whole hearted, uncompromising following of the light the Lord has given them, or they will find themselves wandering in a wilderness for many weary years.

If we turn to the story of Caleb in the Book of Numbers, we shall understand its application to our case more clearly. Num. 13: 27–33; 14: 1–10.

The giants in the way then, as now, weakened the faith of the Lord's people. They saw the strength of the enemy and their own weakness. They compared themselves with the giants who filled the land, and said, "We be not able." They left out God altogether.

But Caleb and Joshua were made of different stuff. They saw the strength of their enemies and their own weakness quite as plainly, but they saw God also, and they said, "We are well able." Therefore God said concerning them that they had "wholly followed" Him. But because of this wholly following, they shared the fate of all whose light and whose faithfulness is in advance of their fellows; for, "all the congregation bade stone them with stones."

And so our Lord says it shall be with us; and many have experienced it. Luke 6: 22, 23; Matt. 10: 24, 25.

"Those who adhere to the right at all costs; who cling to it though it lead them into the wilderness, find beyond a promised land, where all that they have sacrificed is restored to them." and

"They are slaves who dare not be In the right with two or three."

Another striking lesson is to be learned from a later event in the history of the Israelites: Judges 1: 21,27–35.

They had been commanded to "utterly drive out" the inhabitants of the land. Num. 33: 51–56; Josh. 23: 1–13.

The warning had been clear and explicit. "Else if ye do in any wise go back and cleave unto the remnants of those nations . . . . know for a certainty that the Lord your God will no more drive out any of these nations from before you; but they shall be snares and traps unto you and scourges in your side, and thorns in your eyes." The book of Judges shows how literally this was fulfilled. Judges 2: 1–3.

May the Lord grant that nothing akin to this shall be done by any W. C. T. U. women anywhere, either through expediency or through ignorance; but that our voices shall ring through the land with no uncertain sound, declaring that let others do as they will, "as for me and my house we will serve the Lord."

"Workmen of God! Oh lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battle field
Thou shalt know where to strike.

"Thrice blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field, when He Is most invisible.

"Blest too is he who can divine
Where real right doth lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye.

"Then learn to scorn the praise of men,
And learn to lose with God;
For Jesus won the world through shame
And beckons thee His road.

"For right is right, since God is God.
And right the day must win.
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

The Sunday School Lesson.

Oct. 19.] Fourth Quarter, No. 3. [1884.

Topic: SOLOMONS'S CHOICE.

LESSON TEXT: 1 Kings 3:5–15.

GOLDEN TEXT: Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom. Prov. 4, 7.

TIME. B. C. 1015.

PLACE. Gibeon, the resting place of the tabernacle for many years.

1. When Joshua assumed the leadership of the children of Israel, God assured him "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee," but the fulfillment of this promise rested upon certain conditions.

Joshua was to "observe to do according to all the law" which God had given him by the hand of Moses. He was not to "turn from it to the right hand or to the left," and then should his way be prosperous, then should he have good success. As proof of his strict adherence to God's directions we are told "and Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that over lived Joshua." David desired above all things else, that Solomon might have wisdom and understanding to "keep the law." From sad experience he could assure him "Then shalt thou prosper, if thou takest heed to fulfill the statutes and judgments which the Lord charged Moses with concerning Israel." That Solomon recognized the basis of the "great mercy" God had shown his father is evident from his response to God's invitation and from the earlier and successful years of his reign.

Now as then, it is only as men walk before God "in truth and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart" that they can consistently ask or receive His blessing. They cannot from motives of expediency turn aside for the time from the one right path and still be doing God's will and have God's presence. Just so sure as they fail and forsake God will He fail them and leave them to their own devisings.

2. The great secret of Solomon's success was his consciousness of his insufficiency, of himself, for the great responsibility entrusted to him and his simple confession of this weakness. "I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in." Years afterward Paul expressed many times the same conviction, and we know that it became to him, also, a source of strength for he says, "When I am weak, then am I strong." A like experience is common in the life of every child of God. The saddest wanderings are ever the result of a self-confidence that has its springs of life in human, not divine sources.

3. Solomon's choice was very unlike that which we would naturally expect so young a man and one so surrounded to make, but its wisdom, even from a wordly point of view, cannot be gainsayed. He asked only for an understanding, or a hearing heart that he might "discern between good and bad," but in receiving this blessing, even though God had not promised or given aught else, he received the embodiment and source of all good. As he himself said later in life, after he had proved its truthfulness, "The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow with it." What need we more than the hearing ear and the understanding heart? What greater blessing can we desire than the consciousness Isaiah expressed, "He wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned?"

4. God not only gave Solomon all that he asked, so that as He said, "There was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee," but gave him also that which he had not asked, riches and honor, far exceeding that of any other king of his day, and promised him long life if he walked in His ways. As the latter condition was not observed, the right to the promise was forfeited, but in his old age Solomon became as ingloriously distinguished for his folly as in youth he had been renowned for his wisdom. The story of Solomon's life is a striking illustration of the truth of Christ's words "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Just as clearly it evidences the fact that self-seeking ends in losing all that one seeks, and that the utterance "None of self and all of Thee," is as philosophical as it is spiritual.

5. Another truth that grows out of this lesson is to be found in the fact that the very riches and honor which came to Solomon with his prayer for "the understanding heart," became his curse when the understanding heart had departed from him. It may be that this throws some light on paths shadowed by poverty. The riches withheld might be but a weight to drag down rather than build up.

"Soon, like dust, to yeu and mo,
Will our earthly treasures be;
But the loving word and deed,
To another in his need,
They will unforgotten be!
They will live eternally—
Bread upon the waters cast,
Shall be gathered at the last."

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

MATTERS TO CONSIDER AT ST. LOUIS.

"When I was a child, I thought as a child—I spoke as a child." The W. C. T. U. is but a child in years, but among its many causes for gratitude is this, that, after all, and in spite of all, it has so few childish things to put away. "Nevertheless and notwithstanding," growth involves change; experience brings wisdom; "new occasions teach new duties," and the broadening field of reform, demands larger planning, even while it necessitates a closer division of labor.

The present political campaign has been in many senses an "eye opener." It has emphasized the necessity of a thorough understanding of national issues, and the relation of state and national government. Such education as it has furnished us, will aid as well as show the need of settled definitions in our own national organization.

The powers of national officers, of the national superintendents and the national executive committee have never been defined constitutionally as certainly and as rigorously as exigencies of the past few years have demanded. All this will call for careful consideration and honest criticism in the aim to perfect our constitution. As at present expressed, the executive committee of the society is set to control and provide for the general interests of the work. This may confer a power too wide and too loosely defined to be consistent with that division of responsibility by which the best results are attained. It throws a heavy burden, too, upon a body which sits but once a year.

The constitution also, while it recognizes superintendents of departments, neither assigns their work nor their limitations. In defining the duties of officers the by laws fail to instruct the more important of these in a measure adequate to their mission.

The question often arises should not the national society present to its constituency a complete form of organization through all the phases of local, county, district and state work? These forms, while sufficiently elastic to be adapted to various situations, to be also so fundamental as to furnish a uniform basis of government for all. This question might be answered at St. Louis to the great advantage of all concerned.

The relations of each of these organizations to the other and to the national society, in the matter of policy and adminiatration would in this way be settled also. These relations are but dimly understood at present, because their existence has as yet been scarcely recognized.

The varying attitude of auxiliary societies toward the political issues is an apt illustration of this need. There may be in the future questions more peculiarly our own which will involve a more serious difference in case no effort is made to settle and define the obligations of national policy upon state and local organizations. These are constitutional matters for consideration.

Besides these there are questions of enlargement and function, which will necessarily absorb much attention. There is considerable appeal for new departments and there is in all minds a little dread of what Mrs. Livermore aptly calls "too many eggs in one nest." From California comes the urgent plea for a department of grape culture, intended of course to supply information concerning the better and safer culture of the grape which makes glad the heart of man with its rich unfermented juices. From the same direction is the suggestion of a department having for its especial object of attack, the dreadful opium traffic, and which in the event of a world's W. C. T. U. might be a power not easily calculable in its effect upon missionary work in foreign lands. From ports of entry comes the demand for a a department of immigration, that the poor ignorant immigrant beckoned hither by friendly hands may not find the drink evil clutching at his throat and beggaring him as soon as he sets foot upon our shores.

Then too, there is the large and fruitful question of a national training school. A Chautauquan university for the W. C. T. U. where the way faring one, newly enlisted, or worn with the burden of not entirely apprehended methods, may be led through every department by skilled and experienced teachers, from juvenile work, kinder-garten and kitchen garden training, public speaking etc., on into the thorough furnishment to every good work.

The world's W. C. T. U. also ought to receive new impetus toward realization this year. The large correspondence in which our general officers have been engaged during the past year, will enable them to formulate suggestions at least which may prove the basis of intelligent foundation work toward this end.

The convention will doubtless pay heed to the hints given by the general officers in the supplement to THE UNION SIGNAL of March 27, viz., the need of a by law by which the assembly shall require a report from the committees on plan of work and resolutions not later than the third day of the annual session, thus giving one day for careful consideration of both, and so preventing, it is hoped, the misunderstandings which which so often ensue upon hasty action. A great deliberative body should deliberate. It never should be hurried by the emergencies of a last and late session, to enact laws or project enterprises which in cooler, calmer processes of thought might appear impracticable, and perhaps mischievous.

Above and beyond all, let us come together in the spirit of Him who hath called us, with open, judicial minds, and with hearts bent upon love for each other, and full of devotion to the interests of God's kingdom on the earth.

---

The following, from Mrs. Livermore, we cheerfully give as prominent space as our criticism of her position has occupied:

NOT THE SAME QUESTION.

In The Union Signal of September 25, appears the following editorial comment on my article:

In connection with Mrs. Livermore's letter on 4th page, we think it well to refer to the action of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. convention last fall, of which she was chairman by virtue of her office as president of the state society, and which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Prohibition party stands for right principles as no other party does; we therefore endorse its position and bid it God speed.

That resolution was passed a year ago at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. and referred entirely to state prohibition. A national Prohibitory ticket, if then in the field, was not known, nor discussed, nor was it alluded to at our annual meeting. I shall endorse the same resolution, referring to state prohibition, at our approaching annual meeting, if it is presented.

I do not yet see the wisdom of making prohibition a national issue, and in opposition to that I have written. We have not yet a sufficiently strong foundation to stand on in the public sentiment of the country, and need to mass our strength on state prohibition, until a majority of the states stand with Kansas, Iowa and Maine—and then will come national prohibition—and it will come to stay.

A large proportion of Prohibitionists agree with me and many this year will vote the state Prohibitory ticket who will at the same time cast their ballots for the national Republican candidate. The criticism of The Union Signal is therefore irrelevant, and does not assail my position. MARY A. LIVERMORE.

Melrose, Mass.

Mrs. Livermore is consistent in this, that believing in state prohibition, she will give her influence to the state Prohibition party. We are still compelled to believe her inconsistent in her position taken in regard to the National Prohibition party, as in her "Word to Women" she advises adherence to the Republican party because, for one reason, the Prohibition party relegated suffrage to state legislation, just what she approves in temperance work. National Prohibitionists, to be consistent, if consistency is worth while, and we still have respect for it, should advocate the settlement of both of these questions on a national basis, and state Prohibitionists should not, it seems to us, find fault with the Prohibition party because it referred the suffrage question to the states.

---

Our national superintendents are sending in frequent wails about these times, "No reports from state superintendents" being the burden of their cry, Mrs. M. C. Nobles, superintendent of the department of Relation of Intemperance to Capital and Labor, and Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, superintendent of work among the colored people of the north, uttering the loudest cries. Their proper addresses in our directory is well worth the immediate attention of all delinquents.

---

It is thought that some delegates to the national convention are making an effort to reach St. Louis on the Saturday before the convention in the belief that the sessions of the convention begin on Monday. The executive committee only are expected on Saturday the 18th as the convention does not open till Wednesday, the 23d of October.

NEW BOOKS.

The National Temperance Society, 58 Reade St., New York sends us two new library or Sunday school books —Miss Janet's Old House, and The Spinning Wheel of Tamworth. The first named is a story of life transformed in its afternoon, from a cynical, hard existence to a sunny, helpful, Christian career, which though short, embraced much usefulness and soul culture. It is by that pleasant story teller, Miss Noble, and will be attractive by its authorship.

The second on our list from the same house is written by Rev. W. A. Smith, and is a new version of the Prodigal Son, applied to modern times. A life regardless of God's claims, success without underlying principle, indulgence in folly and in sin comes to a sudden "arrest of thought" by way of financial reverses, and the soul arises, says "I will go to my Father," and is welcomed with a Father's forgiving love.

From D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, we have Mrs. Terhune's (Marion Harland) Cookery for Beginners, just in time for the beginners in hygienic cookery and living. The justly abused pie has no place in its pages, neither has the wine sauce or jelly, but in their place is abundant instruction in the "plain cooking" of every day life, the wholesome preparation of every day food. The making and baking of bread, the roasting and boiling meat, the not too spiced but toothsome preparation of "left over" material—all this is in good shape for the handling of beginners.

The Divine Law of Cure, by W. F. Evans, and published by H. H. Carter & Co., Boston, comes to us by way of the Sanitary Publishing Co. of Chicago. It is a work which demands more than the passing notice which our crowded columns will permit, and it is a philosophical contribution to the revival of the Idealism of Berkeley, Fichte and Hegel. It is, in fact, an application of this philosophy to the cure of the diseases of the human body. Its teaching is, that to think and to exist are one, and that every disease is the translation of morbid thought into bodily expression. If the morbid idea be removed, the disease is cured. While but a small number of persons may as yet be inclined to receive this theory as truth, the book treats of certain facts and the deductions therefrom in a sensible and reverent fashion. It is not subversive of accepted Christian doctrines, but rather widens their application. It wakens and stimulates thoughts of God in new directions. God as the life, not only of the spirit, but the indwelling life of the body which is its temple. What Dr. Chalmers calls "the great unhingement" of human nature is in this book shown to be a state from which Christ has redeemed us, body and spirit. He is a Savior not only from sin in the soul, but the outward manifestation of that sin, disease in the body.

These are statements that challenge attention and study on the part of Christians and a demonstration of their truth would place us in a fair way to "overcome the world."

A volume of sermons, by the Rev. Dr. A. E. Kittridge, of Chicago, is done up in paper covers and good print by C. H. Whitney, publishers, of this city. The selection of the sixteen discourses within these covers is doubtless a good one, and Dr. Kittridge's sermonizing is always direct, impressive and calculated to tone up to a high key, the moral and spiritual nature.

Evening Rest, from D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, is a rather tame and tedious monologue of a crude nature, as it develops in the direction of truth. There is always a charm in the story of struggle toward the light, but in this case the soul is too self conscious and seems to "pose" on its way light-ward in a way which is destructiove of the usual interest.

Of what good would a tower be, if one could not ookl backward from it, as well forward on the ever advancing column. Well, by looking backward I have found that our dear Mrs. Foster was made superintendent of legislative work in the national W. C. T. U. at Indianapolis in 1879. From her first report at Boston, 1880, I cull this "sweet morsel": "We find further, that the two great political parties of the country in their national manifestoes are silent on the relation of the state to the traffic though in some instances their utterances may be construed to disapprove the expediency of prohibition or even to insinuate against its rightfulness. These parties have, however, in a few instances in their own state platforms distinctly pronounced either for or against prohibition, or for the right of the whole people to settle the question by the popular vote in constitutional law. The National Prohibition party alone meets the question squarely on its merits and places at the head of its ticket the Hon. Neal Dow, himself the very embodiment of prohibition doctrine. We find everywhere an increased sensitiveness on the part of those in high political circles, a realization that the ghost of prohibition will not down, and we expect before many years to see "entire prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors" on the banners of the then dominant party of the country."

* * *

And here's another. In 1881 at Washington, D. C., the closing paragraph of her report is as follows:

"To what do the logic of events and philosophy of things lead us? Prohibitory legislation, national and state, can only be permanently secured through the agency of a political party making this its central idea. We hail with thankful hearts such political organizations in state and nation."

* * *

More sweets still. In report for 1882 at Louisville, Ky., Mrs. F. says: "I was granted two hearings before committees of congress at Washington—the first in support of national constitutional prohibition before the house committee on the alcoholic liquor traffic." Now why should she be granted this hearing, or why desire and seek it if national prohibition is the absurd and hopeless thing she predicts?

* * *

The U. S. (Union Signal) has "found a friend, O, such a friend." I shall not be violating state secrets if I tell. It is Mrs. Sarah Tudor, of Baltimore, who orders $25 worth of Union Signals sent to fifty leading men of Maryland for the next three months, saying as she does so, "You will know the value I attach to our national organ when you find that it gives me tenfold more pleasure to enclose this draft, than it would to invest the amount in a trip to the national convention, the place of all others I most desire to visit." She will be there too, I feel sure.

* * *

Mrs. Woodbridge is in the field in Ohio and that is "significant of much." Her appointments are Leipsic, Oct. 6; Ottawa, the 7th; the 8th, Xenia; 9th, Lebanon; 10th, Wilmington; 11th, Washington C. H.; 12th, Jackson; 13th, Athens; 14th, election day, at home, just as if she were going to vote, and she will, some day.

* * *

Two thousand people listened to Mary T. Lathrap's grand address in Dr. Fulton's church, Brooklyn, and as many in New York city. She is filling a few old engagements in Connecticut and then for the fray in "Michigan, my Michigan." On Duty.

News From the Field.

ALABAMA.

Selma.—Some of us feel that Alabama does not take the stand she ought in this great temperance work and our union feels jealous when reading accounts of others, that no word is spoken of her. Whose fault is it that no mention has been made of the work in Selma? Mine principally, I confess, and now propose to give a little account of how it was done. You see we're a little afraid of women lecturers, so we don't urge their coming amongst us; but by some chance or providence a woman did dare to come. I know not how it came about, whether she invited herself or was invited, but it was announced in the papers that on a certain Sunday Miss H. G. Moore was to speak on temperance at Gilman's hall. One of our earnest temperance men was interviewed as to where she was to be entertained. He didn't know exactly, everybody, who thought of it at all, thought she'd stay—somewhere. A prominent lawyer had heard her speak in Tuscaloosa and assured Maj. H. that she could lecture in an interesting manner, even to the edification of both ladies and gentlemen. The day arrived. I was invited with one or two friends to call at a boarding house to see Miss Moore, which we did. She is too well known to need a description. After a few moment's conversation we went to the hall. I watched her as we walked together and her face showed that every thought was a prayer and I knew she trusted in no human strength but walked seeing Him who is invisible. We followed her on to the platform feeling a little embarrassed at so prominent a position beside a woman temperance lecturer. Half an hour later I felt more embarassed, nay, mortified, that I had not invited her to my home; that I had not remembered what St. Paul says about entertaining strangers. Well, she convinced nearly every person in the house that she was on the right side in speaking for prohibition and also that a woman may speak in public without seeming to be out of her sphere. She invited the ladies to meet her the following day in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian church. She dined with me and on our way to church I said, "Miss Moore, have you faith to believe you will form a union here?" "Certainly, haven't you?" "No, indeed." Arriving at the church I was astonished to see the number already assembled. After devotional exercises and a talk by Miss Moore a rising vote was taken as to organizing. Many rose and it was decided to organize at once, which we did with thirty members, since increased to fifty-two. We have an enthusiastic president, Mrs. Judge Brooks, who realizes the importance of her position and strives to be equal to every emergency. We have been scattering temperance literature through the county.

A committee on jail work visited the jail for three months, teaching the prisoners in classes as in Sunday school. We have had one gospel temperance meeting. We have felt and still feel the need of an experienced worker among us. We are way behind the times. Questions arise in regard to the temperance work that we know not how to answer. We are hoping after the state convention to have Miss Moore and Mrs. Chapin with us. April 17, three months after our union was established, a Band of Hope was organized with forty-one members, since increased to seventy-one. So many of our officers and members being out of town for the summer we were obliged to suspend for a couple of months but we hope to come together the first of October with renewed zeal, to work especially among the young who are the hope of the future. Helen H. Rothrock, Cor. Sec.

VIRGINIA.

SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE W. C. T. U.

The second annual convention of the W. C. T. U. was held in the Lutheran church of Staunton on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 16 and 17. The deft hands of the ladies had tastefully and appropriately decorated the church for the occasion.

The word "welcome," in large gilt letters was suspended over the centre of the auditorium, and the pulpit was arched, in similar letters with the inscription, "For God and home and native land," and beneath the arch the meaning-full initials "W. C. T. U.," and the pulpit was tastefully decorated with blooming geraniums and other flowers—the whole presenting quite a beautiful scene.

The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning by the president, Mrs. Rebecca D. Wilson, of Lincoln, Loudon county, and was opened with devotional exercises led by Mrs. Wilson.

After the minutes of the last convention were read, the president, Mrs. Wilson, read her annual report, in which she said there should be a more general consecration of individual gifts in order to a more general distribution of the work of the union, and that "if this convention be the occasion of such unreserved giving of ourselves to the service of our Master, it will indeed be a blessed era in our history. We cannot afford to waste time at this crisis of our temperance work in worry or discouragements from divisions of opinion as to methods of work. When we consider our malignant foe, controlling as he does untold resources of wealth and political power, we can but feel that persistent effort, without fear and without compromise, is our only hope, entering every door of hope that is unfolding before us."

Miss Willard then addressed the convention, urging the importance of more scientific instruction in reference to the nature of alcohol and its effects.

Miss Anna Gordon then made some interesting remarks on the importance of teaching the children, and through them, influencing their parents. With this, the morning session closed.

At 2:30, p. m., the afternoon session was opened with devotional exercises after which the business meeting was commenced by reading the reports of superintendents of departments. Juvenile work, by Mrs. Pleasants, of Richmond; hygiene, by Mrs. Dr. Janney, of London county; press work, by Mrs. Rosalie J. Anderson, Richmond. Legislative, Mrs. R. D. Wilson gave a verbal report stating that some effort was made in the way of petitions to the legislature last winter. Colored worker, Miss C. Jenney, Londoun county.

At 4 p. m., the convention adjourned to hear the address of Miss Anna Gordon to the children. There was a good audience composed of the members of the "Band of Hope" with their numerous banners, and young and old persons who were interested in the occasion.

The address of Miss Gordon was unique and peculiarly adapted to make a lasting impression upon the minds of the children. Her illustration of the character of alcohol as contrasted with that of water, as well as the beautiful story she told illustrating the distress inflicted upon children by the intemperance of their parants, will linger long in the memories of the children who heard them.

At half past 7 o'clock the Lutheran church was filled. The services were opened by Rev. Allan Curr, of the Baptist church, who is an able and zealous advocate of temperance. The address of welcome was then delivered by Rev. Rumsey Smithson, of the M. E. Church South, whose labors and zeal in the cause of temperance are well known. He delivered an earnest address welcoming the union in the name of God, in the name of home, in the name of native land and in the name of liberty—dwelling at some length upon each.

The response was made in an appropriate manner by Miss Frances E. Willard.

After these formal ceremonies, an address was delivered by Mrs. Sallie Chapin, of Charleston, S. C., which was marked by ability of a high order and burning zeal and earnestness, and delivered in a style that was peculiarly striking and impressive. Her remarks were forcible, graphic, practical and pathetic. She has done and is still doing a good work in the southern states. She has done valuable service among the colored as well as the white people of the south. To a strong intellect and indomitable will, she unites the zeal of a crusader and the faith of a saint.

After devotional exercises, the election of officers took place, resulting in the re-election of the old officers, as follows: President, Mrs. Rebecca D. Wilson, Loudon county; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. M. Fultz, Staunton; treasurer, Mrs. M. M. Cochran, University of Virginia.

The following superintendents of departments were chosen: Miss Thamsen Janney, Lincoln, Va., hygiene and heredity; Mrs. Payne, Charlottesville, Va., scientific instruction; Mrs. A. P. Funkhouser, Harrisburg, Va., Sabbath school work; Mrs. W. H. Pleasants, Richmond, juvenile work; Mrs. R. Smithson, Staunton, Va., evangelistic and parlor work; Mrs. Allan Curr, temperance literature; Mrs. Rosalie J. Anderson, Richmond, influencing press; Mrs. Leroy A. Crenshaw, Richmond, relative statistics; Mrs. John B. Crenshaw, prison and jail; Mrs. M. B. Lee, Richmond, railroad employes; Mrs. James W. Newton, Staunton, Va., unfermented wines; Miss B. Taylor, young women's work; Mrs. R. D. Wilson, Lincoln, Va., legislative and petitions; Miss Cornelia Janney, Loudon county, Va., work among colored people.

At the afternoon session a plan for raising funds to defray the expenses of the association was reported and adopted. The plan provides for issuing stock at $5 per share, and the purchaser can pay the cost of the share in cash or in annual installments.

Miss Anna Gordon delivered an interesting address to the young ladies and showing how the young ladies could do good service to society by uniting with the W. C. T. U. Some names were obtained then and others the following day when Mrs. Chapin made a forcible address.

At 7:30 o'clock, the opera house was filled to hear the address that Miss Willard was announced to deliver on that occasion.

After devotional exercises, consisting of singing, and the reading of a psalm, and an earnest prayer by Rev. J. C. Dice, and the collection from the audience to defray the cost of the use of the opera house, Miss Willard delivered her address which for more than an hour held her audience spellbound.

Her address was delivered in a graceful manner, and it was such as would do honor to any tongue or pen. The matter was good and the manner exquisite. The thoughts were sound and were clothed in beautiful imagery. The illustrations she used were very striking, and they were classic and historic. Portions of this address contain word-pictures which will long "hang on memory's wall," and which are as beautiful as any ever drawn by the pencil of the greatest artist, or that has found a place in the gallery of the Vatican at Rome or the Louvre in Paris.

This will sound like exaggeration to all who did not have the pleasure of hearing this address; but those who heard it will acquit us of the charge of magnifying its merits.

NEBRASKA.

CALL TO CONVENTION.

The tenth annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Nebraska, will be held in Omaha, Nebraska, beginning Thursday evening, October 9th, 1884, and continuing through Sunday the 12th. The place of meeting will be the First M. E. church, Rev. Chas. Savidge, pastor. This convention will be composed of the executive committee, and three delegates from each local union throughout the state. A full representation is earnestly desired. District presidents and superintendents of each department of work are expected to then present their annual reports.

The usual reduced rates will be obtained over the several railroad lines.

Local secretaries will send names and number of delegates desiring entertainment to Mrs. C. S. Soule, president W. C. T. U., corner Hamilton and Pierre streets; Omaha and for railroad certificates to Mrs. Mary T. Folsom, Gibbon, Nebraska.

The delegates and visitors attending the convention, will be met, on arrival at Omaha, at the railroad depots, by those duly appointed and wearing the white badge, who will give needed directions and assign them to their homes.

Delegates are requested to place the white ribbon where it may easily be seen, to assist in their recognition.

Our national president, Miss Frances E. Willard, will be with us at the convention. That her presence may prove an inspiration and a rich blessing, is our ardent hope.

Yours, for "God and home and native land,"

Mrs. Jennie E. Ford, Pres. W. C. T. U., of Neb.
Mrs. Mary T. Folsom, Cor. Secretary.

VERMONT.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

I am asked to write a letter to The Union Signal, giving a report of Vermont W. C. T. U. state convention, held at Middlebury, the 17, 18 and 19 of this month and to "put the spirit into it." How I wish I could. I would like first to set the whole United States down in that lovely Champlain valley with the girdle of mountains whose pure breeze sent down from the clouds would, I am sure, dissipate every cobweb from the minds of our people upon this gigantic question of the age—temperance.

From all over our state, from busy homes and urgent cares, two hundred women gathered together and remained for three days, in harmony reasoning together. From the moment we set our feet upon the depot platform we felt the warm social atmosphere and hospitable character of the people of Middlebury. Upon all sides and from all classes the women wearing the white ribbon mark of distinction seemed welcome. The faculty of the college bestowed marked attention upon the convention, appearing almost in a body at the reception given by Mrs. J. A. Wright, Tuesday evening, sending an invitation for the ladies to visit the college, which in large numbers they did, and as a last compliment, President Hamlin graced the platform by his presence the last evening of convention and led the devotional service. It can be safely said that this was the most successful convention ever held by the W. C. T. U. in this state. Mrs. Greene never displayed her unusual executive ability and skill as a presiding officer as well as a comprehensive grasp of the work of the organization in nation and state, to a better advantage, or keener appreciation, than during these meetings. Her unanimous re-election must have been to her faithful heart, peculiarly sweet. Mrs. Perkins and Mrs. Button, who have filled the secretaries' places during the past year, were present during every session, and rendered unceasing service. Mrs. Perkins was re-elected, and the former custom of combining the corresponding and recording secretaryship was once more adopted by convention, thus avoiding the confusion resulting upon the two offices, where the officers lived in different sections of the state.

The work has grown so rapidly during past year, two secretaries have been kept busy, and Mrs. Perkins will need an efficient assistant which she will no doubt find in Mrs. Smith, of St. Johnsbury, in this way keeping the whole work directly under her own supervision. Mrs. Hannah Whithall Smith, was present nearly throughout the convention, and led all the devotional meetings save two. Mrs. Brooks, of Fairfield, conducted the consecration service the first morning, and as her clear voice rang through the hall in the wonderful words of the 91st Psalm, every soul felt the uplifting messages were for them, the prayers that followed breathed of the same spirit, and the keynote of the series of meetings was struck.

We cannot leave the address of welcome given by Mrs. J. C. Houghton, without special notice. It covered, in a few expressive words, the causes bringing women thus together in convention, dating back down the ages, but fed always by the demon of destruction assailing her home, and inspiration seemed almost to descend upon the speaker, as in eloquent language she summoned women to the work of the future. The welcome of the clergy to the convention, was made by Rev. S. L. B. Speare and Rev. Mr. Moore, in fitting and grateful terms.

The response by Mrs. L. E. Blodgett, of Derby Line, was a practical form of thanks for words of welcome; she spoke of her works as of an international character, since much of her effort is given over the line in Canada. Mrs. Middleton, president of the Province of Quebec, made the meetings memorable with her presence, and the grand womanhood she represented, by her silvered hair and devoted purpose, will live long in our memories. "We mourned with you when Lincoln fell, we watched and prayed those weeks while Garfield fought for his life; our flags went down half mast, when the struggle was over, and now, we stand with you in your war against this greatest foe of mankind." This she said as illustrative of the unity of purpose, moving all nations alike, to strike down their common foe. We had the peerless woman, Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, for one evening lecture, and upon the platform a part of two days, lending her influence and short speeches to make the meetings successful. I would like to give some adequate report of her address Thursday evening, but I should need illuminated pages, with lines of gold and words of silver, and still the individuality of the grand woman could not be portrayed, she must be seen and her words felt to be fully appreciated. Her lecture was a summing up of facts, drawn from the world's history, of the character of woman, and she spoke of the wonderful spiritual awakening, the quickening of conscience, this latter half of the nineteenth century had witnessed among women; reviewed the conditions of our country, and the power of the liquor interests, the imperfect laws regulating the traffic, and said, that now, as in the days when Phillips and Garrison urged the unequal strife against slavery the time of "apology" had come. Men declare the rum business to be respectable, and government sanctions it, and yet it was treated like the veriest criminal in the land, hedged in and restricted on all sides by law, even to the "screen law," which was an assumption in itself of unlawful intentions on the part of the saloon keeper. She conjured the women not to be discouraged because God was taking care of this battle. But I must leave this subject and speak of the reports of superintendents, which can only be mentioned together, the most of them were worthy of a lengthy notice. All of them showed an intelligent understanding of their different departments, and a marked advance in the working of them.

The report of the superintendent of scientific instruction, emphasized in every mind the importance of this line of work, and the need of women who would take up the work, and feel their responsibility. Since Vermont led off in the securing of the law requiring the teaching of physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcohol upon the human system, she should certainly be first in seeing that her children have the full benefit of the law. Mrs. Greene made some wise suggestions upon this department of work, and showed that the field was ready but laborers are few. I must pass over the other reports, only saying that in no case had the superintendent been idle, but diligent in season and out of season. "We come up to this harvest time," the secretary said, "nearly 50 unions stronger than last year, and our state has now 114 unions, most of them living, vital forces in their respective communities." That the impulse of this growth was sensibly felt, let the two hundred eager, responsive faces of the delegates testify, as from day to day they came together, to hear of the matter and manner of each other's labors, and give and take suggestions and plans adapted to their needs for work at home.

Once during the convention there seemed for a time to be a little "squall." It came up just before the close of the afternoon session Thursday, upon the introduction of a resolution by Mrs. M. L. Y. Hidden, endorsing the action of the National executive committee, and our beloved president, Frances E. Willard. Many ladies objected to the adoption of this resolution upon the ground that it was an endorsement of a political platform and suffrage plank, and a good many of the women were not willing to do either. The resolution upon being put to vote passed by a large majority, but came up next morning, pending the acceptance of the secretary's report, and the objectionable clause in reference to Prohibition party was stricken out, and a unanimous expression of satisfaction resulted. Thus Vermont stands loyal to the resolution of last National Convention and her National president, but has left outside of the work of the W. C. T. U. the matter of espousing any political platform. Individually we can act as we choose, and very many voices were raised for St. John and Daniel. Just after the warm discussion over the aforesaid resolution a band of Middlebury children marched through the center aisle of the hall to music upon piano, and bearing banners with "Home Protection," "The Gospel of St. John and the Prophecy of Daniel," and other appropriate inscriptions upon them. I am afraid I shall be called to order; if I spin this out much longer, but I must tell you we had Mrs. Talbot, from the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., with us during the entire meetings, and Miss Anna E. Park, of Bennington, a former state president, who said she had been laid by for "repairs," but from the wit and sparkle of her report on communion wine, and her clear-headed remarks upon various topics, should judge she was as good as new, and we wouldn't object to a remodelling ourselves, if a like result would follow. One minute more! One of Middlebury's generous citizens sent in as his greeting to the W. C. T. U. a beautiful floral device consisting of a base of flowers four feet in length arranged upon the front of platform, and over it a graceful arch from the center of which was suspended a star, and above it a crown, and on either side the letters W. C. T. U. This, like every "thing of beauty," was a joy as long as we stayed in the neat and tasty new town hall of Middlebury.

I am sure I should not meet the approval of my Vermont sisters if I should not mention the anniversary exercises Wednesday evening commemorative of the Vermont crusade days. Mrs. J. L. Perkins furnished the historical address, which was a clear and concise review of the earliest organization of women as temperance workers. She was followed with personal reminiscences of crusade days by several ladies from the towns where unions were first formed. Mrs. Greene's annual address, although cut short for lack of time, was full of lofty enthusiasm and practical thoughts and left a deep impression upon the minds of all. An interesting feature of this evening was the making of "thank offerings" by unions, which that evening and next day amounted to $225. Telegrams of greeting and sympathy were received from Virginia, California, New Hampshire, and sections of our own state. Hannah Whitall Smith did much toward keeping the spiritual tone of the meeting up to a high mark, and it will take months to efface even the tones of her voice from our hearts. The lessons she taught us of seeing with our "top eyes" and making "chariots" of our temptations and weaknesses to bear us out of our narrow, selfish surroundings will live while memory lasts. To us it is no wonder she has been set apart for a particular work. Her homely, natural ways of expression make her more forcible and effective.

If I have not quite worn out your patience dear Union Signal, may I write again sometime?

Mary J. Tucker.

[Yes. A thousand times.—Ed. Union Signal.]

CONVENTION NOTES.

—A pleasant reception was given us by Mrs. Judson A. Wright, a serenade by the band was tendered that evening. A collation was served at the church, each guest had not only a souvenir program, but also a hand-painted clothes-pin, which served as a napkin-holder at lunch.

—The secretaries reported the holding of nine county institutes, one all-day camp-meeting, religious meetings at another, hundreds of addresses by ladies outside of the state.

—There was a children's meeting preceded by a march of the children into the hall bearing banners upon which was inscribed "Gospel according to St. John," "Home Protection, Prophecy of Daniel," children singing "Tremble King Alcohol, we shall grow up."

—We were delighted to welcome guests from abroad. Mrs. Middleton, president of Province of Quebec, was present and expressed her pleasure at coming among us, gave us a short sketch of the work in her province, upon her introduction to the convention and receiving the Chautauqua salute.

—A little unfinished business was transacted en route home. Four shares of Union Signal stock sold on cars. We only wished our journey was longer and that every county had been represented. Washington county takes one, Orange county another, one individual donation of $5.00 towards another share was also given. In time I am sure Vermont will do her part in this, as she has endeavored to do in all places. No step backward is the spirit of our workers.

IOWA.

Cedar Rapids.—I wonder how it is that Iowa is put in the attitude of not endorsing the Detroit resolution, and therefore the Prohibition party? Is it because Mrs. Foster lives in Iowa? Or because Mrs. Aldrich happens to be our president this year? Have you interviewed the various unions to get at our sentiments as a state?

I can speak for the Cedar Rapids union. We are devoted National Prohibitionists and at our September 18th meeting a committee was appointed to frame a resolution expressing our feeling with regard to the nomination of Judge Rothrock by the Republican party of this state for the office of judge of the supreme court. Here is the resolution adopted at our last meeting:

Whereas, After long continued effort and many prayers and thorough consideration, the question of an amendment to the constitution of Iowa, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages was voted upon on June 27, 1882, and carried by a majority of 29,726 votes; and

Whereas, In a suit between a brewer and a saloon keeper, brought for the purpose of testing Iowa's ability to "hold fast that thou hast that no man take thy crown," it transpired that certain of our judges of supreme court decided that the error of a copying clerk was of more force to make law than the will of the people clearly expressed by their ballots; therefore

Resolved, 1st. That the judges aforesaid are unable to discriminate as to the meaning of a Republican form of government, a government, namely, "of the people, by the people and for the people," and consequently they endanger the public good, and their continuance in office would undermine a free and upright government.

2nd. We have eaten the fruits of this decision long enough and we condemn the action of that political party which, whilst offering good words and bringing out some real heroes for God and home and native land, nevertheless have re-nominated one of those very men who thrust constitutional prohibition to the dogs—even though it was the gift of God and the very bread of life to many of their fellowmen.

3rd. That we urge all good men in this state to rescue from the possibility of any more such decisions by placing in the office of supreme judge a man whom we can trust.

Judge, then, whether we endorse the party which "has God in its platform" or the co-partner and head manager and three-fourths owner of the death warrants of ten thousand citizens a year. L. A. Burkholter.

MICHIGAN.

ST. JOHN AND PRESTON.

To the Local W. C. T. Unions of Michigan,—A promise made months ago has held me away from my own state these golden weeks. I close my work in Connecticut October 5, and at once return. The state W. C. T. U. must help to make October a month which shall tell upon the election in November.

The officers of the national union have sent out an official statement in harmony with the resolution passed at Detroit, and given suggestions which will help the Prohibition party. Let me urge that these suggestions be carried out by the unions so far as their local conditions will admit. Send to the Lever or the New York Witness for pictures of St. John and Daniel, and put them up in your homes and union rooms. Secure the putting up of banners where it is possible. Open the way for the prohibition speakers, and if there is no one else to do it in your town, see that at least one good campaign speech is made before election.

If you find that the voter's pledge can be used with good effect, use it, and above all read the best things on this great national issue, so as to be ready to "give a reason for the hope that is in you."

The state ticket in Michigan is as grand in its way as the national.

It is the duty of every temperance woman to help secure the election of David Preston, and that victory is possible.

He brings to the party who nominated him an honored name and a blameless life. He represents the American home at its purest, American society at its best, and stands an ideal citizen in a Christian commonwealth.

He came from the people; the wealth he holds, as God's steward, has been won by honest toil of hand and brain. The wealth he has held through the years, has blessed the world wherever he could touch it. Churches, schools and missions have rejoiced in his beneficence. We have no criticism for others, but say, without flattery, our candidate is first and best. Sisters, we have worked and prayed for the opportunity of this hour ten long years, let no worker miss the chance to put in the master strokes now.

I urge these things with confidence, because one of the largest conventions we ever held, passed without a dissenting voice a resolution pledging our sympathy to the Prohibition party. Without fear, without malice let us then go with the truth we have upheld for a round decade.

The Prohibition party is right on public honesty and private virtue, right on tariff, Mormonism and the labor question and right on the protection of the home from the legalized dram shop.

Our duty seems plain, we cannot vote, but we can greatly influence the final discussion. St. John, for president; Preston, for governor. They are worthy our best support, let us give it.

Mary T. Lathrap, Pres. State W. C. T. U.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Brockton.—For many months the W. C. T. U. has had in mind some effort for the children, and about three months ago the plans took definite form. Four ladies were selected to have immediate charge of the work—and these have taken hold with much enthusiasm and have already achieved a remarkable success. Their plan has been to gather the children into Sunday afternoon meetings in the hall of the union, one meeting a month to be in charge of each of the four ladies, and then to give them instruction in temperance topics, illustrating the effects of alcohol on the physical system—the brain, stomach, blood, nervous force, etc.—by means of colored charts and object lessons, showing the fearful consequences of strong drink, the reputation, character, worldly prospects and social standing of those addicted to its use, and the terrible evils it brings on the community in the shape of pauperism, crime, the destruction of households and the ruin of souls.

In response to the invitation, given out at first through the Sunday schools large numbers of boys and girls between the ages of eight and twelve have come to the meetings, the boys being thus far quite in the majority. They have taken the name of "Young Temperance Workers," and their number has increased to such an extent that they have entirely outgrown the hall of the temperance union and now hold their meetings in Good Templars' hall, immediately above, the latter being opened to their use by the Free Baptist society, who have control of it on Sundays. Each member is given a neat nickel badge on which are the letters Y. T. W., and all seem proud to wear it and to be recognized as connected with the association. Of course the temperance pledge holds a prominent place in the organization, every boy or girl signing on becoming a member, and its requirements call for total abstinence not only from all intoxicating liquors, but from tobacco and profanity. The organization now numbers about 225, and a more earnest and enthusiastic assemblage than the Young Temperance Workers it would be hard to find. The meetings are open to any who are interested to attend, and we venture to say that nowhere in the city can be found a movement so full of promise in behalf of the rising generation or so encouraging in all its bearings in the great temperance reform as this.

Cornelia Eddy, Sec. W. C. T. U.

MINNESOTA.

Owatonna.—The following, from one of our local papers, will give you some idea of what the Owatonna W. C. T. U. did for temperance at our late state fair: "Through the courtesy of the managers of the fair association and the contributions of their many friends, the ladies of the W. C. T. U. and the Good Templars were enabled to establish and maintain temperance headquarters on the grounds during the whole of the week. They occupied two large tents just north of the exposition building which were furnished and decorated in a neat and homelike manner. Their object was not to make money, but to furnish a quiet resting place for the weary and a bountiful supply of pure ice water for the thirsty and to circulate temperance literature. A benevolent lady in Minneapolis sent 5,000 temperance tracts for the latter purpose, which with the papers secured by the ladies made a large supply. That the effort was appreciated by the friends of temperance was clearly demonstrated by the throngs of people that availed themselves of the privileges extended to them. A large banner was raised just north of the headquarters, showing the comparative cost of liquors with many of the useful articles used in the United States during one year. Not a little surprise was expressed at the fact that the liquor bill was so many thousands of dollars more than was expended for home and foreign missions, as well as for educational purposes and for breadstuffs."

When I tell you that opposite us just across the broad avenue leading to the exposition building, was a large saloon, you will understand what we had "to face." It is credibly reported that the saloon lost money by having their expenses larger than their receipts. The temperance people came out with money in the treasury by having a box placed at the entrance of their tent, for free will offerings, with the inscription, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," over it.

Our union, and through our influence some of the churches, petitioned not to have liquor sold on the fair grounds, but our requests were not regarded.

Mrs. Isaac W. Brush, Pres. W. C. T. U.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Permit me through your columns to tell all who wish to attend the national convention at St. Louis that I have secured the following rates on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific R. R. Tickets from Detroit to St. Louis and return, $19.50. Tickets from Chicago to St. Louis and return, $11. These tickets are good for thirty days and can be purchased any time after the 18th of October.

These rates have been obtained by me for Michigan delegates especially, as I have been ordered to do for several years by the state executive board, and are not intended to interfere (and do not) with anything done by the national committee. Any one, however, can avail themselves of these rates whether living in Michigan or not, visiting as well as voting delegates, by sending stamp for certificate signed by me.

Tickets will be for sale at 109 Clark street, Chicago, 167 Jefferson ave., and depot foot of 12th street, Detroit.

Mrs. Chas. Kinney,

Port Huron, Mich.

Big Rapids.—The outcome of a recent case in our circuit court moved the W. C. T. U. to issue a protest against the wrongs and indignities which women suffer at the hands of the power which manufactures and sells intoxicating drinks, and to pass the following resolutions:

Whereas, Mrs. Sarah Shultz, formerly of Mecosta, Mecosta county, having received injuries in her person and means of support, at the hands of certain saloon keepers, has bravely appealed to the courts for redress, and

Whereas, This is the first case of this kind in our county, therefore,

Resolved, That we express to Mrs. Sarah Shultz, our hearty appreciation of her courage in undertaking in behalf of justice, at so great odds, money, numbers and influence were all against her; and we commend her to the consideration and sympathy of every rightminded humane person.

Resolved, That we will help her in every honorable way to farther prosecute for damages believing that her cause is just; and we will do all in our power for any other woman of like unfortunate circumstances who may see fit to ask redress of the courts.

Resolved, That we commend the labor of counsel for Mrs. Shultz.

Resolved, That we deeply regret that men can be found who for a reward will seek to turn aside judgment from the needy and oppressed. We deeply regret that honorable gentlemen should counsel divorce in the case of such ruin wrought in a woman's home, instead of commending the provisions of a just and beneficent law which provides for her redress.

Whereas, The evidence given in the case was full and conclusive, and the judge's charge to the jury was most fair and impartial, therefore,

Resolved, That the verdict rendered by twelve men in this case, "No cause of action," is an alarming evidence of the power the liquor traffic holds over individuals, and the helplessness of women who may innocently become the wretched victims of this accursed business.

Resolved, That we abhor the whole circle of this legalized iniquity, and we pledge anew our earnest prayers, and faithful labors while we live, for its complete overthrow and extermination.

By Order of W. C. T. U.

MISSOURI.

CONVENTION NOTICE.

The second semi-annual convention of the first congressional district of Missouri, will be held in Kirksville, Adair county, Mo., Tuesday and Wednesday, October 28, and 29, 1884. Delegates from other districts, and from all temperance societies and Christian churches, are cordially invited to attend. Mrs. Hunt, of the N. W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Hoffman, state president, will make the evening addresses.

Mrs. Louisa O. Brock,
District President.

Third District.—We in Missouri are arousing ourselves for the state fight. We want if possible to elect the Christian statesman, John A. Brooks, instead of liquor seller Ford or liquor dealer and infidel Marmaduke. God pity poor old Missouri, in case either are elected.

Democratic rally here last week of thousands, whisky flowed freely. Republican rally is coming next week, a great soldiers re-union this week. We have a large G. A. R. and Relief corps. Mostly Republican.

Our W. C. T. U. is ably represented by our president Clara Hoffman. She "did herself proud" answering Mrs. J. Ellen Foster's self-contradictions.

The National American has dropped the plumed knight who showed so much white feather, and has gone into the fight for Brooks alone.

Please announce our convention of third congressional district to be held in Plattsburgh, November 12 and 13. We want to make it a grand rally, for God and home and native land.

Z E. Watkins.

Bethany.—The W. C. T. U. at this place numbers over sixty members, and is in a very prosperous condition, will give a musical and literary entertainment during our fair. Have taken steps to secure Mr. Holt or Mr. Woodford to lecture for us in the near future. A great many good substantial men will vote the Prohibition ticket in Old Harrison.

Minnie D. Storm,
Corresponding Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Alleghany City.—In this city, the home of the wide-awake president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. we are doing aggressive work, thinning the ranks of the followers of King Alcohol. Thinking perhaps we can encourage some weak organization, we send a few items of an experience.

Some time ago it was resolved at one of our church Sunday school institutes to recommend every Sunday school to organize for temperance work. About the same time Mrs. Fleming, chairman of this department of Sunday school work in our local W. C. T. U. sent out requests to the Sunday schools of all denominations to form Bands of Hope in their respective schools. The Sandusky street Baptist church of this city in compliance with this request organized at once. We have had three open meetings, have a large number of signers to the pledge, and the interest taken is very encouraging. About 35 churches in this association, (Baptist), have pledged themselves to organize for this good cause.

Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, of Essex, Conn., has visited us and given addresses in two of our churches. Mrs. Washington is an excellent speaker, and is calculated to advance the temperance cause wherever she may labor.

Mrs. L. H. Eaton.

ILLINOIS.

FOURTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the 14th district W. C. T. U. held in Bloomington, Sept. 4-5, was an occasion of great interest and profit. Representatives from thirteen of the twenty-four unions in the district were in attendance, and a good number of citizens were observed at most of the sessions.

Reports from all quarters showed that much effort had been expended upon forming young ladies' unions, maintaining Bands of Hope, distributing temperance literature and promoting scientific temperance instruction.

The address of welcome was delivered by Miss Emily Holder, president of the Bloomington young ladies' union and was earnest, eloquent, and full of enthusiastic zeal in the work. The report of the Chenoa Band of Hope was made by a little miss of ten years, Miss Annie Ketcham, whose story of work accomplished gained added charm from the dignified grace of the little woman who presented it.

The children's mass meeting was a delightful gathering. The Lexington and Normal Bands of Hope joined the Bloomington Band, and were escorted in a body to the audience room of the church. Their banners bore appropriate mottoes, and the eager, happy faces were radiant with joy and hope. The boys of the Lexington Band carried a banner with the inscription "We shall vote by and by," and the girls followed with the responsive inscription, "So shall we."

The papers and addresses presented gave evidence of experience in lines of work discussed and were eagerly heard by all present.

"The History of the Fourteenth District," by Mrs. G. H. Read, recalled many absent workers. The good seed of their sowing is bringing forth abundant fruit. Washingtonian Hall has already become historic ground having been the scene of the state and district organizations as well as the rallying point of all local temperance organizations. The present condition of the district shows great advance in temperance sentiment and more work accomplished than seemed possible at the organization five years ago.

Great devotion to the efficient district president, whose work has been constant and zeal untiring, was expressed not only in words but in re-election by unanimous vote with salary of $600 and vacation granted for recruiting wasted energies. Officer selected for the coming year were, president, Mrs. Fannie C. Hathaway, Normal; recording and corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. F. English, Bloomington; treasurer, Mrs. P. J. Humphrey, Normal; financial secretary, Mrs. Ella M. Jones, Lexington.

Superintendents of different lines of work were also selected with presidents of some of the counties comprising the district.

The zeal and earnestness of those present to measure up to the financial requirements placed upon them promises much for the success of the plan of work for the coming year. While much has been accomplished, much remains to be done, and a vigorous attack will be made in the coming year all along the line

The presence of The Union Signal editor, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, the state president, Miss Mary Allen West, and corresponding secretary, Miss Helen Hood, gave inspiration to all, as from large experience and rich endowments they discussed different phases of the great question, addressing mass meetings, conducting discussions and entering heartily into all the work of the convention. Their helpful words were full of instruction and cheer. The convention adjourned on the evening of Sept. 5, grateful for common sympathy in a grand cause, with the bond of fellowship strengthened

A. E. Sanford, Sec. pro tem.

FIFTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of the 15th congressional district convened in the Opera hall, Tuscola, Sept. 16. The workers felt gratified and strengthened by the presence of the state president. Miss M. A. West, who opened the convention with a Bible reading.

Elder J. J. Lockhart, in behalf of the citizens of Tuscola, welcomed the workers convened in words of good cheer and encouragement.

Mrs. Wm. Chamberlin, of Hoopeston, voiced the response of the convention. The topics for the discussions of the first session were: "How to increase membership, and make our our union more interesting;" "Best method of interesting children in Band of Hope and temperance work;" "Temperance Literature, and the necessity of thorough educational work, moral and physical." They were ably presented by Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Chamberlain, Miss West and Mrs. Gillogly.

Mrs. Nelly Bayley, assisted by the children, conducted the devotional services of the evening, and then gave a highly entertaining and instructive chalk talk.

Miss West presented the topic: "Scientific Temperance Instruction," making many strong points. Wednesday evening was largely devoted to hearing reports from the local unions. Miss West spoke on "Finance," and, in the absence of Mrs. Best, on "Young Woman's Work;" of the different ways of getting them interested in temperance work and organizing into unions.

At the afternoon session Mrs. M. B. Willard gave her views on gospel temperance work, showing that all of the work of the W. C. T. U. is or should be gospel temperance work.

The secretary read a report from Mrs. Bacon, of the prison work done in Danville, Ill., which is very encouraging.

An excellent paper on "Why should I vote for Prohibition?" was presented by Mrs. Conkling, of Champaign.

Our district president followed with a "Declaration of Principles," whereby the faith of our workers was very much strengthened.

Mrs. Willard gave the address of Wednesday evening to an appreciative audience. Subject: "Elective Franchise for Women."

Thursday morning Mrs. Willard occupied the chair and conducted the devotional exercises, beautifully and explicitly explaining "the leading of the army by Deborah, and Deborah's song." Judges 4: 5.

Mr. C. M. Wilder being absent, Mrs. Willard opened the discussion: "Is beer, cider, or domestic wine, harmless?" This was participated in by several of the ladies. Conclusion: While they appear to be harmless, it is safest to let them absolutely alone.

The plan of work of last year, in its main features, was adopted, and special pominence given to young ladies' and juvenile work, scientific temperance and woman's ballot.

The committee on nominations recommended for president, Mrs. F. C. Jenkins, of Georgetown; corresponding secretary, Miss Stella Jenkins, Georgetown; financial secretary, Mrs. E. J. Van Doren, of Tuscola; treasurer, Mrs. Anna Hartwell, of Hoopeston.

The report was accepted, and officers duly elected.

Mrs. Jenkins was elected as delegate to the national convention, with Mrs. Conkling as alternate.

Eighteen unions were represented in the convention. Reports were heard from twenty-two, showing an increase of work and interest throughout the district. Seven new unions have been organized during the past year. The majority of the unions are in good condition and doing good work. The distribution of temperance literature, Band of Hope work, gospel temperance work, and young woman's work, have been given special attention. Hoopeston reports the introduction of temperance text books in the public school.

The flower mission is proving to be a very successful means of reaching the neglected classes, being confined principally to jail work. House to house visitation is also accomplishing good work.

The convention closed with prayer by Mrs. Willard, and as the workers parted for another year's work for the Master, they felt a new inspiration, and a feeling that their work had not been in vain during the past.

About thirty-eight delegates and visiting members were in attendance.

—Unions have been organized at Greyville and Eldorado, by Mrs. Villars, and at Hinsdale by Mrs. Hagans.

—Miss L. E. F. Kimball will give two weeks to our state. She will be in Chicago October 30. For terms and dates send to 161 LaSalle street.

—The following speakers are announced as ready to fill engagements the coming fall and winter: Geo. Woodford, Thomas Murphy, Mrs. Jane Zimmerman, Rev. W. P. Stowe, (except Sundays), Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Capt. J. F. Linscott, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Engagements made by Helen L. Hood, 161 LaSalle street.

—Mr. Thomas Murphy, an earnest champion of the W. C. T. U., is ready to fill engagements.

—Capt. J. F. Linscott, who has done good work in our state, writes that he has prepared several new lectures and is ready for engagements.

—Rev. W. P. Stowe has prepared a lecture bearing upon temperance instruction in public schools, and will also talk upon gospel temperance.

—Miss Hood desires to say in response to numerous and urgent inquiries that the BAND OF HOPE MANUAL, published by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association is now ready, that she "can recommend it unhesitatingly as just what Band of Hope workers have so long and earnestly desired. Do not fail to order a supply at once." See publisher's department for full description and price.

—Two invaluable campaign documents just from the press, are "The National Prohibition Party, or St. John vs. the Demi-John," and "The Governmental Liquor Traffic." Unions will find both of great service, and it is most desirable that they be circulated freely. Price of the former; 50c per hundred; of the latter, 40c per hundred. Address THE UNION SIGNAL.

—All delegates to the St. Louis convention who go via Chicago will please send name and address to THE UNION SIGNAL office at once, as arrangements are being made for special cars.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The annual meeting of the Southern California Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in Los Angeles, October 7-8. The work has grown greatly during this first year of existence, and the executive committee expects to start upon the coming year with all the most important departments filled, and their work fully presented in the convention for the adoption of local unions. Our absent president, who so stimulates us by her stirring letters from the battle field in Maine, will represent us in the national convention, after which may the Lord return her safely to another year of heaven blest work

H. N. HARRIS, Vice President.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Once a year the locomotive engineers of the country meet together in convention to discuss matters relative to their calling. This year they meet in San Francisco, and, being a body of men who, when on a vacation wish to make the most of it, in the way of recreation and comfort, they naturally choose the route to their meeting place, which guarantees them greatest immunity from danger and the most facilities for sight seeing and enjoyment en voyage.

They have an open credit with the railroads, for all lines transport them free of charge, hence their choice is a voluntary act upon their part. This year, the great bulk of the fraternity choose the great Rock Island route, and were carried toward the Occident in half a dozen of the magnificent new Pullman cars, for which this great route is noted. They chose wisely and well, since they passed over, and, with the smoothest of track, through a country of surprising fertility and loveliness, and while journeying ate the best viands the market afforded, and at night slept in the most luxurious sleeping cars to be found in the United States.

A true engineer is observant and quick to discern danger. There is nothing heedless or reckless in the composition of the Knights of the Foot-board, hence their choice of the Rock Island route was a compliment and a testimonial from men best qualified to judge, that they believed that the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway combines in its road-bed, equipment and management, all the qualities that makes a railway worthy the patronage of the public.

Now ready, Band of Hope Manual and TextBook. It contains twenty-four lessons, twelve for pupils of the grammar school grade, and twelve primary lessons. Besides these it contains opening exercises and notes and anecdotes illustrative of the lessons, in addition to full instructions for organizing Bands of Hope. The lessons have been submitted to and have passed the inspection of a committee of eminent physicians, which ensures their scientific accuracy.

The two grades of lessons have been prepared by Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. Mrs. Crafts is a primary teacher of national reputation, and these lessons are in her best style.

They will be issued quarterly, price 5c. per number. All Bands of Hope should be supplied with them.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD has written an article entitled "The National Prohibition Party, or St. John vs. the Demi-john," which ought to be widely circulated by all friends of the third party movement. In leaflet form price 50c. per hundred, post paid. Address this office.

THE National W. C. T. U. seal can be printed on stationery, programs, envelopes, etc., at this office. State reports, blanks, leaflets, and all kinds of printing carefully attended to. Estimates furnished.

THE Governmental Liquor Traffic, a most able article showing the partnership of the government in the liquor business, also extracts from the Internal Revenue Reports giving the exact amount of revenue derived from distilled and fermented liquors for each year from 1863 to 1883, the Raster resolution,—the propositions of Messrs. Blaine and Logan, with other facts of interest. Specially adapted for general circulation. Price 40c. per hundred, postpaid.

NEW PLEDGE CARD.—We have issued a new and very handsome pledge card, printed in two colors, price 60c. per hundred postpaid. Just the thing for W. C. T. U. workers to carry. In single and triple form. We also keep in stock Murphy pledge cards and ribbons, Band of Hope Badges, sample 10c. National Drink Chart, price 10c. Leaflets, etc., for distribution. Handsome lithographs of the Prohibition candidates, price 25c. each, the two for 40c. postpaid.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land," should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

An Efficient Remedy.
In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that
